473. A man approached a railway crossing at an acute angle in a buggy drawn at an easy trot by a horse and a mule. A regular fast train, coming at the same time, and in full sight for a considerable distance if he had turned his head, whistled sharply close by the crossing and frightened his team, so that it became unruly and ran upon the track, and the man was killed. The man, who knew the neighborhood, was apparently ill, and drove absent-mindedly, without noticing the train until he was close to the crossing, though several witnesses saw the danger he was running into. Held, that he was guilty of contributory negligence: Rhoades v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 58 M. 264.

474. A man was killed while trying to drive across a railway track. Held, that in the absence of any knowledge as to what was in his mind, he could not be conclusively found negligent unless no sensible explanation of his conduct was reasonably possible. He had a right to suppose that the railroad company would not violate any legal duty and would not fail to take reasonable measures to prevent mischief. He could not be blamed for doing as seemed best under the circumstances, and it would not necessarily be reckless to go forward rapidly: Staal v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 57 M. 239.

475. A team collided with a railway train at a road-crossing and the driver was killed. The railroad and the highway were both below the general surface of the ground, and an approaching train could only be seen occasionally by one driving towards the crossing. The driver was familiar with the crossing; but except that he checked his team for a moment, some four rods from the crossing, he did not appear to have observed any precaution. The engine whistle was duly sounded when the crossing was approached. Held, that the driver of the team was chargeable with negligence directly contributing to the collision: Haas v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 47 M. 401.

476. Plaintiff's intestate was killed while attempting to cross a railroad track in a city street on a dark, rainy night, at a point where the view was unobstructed, and where the head-light of the locomotive which struck him lighted up the track at least a block. Held, that he must have been guilty of contributory negligence, and that there could be no recovery, though the train was run at a speed far beyond that allowed by city ordinances, and though the evidence failed to disclose whether any bell was rung or not: Kwiatkowski v. G. T. R. Co. of Canada, 70 M. 549.

477. An old man, who was somewhat deaf, while driving a span of colts towards a railway track down a narrow road from which the track was concealed on one side by a high embankment, stopped to listen, but hearing nothing drove on, and when close by the track a train appeared within a few rods. Fearing that he could not control his horses where they were, he whipped them up, and tried to cross the track, and the rear of the buggy was struck by the locomotive. Held that, in an action for the resulting injury, the question whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence was for the jury: Chicago & N. E. R. Co. v. Miller, 46 M. 532.

478. The wife of a man who was employed by a railroad company, in taking her husband his dinner, had occasion to cross half a dozen busy tracks that lay side by side. In stepping out from behind some cars that stood on one of the tracks, she was struck and injured by an engine on the next track that was backing down in front of her and across her path. Held that, whether or not the railway company was negligent in running the engine at a prohibited rate of speed or in failing to ring its bell, the woman was not exercising ordinary care and could not recover for the injury to which she had contributed by her own negligence: Pzolla v. M. C. R. Co., 54 M. 278.

479. Where a railroad car was negligently left in a highway crossing close to the usual travelled part of the way, the question whether plaintiff used due care in attempting to pass with a wagon and horses, one of which shied at the car just before reaching the track, was held to be one of fact for the jury: Peterson v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 64 M. 621.

480. Decedent was seen about to cross a railway track in a village, at a time when a train was approaching from one direction, and one backing towards her from the other direction. She was soon after found dead outside the street limits on railroad grounds, having been run over by the backing train. Held, that her being found where she was, outside the street limits, did not of itself make out against her a case of contributory negligence: Hassenyer v. M. C. R. Co., 48 M. 205.

481. Recovery cannot be had for the negligence of a railway company, when the deceased, who was familiar with the locality and knew that trains passed frequently and that they ran irregularly, stood on the track at nightfall, stupefied and confused with liquor, before the approaching headlight of a slowly-moving locomotive: Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Handford, 39 M. 537.

482. A laborer employed by a contractor who had been engaged by a railroad company to lay water-pipes along its right of way, in going home, after his day's work was done, made his way along the tracks to a point where trains were constantly passing in both directions, and although there was enough room between the tracks he was run over by one train while apparently trying to avoid another. He was not employed upon the road, and might have gone home without going along the track; but his employment enabled him to know the locality, the risk and the need of watchfulness to avoid injury. Held, that no action would lie for his death: Bresnahan v. M. C. R. Co., 49 M. 410.

483. A workman while on his way home in the evening stood talking with a companion by a railway track where three roads ran side by side, and where, by daylight, the track could be seen for two miles. He had drunk two glasses of beer. He was forty years old and familiar with the locality, and he also knew that a train was due. A well-illuminated passenger train which had broken its headlight, and had substituted an ordinary lantern therefor, approached, and was seen by several persons in the neighborhood. The workman, however, did not see it, but heard a rumbling which he supposed came from some vanishing train on one of the other tracks. He stepped on the track nearest him, with his companion, and both were struck, the latter being killed. Held, that he did not exercise due care: Mahlen v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 49 M. 585.

484. One who, while walking along a railroad's right of way, comes upon a highway crossing, is not travelling along the highway or using it in the ordinary manner; he was a trespasser when he entered upon the right of way, and continued such, and the company owed him no duty unless aware of his presence, and able, by the exercise of care, to avoid injuring him: Kelley v. M. C. R. Co., 65 M. 189.

485. A person walking along a railroad where he had no right to be, and where there were five parallel tracks on which trains passed both ways every few minutes, stepped from one track, to avoid a passing train, upon another track on which an engine was approaching from behind him, and, going on without looking about him, was run over and killed. Held, that he was guilty of such contributory negligence as to preclude any recovery: M. C. R. Co. v. Campau, 35 M. 468.

486. A man and his wife, riding in a cutter, were approaching a railway track by a road which crossed the track at an acute angle. A freight train on the track lay, apparently, across the road; but, after waiting ten minutes for it to move, the travellers came nearer and found that a space of sixteen feet was left open. The cars, however, on both sides projected somewhat over the travelled part of the road, and, in avoiding them, the man who was driving had to turn his horse so as to cross the track at a right angle, but the horse sheered and the cutter left the planking and was upset and the woman was injured. Held, that it could not be said, as a matter of law, that she was guilty of contributory negligence: Young v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 56 M. 430.

487. The contributory negligence of a person injured in trying to drive across a railway track is not conclusively shown by the fact that others had just crossed it safely; the fact may tend to prove it, but the question is for the jury: Ibid.

488. A man driving a democrat wagon along a city street tried to cross a railway track at a point where his view of the track before crossing was shut off by standing cars and by sheds, and he was killed by a train that was two hours behind time and came at high speed from a direction opposite to that in which he was looking. Several persons testified that they heard no warning signal. Held, that the question of liability for his death should go to a jury: Guggenheim v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 57 M. 488.

489. Whether one who, while driving across a railway track, had watched the engine go by, and was hurt by its backing down on him without warning while he was watching out for further dangers in the rear, was guilty of contributory negligence, held a question of fact for the jury: Palmer v. Detroit, L. & L. M. R. Co., 56 M. 1.

490. Where the evidence is conflicting as to the conduct of a child eleven years old in passing over a dangerous railroad crossing, the question whether she used such care as a child of that age should have used under the circumstances is for the jury: Cooper v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 66 M. 261.

491. An action for a railway injury may be taken from the jury if the undisputed facts clearly show plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence: Mynning v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 64 M. 93.

492. An error in taking a case of railway injury from the jury upon a particular question may be rendered nugatory by such evidence of contributory negligence as would render that course necessary: Rhoades v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 58 M. 283.

493. In the case of a child suing a railroad company for a negligent injury, it is for the jury to judge of plaintiff's capacity and ability, and the manner in which he used the same at the time of the injury, and also whether he was of sufficient age and judgment to have used them otherwise, so as to have avoided the accident: Baker v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 68 M. 90.

494. In an action against a railroad company for injuries received in an accident the burden of proof is on plaintiff to show that the company is entirely responsible for the grievance complained of, and that his own negligence did not contribute to the injury; the plaintiff must fully establish whose fault it was, and explain the whole transaction: M. C. R. Co. v. Coleman, 28 M. 440.

And further as to burden of proof, see NEGLIGENCE, §§ 99, 220, 222.

495. Where the jury's special findings, in an action for a negligent injury, negative not only the case made by the declaration, but also any agency of defendant's in plaintiff's going upon the place of danger at any time, judgment should be entered for defendant upon such findings: Thorsen v. Babcock, 68 M. 523.

VII. LIABILITY FOR FIRES.

496. The care which a railway company must exercise in the running of trains so as not to injure property situated near its track is not contingent upon such circumstances as the force and direction of the wind, the dryness of the weather, or the combustible character of property likely to be affected. The company not being in fault as to the quality or character of their equipments, the special risks incident to proximity to railroad trains must be borne by those who establish themselves in such localities: M. C. R. Co. v. Anderson, 20 M. 244.

497. A railroad company must keep its right of way reasonably clear of dangerous combustible matter, and, if a fire occurs in consequence of a negligent failure to do so, it is liable for damage ensuing therefrom to the property of another: Jones v. M. C. R. Co., 59 M. 437.

498. In an action against a railroad company for injury from the negligent spreading of fire, if it is made to appear by plaintiff's testimony that the fire originated from either of the causes mentioned in H. S. § 8378, the burden is cast upon defendant to show itself free from negligence: Ibid.

499. A railroad's negligent failure to remove or destroy dangerous combustible matter in its right of way is a question for the jury: Ibid.

500. Persons who have authorized the use of a locomotive on their premises, and have known of its use and acquiesced in it, have no right of action for damage done to their property by fire set by sparks from such locomotive: Spear v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co., 49 M. 246.

501. The owners of a warehouse owned a railroad track running on their own premises near it, and employed a railroad company to send an engine to draw cars over it for their accommodation. The engine threw off sparks badly, and this they observed and complained of, but nevertheless continued to make use of it for a long time. At last the warehouse was set on fire and burned by sparks emitted by it. Held, that the owner had no redress against the railroad company for the burning: Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Spear, 44 M. 169.

502. And it is immaterial that the railroad company, on repeated applications made that it should repair the engine, had promised to do so "sometime;" the use containing thereafter with plaintiffs' knowledge, and on their application: Ibid.

VIII. LIABILITY FOR ACTS AND CONTRACTS OF OFFICERS AND AGENTS.

503. Neither the assistant road-master of a railroad company nor the master of transportation can be presumed to have authority to represent the company in claiming disputed titles: Drew v. Comstock, 57 M. 176.

504. Where the treasurer of a railroad company was one of the committee that had executed the contract on its behalf for grading its proposed road, and the only one of them who had given any personal attention to the work or directions to the contractors, and he had stated that the company were unable to collect money fast enough to pay according to the contract, and had asked that the force of men employed be decreased, thereby causing delay in fulfilling the contract, it was held that the contractors would have a right to assume, in the absence of any notice to the contrary, that he was authorized to give such directions, and were justified in acting accordingly: Grand Rapids & B. C. R. Co. v. Van Deusen, 29 M. 481.

505. No presumption can arise of any power in a chief engineer, even where a railroad company is acting in the completion of its own road, to make a contract for the erection of depot buildings. The definite location of depots belongs to the board of directors, unless clearly delegated elsewhere; and a chief engineer cannot be made the possessor, by delegation, of the double power of locating depots and contracting for building them, if he can be at all, without the authority of the board: Bond v. Pontiac, O. & P. A. R. Co., 62 M. 648.

506. A railroad company was sued on an alleged oral contract with its chief engineer, whereby plaintiff was to have the building of certain depots. The uncontradicted evidence showed that the whole of the road and its equipments was under contract to be built by an investment company, that the chief engineer had no authority to act in the matter, and that there was no ratification of his action by defendant. Held, that the case should be taken from the jury: Ibid.

507. A., the purchasing agent of a railroad company, sent an order for timber to B., who, being unable to fill it, called upon C. and told him the company wanted the timber immediately, and "if B. could not furnish it to get some one else to do so." C. delivered the timber to a station agent who had no authority to purchase or contract for it, and he billed it to headquarters in C.'s name as consignor. An order was given to B., a voucher was made out running to him and the money was paid to him, but he failed to pay C. Held, that C. could not recover against the company: Butler v. M. C. R. Co., 60 M. 83.

508. A railroad yard-master whose business it is to have charge of the yard and make up trains there, and who has a right to employ and discharge his help in these matters, and employ brakemen for himself and the road trains, and whose authority consists in employing men in his department, has no authority, by virtue of his office alone, to bind the railroad company which employs him to an agreement made by him to pay a surgeon for attending one of the men under him in the service of the company, who has been run over and injured by the company's cars: Marquette & O. R. Co. v. Taft, 28 M. 289.

509. Whether the general superintendent of a railroad company can bind the company by his employment of a doctor to attend an employee injured by their cars, quere; the court was equally divided: Ibid.

510. A conductor represents the company in the whole management of his train, and in ejecting a passenger he acts in the line of his employment, so that the company is liable for a wrongful expulsion: Great Western R. Co. v. Miller, 19 M. 305.

511. But for aggravations arising from his wantonness and malice the company does not stand on the same footing with him: Ibid.

512. The fact that a defendant railroad company was engaged in procuring aid and rights of way has no tendency to show that it was building its own road, or that any particular person employed in that work was doing so as a servant of defendant: Bond v. Pontiac, O. & P. A. R. Co., 62 M. 648.

513. The knowledge of the arbitrary mark of a consignee of goods possessed by a former officer or agent of a railroad company is not the company's knowledge so as to affect the company with notice of his ownership of goods thus marked in subsequent transactions: Great Western R. Co. v. Wheeler, 20 M. 419.

514. Whatever a company may do or authorize to be done may be ratified and adopted as its act when performed without its authority by its officers or agents: M'Laughlin v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 8 M. 100.

As to company's liability for neglect of its agents, etc., to maintain fences, see supra, §§ 302-305.

IX. LIABILITY FOR LABOR DEBTS.

515. The statute for the protection of laborers and persons furnishing material for the construction and repairing of railroads (H. S. §§ 8428-8425), though remedial, must be pursued, as against the railroad company, with some degree of strictness: Chicago & N. E. R. Co. v. Sturgis, 44 M. 538.

516. Said statute, being in derogation of the common law, must be strictly construed: Dudley v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co., 65 M. 655.

517. The duty imposed by said statute is not that it shall pay the claims of laborers and material-men on the failure or neglect of the contractors to do so, but that it shall retain in its custody the amount due from it to the contractors, not exceeding the amount of the claims furnished, until such contractors or sub-contractors pay such claims: Ibid.

518. The statute effects a garnishment or stop-order of the amount due to the contractor. Voluntary payment by the company to the laborer or material-men is not provided for, but they are permitted to collect pay by action against the company: Ibid.

519. A railroad company is not liable for labor to persons hired by a contractor or subcontractor, except so far as it is indebted to the latter: Bottomley v. Port Huron & N. W. R. Co., 44 M. 542.

520. The protection provided for by said statute is confined to laborers for and persons furnishing materials to contractors and subcontractors. One who merely hires out the labor of others is not a laborer: Chicago & N. E. R. Co. v. Sturgis, 44 M. 538.

521. Said statute does not apply for the protection of contractors or subcontractors: Martin v. Michigan & Ohio R. Co., 63 M. 458.

522. The labor and material for which said statute makes a railroad company liable must be such as is performed and used in constructing or repairing the road: Dudley v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co., 65 M. 655.

523. The labor done by a man's team may be regarded as labor done by him within the meaning of said H. S. §§ 3423-3425: Chicago & N. E. R. Co. v. Sturgis, 44 M. 538.

524. But it has since been said that the labor protected by this statute is manual labor, and does not extend to teams used upon the work: Dudley v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co., 65 M. 655.

525. Nor does the statute extend to feed furnished for teams employed in working upon the road, or to clothing or board of men so employed: Ibid.

526. To establish a cause of action, under H. S. §§ 3423-3425, against a railroad company, plaintiff must show that at the time he furnished the company with a bill of items, or at the pay-day next ensuing, there was an amount due from the company to the contractor, and the amount of such indebtedness, and, also, that the claims sought to be collected are not only undisputed but acknowledged to be due from the contractor or subcontractor: Ibid.

527. Testimony that a director and the superintendent of construction for the railroad company told plaintiff, when the latter presented to him a bill of items for labor and material performed for and furnished to a contractor, that "he would try and have them paid, and thought possible some of them would be paid at that pay-day in December," does not tend to prove that the railroad owed its contractor, nor the amount, if any, of such indebtedness: Ibid.

528. To enable plaintiff to recover under said statute it must appear that the itemized bill of material and labor was presented to the company as required by H. S. § 3423: Martin v. Michigan & O. R. Co., 63 M. 458.

529. Papers issued by a subcontractor to his laborers as tokens of their service are not admissible as evidence against the company: Chicago & N. E. R. Co. v. Sturgis, 44 M. 538.

530. Claims under H. S. §§ 3423-3425, against railroad companies for labor, etc., are assignable, and may be sued by the assignee: Chicago & N. E. R. Co. v. Sturgis, 44 M. 538; Dudley v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co., 65 M. 655.

531. But orders drawn by contractors or subcontractors in favor of laborers upon a third party, payable by the latter in money or goods, and accepted and paid by him, do not operate as an assignment to him of the laborers' claims for labor, etc., so as to enable him to sue the company: Martin v. Michigan & O. R. Co., 63 M. 458; Dudley v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co., 65 M. 655.

532. In suing a railroad company for a labor debt under H. S. §§ 3423-3425, a declaration on the common counts in assumpsit, with mere allusions to the statute and a statement of plaintiff's title by assignment, is not enough; the existence of the facts upon which the statute bases the right of action must be averred: Chicago & N. E. R. Co. v. Sturgis, 44 M. 538.

533. Where a railroad contractor has assigned his contract to the superintendent of the company, and the latter has assumed his debts to laborers, the company's liability, if any, for a labor debt does not rest on H. S. §§ 3423-3425, but is at common law on a special contract, and the declaration must so aver the cause of action: Bottomley v. Port Huron & N. W. R. Co., 44 M. 542.

534. A suit against a railroad corporation for a labor debt is brought to fix it with a liability resulting from its ownership of the road, and such a suit does not admit of the theory that defendant is merely an agent of the owner: Chicago & N. E. R. Co. v. Sturgis, 44 M. 538.

535. The conditions of C. L. 1871, § 2412, making railway stockholders liable for labor debts to the amount of their stock (which limitation is not found in the present statute, H. S. § 3385), must be strictly complied with: Peck v. Miller, 39 M. 594.

536. The services of an assistant chief engineer of a railroad company are not "labor" for which the stockholders are individually liable under Const., art. 15, § 7, and H. S. § 3385: Brockway v. Innes, 30 M. 47.

537. Nor is a contractor who has built a section of a road a "laborer" under those provisions: Peck v. Miller, 89 M. 594.

X. STREET RAILWAYS.

538. Street railways may be authorized and laid in the public streets of cities and villages without compensating the adjacent lot-owners: Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Heisel, 88 M. 62.

539. But a common council cannot so multiply street railway tracks in a particular street as to interfere with the rights of the general public in the street: Grand Rapids Street Railways, 48 M. 433.

540. Where a street railway company has refused to build an additional road lawfully required by the common council, it is discretionary with the council to make such changes in the proposed route as to adapt it to form a junction with the road of some company that will build it, even though in so doing a street in which the former company had had exclusive rights is used as a connecting link. If such a use infringes the rights of the former company it is damnum absque injuria: Ibid.

541. When a regularly incorporated street railway company becomes entitled to the exclusive right to lay its track in certain streets upon the relinquishment or forfeiture of such right by another company, it is thereafter entitled to the same protection against injurious interference to the extent of this right as the other company would have been: Ibid.

542. A municipal ordinance gave a street railway company the exclusive right to lay its track in such streets as should be designated by the council, if accepted by the company within a certain time. Held, that the company after forfeiting such right as to specified streets could not maintain a bill to enjoin another company, upon which the right had been subsequently conferred, from laying its track in streets not so designated to complainant, unless it could show actual injury thereby to its own interests: Ibid.

543. A street railway company, being a "corporation authorized to receive toll" within the meaning of H. S. § 4868, its property and franchises may be levied on and sold under execution; and purchasers may exercise such franchises and collect tolls the same as the corporation: McKee v. Grand Rapids & R. L. Street R. Co., 41 M. 274.

544. A street railway company is bound to exercise such care and diligence in clearing its track of snow as not to interfere needlessly with the safety and convenience of persons lawfully using the street; and, if an extraordinary snow-fall takes place, it must make extraordinary efforts to dispose of it: Bowen v. Detroit City R. Co., 54 M. 496.

545. Any disposition of the snow cleared from a street railway track must be made with due regard to the rights of travel on the highway; and it cannot be charged as matter of law that the fact that the general level of the road was left above the level of the railway track would not make the disposition of the snow unlawful: Wallace v. Detroit City R. Co., 58 M. 231.

546. In an action for an injury from a street collision the court was requested to charge that, if the street-car track was in such condition that the wheels of vehicles could not pass over it readily and so caused the collision, the plaintiff could not recover. Held, that there was no error in adding that, if the offending driver was negligent in trying to cross a track in such condition, and might by ordinary care have avoided the collision, the condition of the track would not excuse him: Joslin v. Grand Rapids Ice, etc. Co., 53 M. 322.

547. One who attempts to cross a street railway track just ahead of the car is guilty of such contributory negligence as prevents recovery, even though there was negligence in running the car at unusual speed: Kelly v. Hendrie, 26 M. 255.

548. One who drives upon a street railway track in front of an approaching car without looking around until the car comes into collision with his vehicle is guilty of contributory negligence; and, if he wilfully obstructs the progress of the car when there is nothing to hinder him from getting off the track, he wrongs both the railway company and persons riding in or waiting for the car: Wood v. Detroit City S. R. Co., 52 M. 402.

549. A street railway passenger was injured by the conductor's negligence, and recovered $5,500 damages, for which the execution issued against the company was returned unsatisfied. Held, that he could not sue individual stockholders therefor, as for a corporate debt, under H. S. § 3512: Bohn v. Brown, 33 M. 257.

As to liability for injuries to passengers from negligence, see CARRIERS, §§ 133-136, 139-141.

As to construction of obligation to keep street in repair, see CITIES, §§ 84-89; CONTRACTS, § 422.

5. Buildings permanently annexed to the freehold are regarded as realty: Pangborn v. Continental Ins. Co., 62 M. 638.

6. A house erected upon land by one in possession under a contract of purchase is part of the realty: Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 M. 351.

7. B., a purchaser of land under a partly performed parol contract, built a house thereon which he occupied for some years and then rented to a tenant, who was ousted by M. under claim of title. Held, that B. could not at the same time treat the building as realty and personalty; that when he rented it he necessarily rented it as a tenement; and that he could not recover against M. in trover as for a conversion: Bracelin v. McLaren, 59 M. 327.

8. Permanent improvements made by a life-tenant inure to the benefit of the remainderman: Curtis v. Fowler, 66 M. 696.

9. A building erected by the remainder-man with the life-tenant's consent and with the intention to make it part of the freehold becomes such: Stevens v. Rose, 69 M. 259.

10. Fences built upon, and a cellar built in, another's land, by one who has fraudulently acquired colorable title, were regarded as permanently annexed in his own wrong, and he was refused indemnity therefor: McCredie v. Buxton, 31 M. 383.

That improvements made and railroad ties placed upon land by a railroad company are not part of the realty that must be paid for in subsequent condemnation proceedings, see RAILROADS, §§ 209, 210.

11. The estate of a tenant for years is not realty within the meaning of the statute relating to the levy and sale of lands on execution: Buhl v. Kenyon, 11 M. 249.

12. Nor is a contract right of possession of land for a term of years: Grover v. Fox, 36 M. 453.

13. Partnership lands are in equity affected with the character of personalty for the purpose of accounting and settlement: Godfrey v. White, 43 M. 171. And see cases cited in Merritt v. Dickey, 38 M. 41.

As to the purposes for which devised land may be regarded as personalty, see CONVERSION, § 1.

That a contract insuring building is personal and not real, see INSURANCE, § 41.

II. TITLE; SEIZIN; POSSESSION.

As to ownership in common, see TENANTS IN COMMON, I.

As to descent of real property and control of executor or administrator over, see ESTATES OF DECEDENTS.

As to recovery of lands, see EJECTMENT; FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER.

As to suits to quiet title, see EQUITY, II, (n).

As to evidence of title to land, see EVIDENCE, I, (g); EJECTMENT, VI.

14. Where a title is assailed after standing undisputed for half a century, and being originally founded upon a judicial determination, every reasonable intentment will be made in support of the existing possession: Willets v. Mandlebaum, 28 M. 521.

15. Color of title is that which in appearance is title, but which in reality is no title: Miller v. Clark, 56 M. 337.

16. What constitutes color of title in a particular case is a question of law for the court: Ibid.

17. Tax-deeds and leases, though shown by evidence to be void, afford color of title to one who has gone into possession thereunder: Hoffman v. Harrington, 28 M. 90.

Further as to effect of tax-deeds, see TAXES, VI, (k).

A sheriff's deed on a guardian's foreclosure of a mortgage held not to give color of title: See EJECTMENT, § 230.

18. Seizin in fee may include possession, and is of two kinds: seizin in deed and seizin in law. The former is actual possession of a freehold, the latter is a legal right to such possession: Lull v. Davis, 1 M. 77.

19. In some cases seizin will be presumed, as when one in possession claims title against a trespasser; but mere occupancy or possession, without color or claim of title, cannot be evidence of seizin, particularly as against a prior occupant; and without showing title, or a possession under a claim of title, one's possession or right by virtue thereof must be restricted to the land actually occupied: Milnerd v. Reeves, 1 M. 107.

20. Proof of possession under a claim of title founded upon a deed not emanating from the source of title or traced back to a person so claiming does not raise a legal presumption of seizin in fee; and if such possession were evidence of seizin, it would at most be a bare presumption, liable to be overcome by other proof, such as title in a third person: Lull v. Davis, 1 M. 77.

21. Color of title under a deed and occupancy of a part will constitute an adverse possession to a single lot except where there is an actual occupancy under a different claim: Milnerd v. Reeves, 1 M. 107.

Adverse possession as barring recovery of land, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, III, (d).

22. Lapse of time does not necessarily operate as a disseizin in law or in equity: Compo v. Jackson Iron Co., 49 M. 39.

23. The holder of a legal title is not ousted by the act of a contract purchaser in going on the land with a team and ploughing for a few hours: Goetchius v. Sanborn, 46 M. 330.

24. Nor can a nocturnal entry by stealth and without right upon lands in the peaceable possession of another amount to a possession that enables the party entering to question the sufficiency of the true possessor's title or to set up an outstanding title in a third person: Van Auken v. Monroe, 38 M. 725.

25. A possession gained by force and held but a short time cannot be made the ground of an action: Harrington v. Scott, 1 M. 17.

Presumptions as to ownership and possession, see EVIDENCE, §§ 1539-1559.

Further as to possession and title, see those headings in the index.

III. ESTATES.

By the CURTESY or in DOWER, see those titles.

For life, see TENANTS FOR LIFE.

Of deceased persons, see ESTATES OF DECEASED.

26. The law has classified and defined all the various interests and estates in lands that it permits individuals to hold or create; and parties creating a particular species of estate cannot sever from it its essential legal incidents, as this would introduce a new estate unknown to the law, producing confusion and uncertainty: Mandlebaum v. McDonell, 29 M. 78.

27. The policy of our statutes favors vested estates rather than those which are contingent: Rood v. Hovey, 50 M. 395. See Union Mutual Aid Assoc. v. Montgomery, 70 M. 587 (June 8, '89).

28. An estate granted upon condition cannot vest and lapse from time to time according as the condition may be observed or disregarded by the grantee: Conrad v. Long, 33 M. 78.

As to conditions and limitations upon estates, see CONVEYANCES, III, (c); TRUSTS, I, (c), 2; WILLS, VIII.

29. One may be said to have an "estate in possession" (H. S. §§ 5524, 7852) unless there is some intervening estate in the land the owner of which has a paramount right of possession as against him: Campau v. Campau, 19 M. 122.

30. An estate in possession means merely an estate in present enjoyment, whether occupied in person, by tenants, or unoccupied: Eberts v. Fisher, 44 M. 551.

31. An estate subject to a long lease is nevertheless a present estate in possession, though there be neither direct occupation nor receipt of profits: Toms v. Williams, 41 M. 553.

32. An estate in expectancy in heirs is not created by the administrator's right to possession to pay debts: Campau v. Campau, 19 M. 122.

33. The rule in Shelley's Case is abolished by H. S. § 5544: Fraser v. Chene, 2 M. 81. See Mandlebaum v. McDonell, 29 M. 78, 92.

34. A remainder over to minor children named, in the event of a devisee's dying without issue, is valid as a contingent limitation upon a fee, and will vest in possession on the death of the first taker without issue living at the time of such death: Goodell v. Hibbard, 32 M. 47.

35. A remainder in fee may be created in favor of an unborn child: See v. Derr, 57 M. 369.

36. Under H. S. § 5540, which permits the creation of freehold estates to begin at a future day, a contingent remainder is not too remote which depends on the death of the husband of the grantee of the life-estate and on her own remarriage or death, as theirs are lives in being (H. S. § 5531): Paton v. Langley, 50 M. 428.

37. So long as a title is in fee in trust the validity of a reversion thereof does not properly come under discussion: Thatcher v. St. Andrew's Church, 37 M. 264.

38. The right of reversion or escheat, to which, at common law, prior to the statute quia emptores, the grantor of an estate in fee-simple was entitled on default of heirs of his grantee, never existed in Michigan; here the escheat could only accrue to the sovereignty, the state: Mandlebaum v. McDonell, 29 M. 78.

39. A future contingent estate is alienable in the same manner as an estate in possession, and may be conveyed by a deed of bargain and sale without covenants: Goodell v. Hibbard, 32 M. 47.

RECEIVERS.

I. APPOINTMENT.

- (a) Jurisdiction; when granted.
- (b) Practice; application; notice.
- (c) Who may be appointed.
- (d) Review of appointment.

II. REMOVAL; DISCHARGE.

III. SUITS BY AND AGAINST.

IV. RIGHTS, POWERS AND LIABILITIES.

V. COMPENSATION.

I. APPOINTMENT.

(a) Jurisdiction; when granted.

1. The appointment of receivers is governed in part by discretion and in part by rules of right. No court has unlimited discretion to put private estates into the hands of receivers: Barry v. Briggs, 22 M. 201.

2. Courts of equity cannot appoint receivers except when such appointment is allowed by law (H. S. § 6624): Hazeltine v. Granger, 44 M. 503.

3. The power to appoint a receiver of an estate assigned for the benefit of creditors is subject not only to all rights paramount to the assignment, but to legal conditions: First National Bank v. Barnum Wire Works, 58 M. 315.

4. The power of a court of equity by appointing a receiver to draw to itself the jurisdiction to try disputed titles is exceptional, and must rest on facts that render common-law remedies inadequate or improper in the particular instance: Merchants' & M. Nat. Bank v. Kent Circuit Judge, 43 M. 292.

5. The court of chancery has authority in proper cases to appoint a receiver to take possession of and hold, pending litigation, property the right to which is contested in that court. Circumstances held to constitute a proper case: Tregaskis v. Detroit Superior Court, 47 M. 509.

6. A bill in equity will not lie merely for injunction and receivership pending another suit in the same court covering all rights in the disputed property; interference with such rights can be restrained by some proceeding in the suit pending: Beekman v. Fletcher, 48 M. 156.

7. Under the act of June 21, 1837, the court of chancery has jurisdiction to appoint a receiver to take charge of the assets of a bank, where the corporation is insolvent, or when it refuses to pay its debts, or when it has violated any provision of its charter or of any law binding on it: Attorney-General v. Oakland County Bank, W. 90.

8. Where complainant by his bill shows a legal title to lands in possession of defendant, and from the answer of defendant a strong presumption arises of title in complainant, the court will grant a receiver, especially where there are large encumbrances on the lands, and no part of the rents and profits is applied to keep down the interest, and defendant is irresponsible, and is holding over against his own deed: Payne v. Atterbury, H. 414.

9. Where defendants held valuable real estate under a trust deed executed after one of them had prosecuted a petition to the probate court, alleging that the grantor was an incompetent person, and where differences have arisen between them and the rest of the grantor's family as to the management of the estate, and where they have disregarded the wishes of the grantor and of the family, and have failed to give bonds, or to account specifically for the rents and income, it is proper to order a receiver to take charge of the estate, giving bonds: Hodges v. McDuff, 69 M. 76 (March 2, '88).

10. Upon a creditor's bill, where an execution has been returned unsatisfied, chancery has a broad discretion in appointing a receiver, and the validity of such appointment cannot be reviewed on an appeal from an order holding a party in contempt for not assigning to such receiver: Bagley v. Scudder, 66 M. 97.

11. A receiver will not be appointed under a judgment creditor's bill, filed on an execution returned unsatisfied nearly nine years before: Gould v. Tryon, W. 353.

12. The irregularity of the appointment of a receiver under a creditor's bill is no reason for defendant's objecting to submit to examination: Howard v. Palmer, W. 391.

13. One to whom a debtor has conveyed his property to keep it beyond the reach of his creditors will be held to be a trustee for their benefit, and will be liable for all the property in his hands when suit is brought against him. But a receiver will not be appointed over one charged with being such a trustee, when there is no allegation that he is insolvent, transient or irresponsible, or that the fund is in a hazardous condition: Thayer v. Swift, H. 430.

14. H. S. § 8112 contemplates the appointment of a receiver who may directly sue persons supposed to be covering property for a fraudulent debtor: Stoeckle v. Ehlers, 37 M. 261.

15. Where the assignees under a common-law assignment for the benefit of creditors have ceased to act because they supposed themselves displaced by proceedings taken under the assignment law of 1883, which was held unconstitutional, a receiver may be appointed in their place: Commercial Nat. Bank v. Mosser, 57 M. 336.

16. So, if the assignee does not do his duty, or in case of fraud or failure to qualify, the court may appoint a receiver: Scott v. Chambers, 62 M. 532.

17. A receiver ought not to be appointed in a proceeding for the partition of property theretofore left in the hands of one of the parties to manage in the common interest, if there is no allegation against him of insolvency: Pierce v. Pierce, 55 M. 629.

18. An intestate's partner was his administrator, and was charged with confusing the partnership property with his own, and seeking to defraud those who were concerned in the intestate estate. The administrator died, and in his turn had an administrator, who filed a bill for an accounting and settlement as between the several estates. It did not appear that the partnership estate was being wasted, or that there was any hindrance to the investigation of its affairs, and there was evidence to the contrary. Held, that there was no ground for appointing, pendente lite and on defendant's prayer, a receiver whose custody should cover the deceased administrator's property: Perrin v. Lepper, 56 M. 351.

19. It is no objection to the appointing of a receiver to take charge of partnership effects that one of the partners has assigned his interest therein to a third person: Kirby v. Ingersoll, 1 D. 477.

20. An order appointing a receiver to take possession of and collect certain partnership accounts was unwarranted where the parties had themselves fully agreed how the accounts should be collected, and defendants were responsible: Simon v. Schloss, 48 M. 233.

21. An order for receivership in a partnership case should be of all the partnership estate. If it is of property in a particular place only, and does not describe that or distinguish it from the individual property of the partner who is assumed to be in possession and to have property there, it is erroneous: Morey v. Grant, 48 M. 326.

22. A receivership will not be granted to deprive a surviving partner of the possession of the firm property, unless upon proof of mismanagement or danger to the partnership effects: Connor v. Allen, H. 371.

23. The only grounds for appointing a receiver to interfere with the possession of a sole surviving partner are his grievous misconduct or incapacity: Barry v. Briggs, 22 M. 201.

24. A surety on the bond of a residuary legatee cannot have a receiver appointed to take charge of the assets of the estate: McElroy v. Hatheway, 44 M. 399.

25. One who has taken a second mortgage on chattels cannot have a receiver appointed and an injunction issued against the exercise of rights under the prior mortgage, unless he shows that, in taking his security, he has been defrauded into thinking there was no prior lien, or shows that such lien was itself fraudulent. And if defendant shows himself responsible his possession cannot be interfered with until his fraud is established: Caulfield v. Curry, 63 M. 594.

26. A borrower, after making payments to a receiver appointed for his creditor in proceedings to which he was not a party, cannot afterwards, in proceedings against himself for the enforcement of his debt, question the validity of his appointment: Burton v. Schildbach, 45 M. 504.

27. The validity of the appointment of a receiver cannot be collaterally questioned in an action by him upon an undertaking for costs given in compliance with an order of court, the defendants having fully recognized the receivership: Skinner v. Lucas, 68 M. 424 (Feb. 2, '88).

As to appointment of receivers for corporations, see CORPORATIONS, §§ 294-300, 303.

As to appointment of receivers in foreclosure cases, see MORTGAGES, §§ 634-638.

(b) Practice; application; notice.

28. Affidavits are not admissible to contradict the answer on motion for a receiver: Connor v. Allen, H. 371.

29. A receiver cannot be appointed as a preliminary to filing a bill and commencing suit, and without any notice to parties interested in the property placed in his hands: Jones v. Schall, 45 M. 379.

30. A receiver cannot be appointed when no suit is pending concerning the property of which he is put in charge: Merchants' & M. Nat. Bank v. Kent Circuit Judge, 43 M. 292.

31. Courts of equity are averse to appointing receivers upon an ex parte application without notice to defendants whose rights are to be affected: Turnbull v. Prentiss Lumber Co., 55 M. 387.

32. It must be an extraordinary case which would justify even an appointment ex parte, and some special circumstances must be shown rendering it necessary to put a receiver in possession to prevent irreparable loss: Ibid.

33. The rule is that a receiver will not be appointed before answer, unless it appears that there is danger to the property or fund by the insolvency of the party in possession or from some other cause; but when justice requires it, and the merits appear to demand it, upon the hearing of which due notice is given, one will be appointed: Ibid.

34. Without a showing of necessity a receiver should not be appointed to divest possessory rights before a hearing on the merits: McCombs v. Merryhew, 40 M. 721.

35. Although the cause stood upon demurrer, an order for a receiver under a creditor's bill was granted on a special motion, of which notice was given to defendant's solicitor, who did not appear to oppose it: Howard v. Palmer, W. 391.

36. And where insolvency was alleged and not denied on the application, and where there was danger of misappropriation or waste of assets, an appointment of a receiver on motion and notice was sustained, though an issue on demurrer was pending: Turnbull v. Prentiss Lumber Co., 55 M. 387.

37. But an order appointing a receiver ex parte while the issue stood upon demurrer, and while defendant was exercising its corporate functions and conducting its business as usual, was reversed: Cook v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 45 M. 453.

38. A receiver should not be appointed for a copartnership before the case is ripe for hearing, except upon an adjudication of co-partnership and with decree for accounting: Morey v. Grant, 48 M. 326.

39. Possession of lands cannot be given to a receiver by a preliminary injunction, and appeal would lie as from a final order from such a premature adjudication of the merits, since it entails a surrender of rights or the expense of a preliminary appeal: Arnold v. Bright, 41 M. 207.

40. An ex parte order without notice, obtained by a complainant not a judgment creditor, appointing a receiver, and directing a defendant who held a chattel mortgage assigned to him by his co-defendant, and alleged to be fraudulent, to turn the same over to the receiver to collect, and hold the proceeds until the respective rights of the parties are determined, cannot lawfully be enforced, and should be expunged as soon as possible: Sailing v. Johnson, 25 M. 489.

(c) Who may be appointed.

41. An officer of a corporation may be appointed its receiver: Covert v. Rogers, 38 M. 363.

42. The law partner of the solicitor for a complainant in foreclosure cannot, unless by consent of all persons interested in the results of the receivership, be made receiver in the suit: Merchants' & M. Nat. Bank v. Kent Circuit Judge, 43 M. 292.

(d) Review of appointment.

43. In reviewing the action of a circuit judge in appointing a receiver, the supreme court considers whether the discretion vested in him has been abused, and whether a right has been impaired by such appointment: Turnbull v. Prentiss Lumber Co., 55 M. 387.

44. A void order appointing, on an ex parte application, a receiver to manage a corporate business, was vacated by mandamus: Port Huron & G. R. Co. v. St. Clair Circuit Judge, 31 M. 456.

Appointment of receiver for assigned estate is not reviewed on MANDAMUS, see that title, § 100.

As to appeals from appointment or refusal to appoint receiver, see supra, § 39; also, APPEAL, §§ 76-87.

II. REMOVAL; DISCHARGE.

45. The exercise of the power to remove a receiver lies within the discretion of the court, and depends on the peculiar circumstances of each case: First National Bank v. Barnum Wire Works, 60 M. 427.

46. Where a petitioner would not be prejudiced by not removing the receiver — as where all that the petitioner can ask is that he shall have payment of his debt in full, when established, which relief is already secured to him by the action of the court below — and where the other creditors are satisfied with the receiver he should not be removed: Ibid.

47. The insolvency of a receiver may be sufficient reason for superseding him: Brown v. Vandermeulen, 41 M. 418.

48. The court may discharge a receiver appointed for a bank, where it is satisfied that the interests of all concerned will be best subserved by permitting the bank to manage its own affairs; but before discharging him the court should look into the bank's condition and make the order absolute or conditional as the case may require: Fay v. Erie & K. R. Bank, H. 194.

That an order discharging a receiver when his accounts shall be approved is not final, see APPEAL, § 90.

III. SUITS BY AND AGAINST.

As to costs in receiver's favor when he sues for assessment, see COSTS, § 32.

49. The receiver appointed in supplementary proceedings at law on return of an execution unsatisfied can sue third persons at law or in equity as if he were an assignee; but in the proceedings themselves the judgment debtor only can be a party: Prescott v. Pfeiffer, 57 M. 21.

50. Where the rights of a receiver appointed in another state depend wholly upon the effect to be given to the judgments or decrees of the court making the appointment he cannot sue in the courts of this state, in reference to real property situated here or in reference to personal property and rights in action. to the prejudice of creditors in this state: Graydon v. Church, 7 M. 36.

51. Where a receiver was appointed in a creditor's suit in another state, and the debtor made a general assignment to the receiver of all his property, reciting in it the proceedings had in the cause, the assignment being in due form for the transfer of an interest in lands under our statutes, held, that the assignee might file his bill in chancery in this state to foreclose a mortgage interest, or to enforce a right of redemption held by the debtor at the time of the assignment in lands in this state. He sues, in such case, not strictly in his official character as receiver, under his foreign appointment, but as holding the legal interest in the property under the assignment: Ibid.

52. The recital in the assignment of the proceedings prior to the appointment are to be taken as true, so far as material; and the courts of this state will recognize the complainant substantially as trustee for the creditors, and will assist him to collect and render the property available for the purposes of the trust; but will not concern themselves with any question as to the distribution of the proceeds, as between him and the creditors, nor interfere between him and the court by whose appointment he acts. It is for that court to hold him to his accountability for the trust property, especially where all parties reside in that state, and the creditors have not appealed to this court for any such purpose: Ibid.

53. The receiver of an assignee's estate is the proper party to bring suit to recover property fraudulently sold by the insolvent debtor: Angell v. Pickard, 61 M. 561. See Sweetzer v. Higby, 63 M. 13.

54. Redress against the receiver of an assigned estate for injury to private rights therein must be had by petition in the court appointing him, and not by original bill. But the form of the remedy does not destroy its substance, and the action of the court thereon is reviewable on appeal if the fund in which the complaining party claims an interest is alleged to be liable to such danger as to be within the risks against which the law gives protection: First National Bank v. Barnum Wire Works, 58 M. 315.

55. A receiver cannot be sued or garnished without leave of the court which appointed him: Tremper v. Brooks, 40 M. 333.

56. When a receiver has been appointed no one can implead him in the same proceeding without leave of court, or take out of his hands the control of the proceedings: Scott v. Chambers, 62 M. 532.

57. The receiver of an insolvent estate acting in place of an assignee is appointed by an order made on the chancery side of the court; but a proceeding against him by petition to establish a claim in full to the exclusion of the rights of other creditors is in no proper sense an equitable proceeding: Grammel v. Carmer, 55 M. 201.

58. Whether an action for a railway injury lies against the receiver of the company in whose employment it was incurred, quere: Smith v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 46 M. 258.

59. A receiver who, under color of office, gets possession of property that does not belong to him, is personally liable in replevin; naming him by his title may stand as descriptive. Whether he could have recourse to his fund to pay the judgment collected against him is a matter to be settled by the court that appointed him: Gutsch v. McIlhargy, 69 M. 877 (April 6, '88).

IV. RIGHTS, POWERS AND LIABILITIES.

As to the powers of receivers appointed in garnishment proceedings, see GARNISHMENT, §§ 149, 150.

60. The receiver's custody is that of the court which appointed him: Tremper v. Brooks, 40 M. 333.

61. A receiver cannot summarily eject the occupant of land and take possession of his personalty without a showing of necessity affecting the disputed interests in the land, and a trial of the possessor's right to the personalty; and an order authorizing him to do so, granted on a mere special proceeding, will not be sustained: McCombs v. Merryhew, 40 M. 721.

62. A receiver cannot employ a solicitor in the cause as his own counsel, unless with the consent of all parties concerned in the results of the receivership, which may include persons not parties to the suit: Merchants', etc. National Bank v. Kent Circuit Judge, 43 M. 202.

63. Courts should not interfere with the discretion of receivers appointed to carry on a business, unless some abuse is alleged or shown: Taylor v. Sweet, 40 M. 736.

64. An order requiring a receiver appointed in a suit for the settlement of partnership accounts to pay certain moneys from the funds to each of the partners on application, and without reference to the state of their accounts, and to charge them with the sums so paid to be accounted for on final settlement, was reversed as improvident: Ibid.

65. A receiver appointed on the voluntary dissolution of a corporation becomes vested with all the corporate interests except the power to do business: Cady v. Knit Goods Manuf. Co., 48 M. 133.

66. The purchaser of a note at a receiver's sale is not bound by the receiver's statement of the amount due, but is entitled to recover whatever may be due upon it: Newberry v. Troubridge, 13 M. 263.

Order for sale of assigned property by receiver held appealable, see APPEAL, § 88.

67. A receiver for a corporation organized under a void law can demand an accounting in equity for a debt secured by a mortgage executed to such invalid corporation: Burton v. Schudbach, 45 M. 504.

68. A receiver appointed ex parte for a bank before decree of forfeiture holds provisionally; and though such decree might justify the relating back of his title to the beginning of the receivership, yet this title, until adjudication, is conditional and inchoate, and amounts to no more than a possessory right for the purposes of the suit: Montgomery v. Merrill, 18 M. 338.

69. When the suit in which a receiver was appointed is disposed of, he is left a mere bailee, in respect to the property or its proceeds, for the parties entitled; and is not an officer of the court, and can only be called to account by the parties in individual suits: Maltz v. Fletcher, 52 M. 484.

70. Where a receiver's right is purely for the purposes of a suit, it cannot outlast the suit or be used for any purposes not justified thereby: Montgomery v. Merrill, 18 M. 338.

71. A receiver — e. g., of an estate assigned for the benefit of creditors — is a trustee, and subject to the general duties requiring impartiality; he cannot collude with any one, or prefer one set of interests to another: First National Bank v. Barnum Wire Works, 53 M. 315, 60 M. 487.

72. A receiver appointed under the statute relating to assignments for creditors represents all the interests and stands in the place of the assignee: Barnum Wire Works v. Speed, 59 M. 278; Angell v. Pickard, 61 M. 561.

The receiver of a corporation does not represent stockholders or creditors of previous corporation, see CORPORATIONS, § 306.

Order requiring garnishee to surrender notes to receiver, vacated by MANDAMUS, § 55.

73. Where the appointment of a receiver has been determined by the supreme court to be void for want of jurisdiction, the court which made the appointment may order him to restore the property to defendants, and may enforce its order by proceedings as for contempt: People v. Jones, 33 M. 303.

V. COMPENSATION.

74. Where a receiver's appointment was void for want of jurisdiction he could not have any benefit from it, or retain money collected by him as receiver to compensate his services: People v. Jones, 33 M. 303.

I. WHEN RECORDING REQUIRED OR ALLOWED.

(a) When recording essential.

As to filing and effect of filing or failing to file CHATTEL MORTGAGES, see that title, §§ 66-96, 115, 118, 120.

1. Recording is not essential to the validity of a deed as between the parties; it is only for the preservation of evidence and for notice to subsequent purchasers and encumbrancers: Sinclair v. Slawson, 44 M. 123.

2. Recording is not necessary to give a deed effect as between the parties; so held where an unrecorded deed was destroyed by agreement after delivery: Gugins v. Van Gorder, 10 M. 523.

3. A grantee's neglect to record his deed does not avoid it as against the grantor. So, under the ordinance of 1787, an unrecorded deed was good between the parties: Godfroy v. Disbrow, W. 260.

4. An unrecorded deed is good between the parties and against all others rightly chargeable with notice: Brown v. McCormick, 28 M. 215.

As to notice, see infra, IV, (c); also, NOTICE.

5. A deed may be effectual as a conveyance though it is not recorded: Wilt v. Cutler, 88 M. 189, 192.

6. One may have an undoubted title to lands though one or more of the conveyances through which he acquires title are unrecorded: Smith v. Fiting, 37 M. 143.

7. An unrecorded defeasance is void only against purchasers for a valuable consideration without actual notice of its existence (H. S. § 5886): Columbia Bank v. Jacobs, 10 M. 349.

8. A tax-purchaser took a decree by default quieting his title as against the claims of a certain person who had in fact previously conveyed the land to one who did not record the deed and who was not made a party to the suit. Held, that the neglect to record the deed did not make the decree binding upon the grantee: Smith v. Williams, 44 M. 240.

Effect of failure to record plat, see PLATS, §§ 14-16.

9. Patents of lands from the United States do not come within the purview of the recording laws, and the same rule applies to all conveyances by the United States as owner of the original domain. A subsequent recorded deed does not, therefore, take precedence over a prior unrecorded deed from the governor and judges on behalf of the United States: Moran v. Palmer, 13 M. 367.

10. The validity or operation of a land-patent from the federal government is not impaired by neglecting to record it in the registry of the county where it lies: Sands v. Davis, 40 M. 14.

11. The validity of a tax-deed does not depend on its being recorded: Fells v. Barbour, 58 M. 49.

12. An agreement in the nature of a defeasance is required to be recorded only when it relates to a conveyance that on its face purports to be absolute: Russell v. Waite, W. 81.

13. Under C. L. 1871, § 6921, it was not necessary, in order to cut off the equity of redemption, to record a sheriff's deed on foreclosure by advertisement. (H. S. § 8505 says that such deeds shall be recorded, which is probably directory only): Sanford v. Cahoon, 63 M. 223.

14. Want of registry does not invalidate an assignment for the benefit of creditors as against an attachment subsequently levied: Palmer v. Mason, 42 M. 146.

15. An assignment for the benefit of creditors need not be recorded to defeat an attachment levied within ten days after it was made (H. S. § 8739): Gott v. Hoschna, 57 M. 413.

16. H. S. § 8498, requiring any assignment of a mortgage to be recorded before the mortgage can be foreclosed by advertisement, does not refer to such transfer as results from the operation of law; e. g., from the mortgagee's death: Miller v. Clark, 56 M. 337.

17. An assignment of a certificate of purchase of public lands is properly of record in the land-office at Washington: Clark v. Hall, 19 M. 356.

(c) What instruments entitled to record.

1. As to the nature of the instrument.

19. An ante-nuptial contract, duly acknowledged, whereby the prospective husband agreed that in case the wife survived him his administrator should convey to her by a proper deed certain described land, and containing mutual covenants against mortgaging the land during the marriage without joint action, was held to convey such an interest in land as entitled it to be recorded: Aultman v. Pettys, 59 M. 482.

20. Land was conveyed which was subject to a mortgage, the seller taking back a mortgage to secure a negotiable note for part of the purchase price, and giving the purchaser an agreement to pay off and discharge the first mortgage, and, in case of his failure to do so, that the purchaser might pay it, and have the amount applied on the mortgage given by him. This agreement was witnessed, acknowledged and recorded. Held that, as such instrument was not the subject of record, an assignee of the second mortgage who received the same for a valuable consideration, before it was due, and without actual notice of this agreement, was not affected thereby: Dutton v. Ives, 5 M. 515.

21. H. S. § 5690 authorizes powers of attorney to be recorded in the records of deeds: Morse v. Hewett, 28 M. 488.

22. Whether the act of 1875 (H. S. § 6119), allowing certificates of sheriffs' sales on executions to be recorded applied to sales already made, quere: Drake v. McLean, 47 M. 102.

23. The registry law of 1888 had reference to conveyances of the real estate, or interest in law, only, except where a trust is created or declared in writing, which, to be notice to subsequent purchasers, the statute (R. S. 1888, p. 260) required to be recorded; and, therefore, a mortgage of lands that were held by the mortgager under a bond for a deed was held not entitled to record, being a mere equitable mortgage: Wing v. McDowell, W. 175.

24. A certified copy of the record in one county of a deed is not authorized to be recorded in another county: Shotwell v. Harrison, 22 M. 410. (See, however, provision in case of lost deeds, H. S. § 5716.)

25. Under act 262 of 1887, a mortgage is not entitled to record unless it gives the mortgagee's name and residence; said act is held valid: People v. Sanilac Supervisors, 71 M. 16 (June 22, '88). See REGISTER OF DEEDS, § 5.

2. As to execution, acknowledgment, etc.

See, generally, CONVEYANCES, §§ 40-128.

26. There was no registry at common law; and, therefore, the validity of a deed for purposes of registry can extend no further than the affirmative provisions of the recording law: Galpin v. Abbott, 6 M. 17.

27. Under the law in force in 1830, a deed not sealed could not lawfully be recorded: Starkweather v. Martin, 28 M. 471.

28. A deed whereto one of the witnesses, being unable to write, put his mark, is nevertheless entitled to record: Brown v. McCormick, 28 M. 215.

29. Where two witnesses to the execution of a deed are required to entitle it to record, the deed is not entitled to record as a conveyance by a grantor whose signature is attested by but one witness, although there are two witnesses to another grantor's signature: Hall v. Redson, 10 M. 21.

30. Under the acts of 1820 and 1827, and the code of 1833, deeds executed out of Michigan required, to entitle them to record, two witnesses, the same as if executed here: Galpin v. Abbott, 6 M. 17; Brown v. Cady, 11 M. 535; Van Auken v. Monroe, 38 M. 725.

31. To entitle a deed to registry its execution by the grantor must be proved or acknowledged, and when acknowledged the evidence of acknowledgment must appear by the certificate: Buell v. Irwin, 24 M. 145.

32. A deed duly executed and acknowledged by a man is admissible to record as his sole deed, although the certificate as to his wife's acknowledgment is defective: Rayner v. Lee, 20 M. 384.

33. Under the act of 1820 and of April 12, 1827 (Code 1833, p. 281), an acknowledgment taken and certified in another state by an authorized officer, according to the laws of such state, entitled the deed (if executed as our laws require) to record without further evidence or certificate as to the officer or his signature: Ives v. Kimball, 1 M. 308; Lacey v. Davis, 4 M. 140; Galpin v. Abbott, 6 M. 17; Hogelskamp v. Weeks, 37 M. 422.

34. So that it was immaterial in such case that the clerk's certificate attached to that of the commissioner of deeds, before whom the acknowledgment was taken, was not sealed, no certificate being required: Hogelskamp v. Weeks, 37 M. 422.

35. But, under H. S. § 5660, such certificate of a clerk of a court of record being necessary (unless the acknowledgment is taken before a commissioner of deeds for Michigan), it must be under seal or the deed cannot be recorded: Pope v. Cutler, 34 M. 150.

36. And if the acknowledgment out of the state is made before a Michigan commissioner of deeds, his certificate thereto must be under seal: Buell v. Irwin, 24 M. 145.

37. A deed conveying Michigan lands was executed and acknowledged in New York, and several years afterwards the certificate of the proper clerk was made and attached, certifying that the deed was made and acknowledged according to the "existing" law of New York. Held a sufficient certificate to entitle the deed to record: Harrington v. Fish, 10 M. 415.

38. The certificate of a county clerk — it not appearing that he was the clerk of a court of record — dated in 1855, verifying the acknowledgment of a deed without witnesses executed out of the state in 1843, held not to entitle the deed to record: Donahue v. Klassner, 22 M. 252.

39. A deed executed out of the state was received for record and recorded Aug. 2; but the certificate required by the statute to entitle it to record was dated Aug. 12. Whether, if the certificate was correctly dated, and it was attached to the deed after the deed was recorded, the whole deed should not have been re-recorded in order to cut off prior unrecorded deeds, quere: Oliver v. Sanborn, 60 M. 346.

That certificate of acknowledgment had (formerly) to be sealed to entitle plat to record see PLATS, § 10.

II. RECORDING.

That the register will not be compelled by mandamus to record deed that he holds in escrow as a private person, see REGISTER OF DEEDS, § 4.

40. The act of April 12, 1827, "concerning mortgages," was not controlled in relation to the record of mortgages by the act of the same date "concerning deeds and conveyances;" and where, in compliance with the terms of the former act, a mortgage upon land in the city of Detroit was recorded in the county registry, such record was held valid: Weed v. Lyon, H. 363; Beals v. Hale, 4 How. (U. S.) 37.

41. Powers of attorney may be registered in the books of deeds of any county where the lands lie to which they relate: Morse v. Hewett, 28 M. 481.

42. Under the code of 1833, where a deed absolute in form was shown by contemporaneous writing to be only a mortgage, it should have been recorded as a mortgage; and if recorded as a deed, the record would not give it priority over a prior unrecorded mortgage: Thompson v. Mack, H. 150. (See H. S. §§ 5674, 5675.)

43. A writing was recorded as a separate paper, which referred "to the within mortgage," but did not in any way describe or identify the mortgage. It was held not to be evidence that the writing recorded was indorsed upon any instrument recorded with it, as that was an extrinsic fact not within the purview of the registry laws: Bassett v. Hathaway, 9 M. 28.

44. A mortgage was assigned by indorsement referring to it as "the within mortgage," and this was recorded in the same volume but not on the same page with the mortgage, the two being connected by cross-references. Held a sufficient recording: Soule v. Corbley, 65 M. 109.

45. It is not a valid objection to the record of a deed that the name of one of the subscribing witnesses cannot be made out, and that it is apparently a fac-simile of the original: Whitwell v. Emory, 8 M. 84.

46. In the certified copy of the record of a mortgage there were no marks opposite the signatures indicating seals; but there was a certificate of the register of deeds that the words "not sealed" were entered in the record opposite the names in the handwriting of his predecessor. Held, that such certificate was not legal evidence. The register is bound to record all instruments properly executed, but he cannot make any notes or memoranda in the record not authorized by law: Farmers', etc. Bank v. Bronson, 14 M. 361.

47. Where it appeared that, under a law permitting the registry of only sealed instruments, the proper officer had recorded in the appropriate place an instrument in the form of a warranty deed, purporting to be acknowledged and dated at a time when it was the common and lawful course to seal conveyances, and contrary to official duty to take the acknowledgment unless the conveyance was sealed, and where the conclusion, attestation clause and acknowledgment all spoke of it as under seal, it was presumed that the original was sealed. It was further held, that, whether or not it was the duty of the register under the law as it then stood (in 1830) to put something of his own upon the record to indicate that the paper he recorded was sealed, his omission to do so would not overcome the presumption that the instrument itself was sealed: Starkweather v. Martin, 28 M. 471.

48. Where a deed dated Feb. 20, and purported to have been acknowledged on that day, but indorsed with a certificate of its having been recorded Feb. 18, the discrepancy was held referable to clerical mistake: Munroe v. Eastman, 81 M. 283.

49. In copying a mortgage into the record the register omitted the name of the mortgagee. Held, that this did not defeat the mortgage record as notice to subsequent purchasers, because the entry in the entry-book constituted constructive notice until the actual record, and, as such entry gave the mortgagee's name, the entry-book and the record-book together afforded full information: Sinclair v. Slawson, 44 M. 123.

50. Where a mortgage was assigned by indorsement thereon, and the instrument, when produced, bears the certificate of registry required by the statute with register's attestation at the date of the assignment, it cannot be presumed that the assignment was not properly recorded: Jakway v. Jenison, 46 M. 521.

51. A failure upon the register's part to sign the record of a deed, as is customary, does not render the record a nullity: Wilt v. Cutler, 88 M. 189.

52. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, it is presumed that the register has done his duty as a public officer: Ives v. Kimball, 1 M. 308.

(b) Priority of record.

53. When a paper is left with the register with the understanding that it is not to go upon record until further directions, the register, when he receives such directions, must record it as of that time, and not as of the time when it was left with him: Brigham v. Brown, 44 M. 59.

54. Where a mortgage is given, manifestly as a cover for the benefit of the mortgager, and the latter is sent with it to the registry, where he gives directions for leaving it off the record, the mortgagee will be bound by these directions, and will not be at liberty to rely, as against them, upon a false certificate of recording which he obtains: Ibid.

55. A debtor gave a mortgage for the debt, the bona fides of which was not disputed, and it was at once placed on record. Subsequently it was found that another party had a mortgage from the same mortgager on the same land, purporting to be given and recorded first. This mortgage had no debt to support it, unless it was one owing to a firm of which the mortgagee was a member, and for which other mortgages for more than its amount were in existence. The register of deeds testified that it was left with him by the mortgager with directions not to place it upon record until further directions were given, and that he never received any such directions, but his clerk recorded it without orders. Held, that the spreading it upon the record book, under such circumstances, was not a recording which entitled it to priority: Ibid.

56. The entry required by H. S. § 5675 to show the date at which a deed is received and its order is the only constructive record until the deed is actually recorded, and where such entry is omitted there can be none until that time: Shelden v. Warner, 45 M. 638.

57. As a rule, if the grantor of lands, on taking back a purchase-money mortgage, has both conveyances promptly recorded, he does all the law requires of him to protect his rights, and will not be affected by any previous conveyance which, without his knowledge, his grantee, the mortgager, may have placed on record before obtaining title: Heffton v. Flanigan, 37 M. 274.

58. In a foreclosure suit the evidence was examined and held to show that a deed which purported to bear date and to have been acknowledged and recorded earlier than complainant's mortgage was in fact made and recorded later: Shelden v. Warner, 45 M. 638.

59. The priority of record of two mortgages upon a vessel which were filed and recorded on the same day was decided in favor of the one bearing the earlier certificate: Hoffman v. McMorran, 52 M. 818.

Priority fraudulently obtained set aside, see MORTGAGES, §§ 203, 204.

(c) Alteration of record.

60. The registry of a conveyance or plat cannot be altered so as to make it conform to a subsequent acknowledgment: Burton v. Martz, 38 M. 761.

61. Alterations or interlineations appearing in the public record of a deed are presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to have been made in a proper manner and by a person authorized to make them: Hommel v. Devinney, 39 M. 522.

62. And where the record, in Wayne county, of a deed showed an interlineation, the mere fact that a certified copy of the record from St. Clair county, of the same deed, showed no such interlineation was held to raise no presumption of an improper change or alteration of the Wayne record: Ibid.

III. EFFECT OF RECORD.

63. Where successive conveyances of the same property have been made and only the later one has been recorded, the transfer of title thereunder is not by force of the conveyance, for the grantor has no title, but results from the operation of the statute, which provides (H. S. § 5688) that an unrecorded conveyance shall be void as against any subsequent purchaser in good faith and for a valuable consideration of the same real estate whose conveyance shall be first duly recorded: Burns v. Berry, 49 M. 176.

64. The policy of the recording law in giving the preference to the first recorded conveyance is a legislative, not a judicial, question; the design is to insure prompt recording: Drake v. McLean, 47 M. 102.

65. The design of the recording law is to prevent fraud by securing certainty and publicity in transactions relating to real estate; and the first purchaser should promptly record his conveyance: Atwood v. Bearss, 47 M. 72.

66. The object of registry laws is to protect bona fide purchaser against purchasers whose deeds have not been recorded: Godfroy v. Disbrow, W. 260; Dutton v. Ives, 5 M. 515; Columbia Bank v. Jacobs, 10 M. 349.

67. A record title is presumptively the better title, and creates a cloud upon the unrecorded title: King v. Carpenter, 37 M. 363.

68. The first deed recorded is presumptively the best; and the presumptions in favor of the holder of the legal title of record cannot be defeated without proof of an earlier right based on superior equities: First National Bank v. McAllister, 46 M. 397.

69. A registry law cannot have operation beyond the fair meaning of its terms: Millar v. Babcock, 25 M. 187.

70. The recording laws point out specifically the danger to which a party failing to record his title is exposed, and the courts cannot add to or extend it: Smith v. Williams, 44 M. 240.

71. A prior unrecorded deed is not defeated by a recorded conveyance of the grantor's "now remaining interest;" the two deeds may stand together: Eaton v. Trowbridge, 38 M. 454.

72. The recording law supplies the place of seoffment with livery of seizin, so that the making and recording of a deed by one who has come of age revokes a deed made during infancy, and renders unnecessary an entry before giving deed of avoidance: Haynes v. Bennett, 53 M. 15.

Recording as evidence of delivery, see CONVEYANCES, §§ 137, 144, 146-148, 154; EVIDENCE, § 329; GIFTS, § 8.

As proof of acceptance, see ASSIGNMENT, § 176.

As assertion of title, see EJECTMENT, §§ 63, 70-73.

As utterance of forgery, see CRIMES, §§ 425, 437.

(b) Record as notice.

Foreign record is not notice: See CONFLICT OF LAWS, §§ 2-4.

As to purchasers without notice, see infra, IV, (c).

As to effect of filing notice lis pendens, see NOTICE, I, (e).

73. The notice implied from a statutory record is not defeated by a careless loss or accidental destruction; if the statute has once been complied with the effect as notice continues, even though the record may fail, for accidental reasons or otherwise, to give the desired information: Heim v. Ellis, 49 M. 241.

74. A record is not notice for any purpose not declared by statute: Burton v. Martz, 38 M. 761.

75. The proper registry of a deed or conveyance required by law to be recorded is notice to subsequent purchasers of the existence and contents of such deed or conveyance, in equity as well as at law: Wing v. McDowell, W. 175.

76. The record of a deed entitled to be recorded is notice to all the world of the title of the grantees therein: Galpin v. Abbott, 6 M. 17. Although the statute relating to deeds and conveyances does not explicitly declare that the record thereof shall be constructive notice to subsequent purchasers, such is the legal effect: Atwood v. Bearss, 45 M. 469.

77. The record of a deed is notice to all who deal with the grantor that in giving him credit they must not look to the property conveyed to satisfy the debt: Hedstrom v. Kingsbury, 40 M. 636.

78. The record of a deed of trust operates as notice, and if it negatives the trustee's power to mortgage property purchased, such mortgage is void: Hannah v. Carnahan, 65 M. 601.

79. A subsequent purchaser is charged with notice of all that an examination of the records would have disclosed, whether he actually examined them or not: Barnard v. Campau, 29 M. 162; Healey v. Worth, 35 M. 166; Larzere v. Starkweather, 38 M. 96.

80. The purchaser of a mortgage is bound by such notice as is afforded by the registry of another mortgage of the same date but of subsequent record, and of which his vendor had actual knowledge: Van Aken v. Gleason, 34 M. 477.

81. Where a contract could be recorded like a conveyance (H. S. § 5689), anything is notice of the rights under it that would be notice in case of a deed: Weisberger v. Wisner, 55 M. 246.

82. The registry of an instrument not required by law to be recorded is notice to no one; so held of a mortgage given by one who held under a bond for a deed: Wing v. McDowell, W. 175.

83. The record of a deed that is not by law entitled to be recorded is notice to no one: Dutton v. Ives, 5 M. 515; Galpin v. Abbott, 6 M. 17.

84. Record of a void deed—such as that of a husband to his wife before the act of 1855—is not notice to any one of any possible equities between the parties to the deed: Loomis v. Brush, 36 M. 40.

85. Though the record of a defectively acknowledged conveyance is not evidence of the original instrument, yet under H. S. § 5727 it operates, if the conveyance was made in good faith and upon a valuable consideration, as notice of all the rights secured by the instrument: Brown v. McCormick, 28 M. 215.

86. Said H. S. § 5727 gives such operation to the record of a deed executed in another state and lacking any clerk's certificate of authentication of due execution: Healey v. Worth, 35 M. 166.

87. Also to a deed made in good faith and for a sufficient consideration, though there was but one witness to its execution: Aultman v. Pettys, 59 M. 482.

88. A record of a mortgage is not notice of a claim not mentioned therein: Hinchman v. Town, 10 M. 508.

89. As a general rule parties may rely upon the record as their guide in dealing with titles that appear there: Reynolds v. Ruckman, 35 M. 80; Hull v. Swarthout, 29 M. 249.

90. And the policy of the recording law requires that grantees who would have protection for latent equities in property that is being conveyed to them in undivided interests should see to it that the deed contains intelligible hints at least that there are equities, which a legal conveyance by one grantee may not impugn: Van Slyck v. Skinner, 41 M. 186.

91. Where nothing in the record of the conveyance or conveyances to several persons of land in undivided interests indicates that they are not tenants in common, a mortgagee or grantee from one of them is not affected by partnership equities whereof he has no notice: Adams v. Bradley, 12 M. 346; Reynolds v. Ruckman, 35 M. 80; Van Slyck v. Skinner, 41 M. 186; Hammon v. Paxton, 58 M. 893.

92. As against any latent equities or parol agreements between a life-tenant and the remainder-man, whereby a building erected by the latter is to be personal property, one who takes a mortgage of the land from the latter while the latter is in possession is a bona fide purchaser, and the tenant is confined to his record title: Stevens v. Rose, 69 M. 259 (April 6, '88).

93. The subsequent grantees or encumbrancers of mortgaged premises have a right to rely upon the record as determining the amount of the mortgagee's claim. They will not be charged with notice of the conditions of the bond, to which the mortgage is collateral, but which are not expressed in the mortgage, though these of course will determine the rights existing between mortgager and mortgagee; and they will also be entitled to presume that payments made to the mortgager are applied upon the mortgage as it appears of record: Payne v. Avery, 21 M. 524.

94. The record of a mortgage given to secure future liabilities or advances which it is optional with the mortgagee to incur or advance is notice to a subsequent purchaser of the premises; but he is chargeable with notice only to the extent of the liabilities actually incurred prior to his purchase: Ladue v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 18 M. 880.

95. An agreement to mortgage premises to secure an indebtedness not then existing was acknowledged by the party only to whom the mortgage was to be given, and was recorded. Held, that the record could not operate as constructive notice to any one claiming as subsequent purchaser or encumbrancer from the party who was to give the mortgage: Farmers', etc. Bank v. Bronson, 14 M. 361.

96. The record, in the registry of deeds, of a lease of a building, which lease by its terms provided that machinery attached by the lessee should be treated as personalty, is not notice to third persons of the existence of a lessor's lien upon such machinery: Booth v. Oliver, 67 M. 664.

97. H. S. § 5687, which provides that the recording an assignment of a mortgage shall not be deemed such notice to the mortgagor as to invalidate payments by him to the mortgagee, applies to a constructive payment; e. g., where, to get rid of the mortgage, he deeds the land on payment by another: Goodale v. Patterson, 51 M. 532.

98. Under H. S. § 6119 a certificate of a sheriff's sale of lands on execution is, when recorded, entitled to the same record privileges as any other "conveyance" (see H. S. § 5689) of land; and its record is constructive notice to subsequent purchasers: Atwood v. Bearss, 45 M. 469; Drake v. McLean, 47 M. 102.

99. Whether the record of a tax-title is constructive notice that the holder claims the land on which it rests, quere: La Coss v. Wadsworth, 56 M. 421.

100. A recorded plat is notice only of the platting and consequent dedication to the public of such interests only as the grantor possesses, and is not notice of any conveyance to private parties merely implied upon its face or in the acknowledgment: Burton v. Martz, 38 M. 761.

101. Where an error in a deed appears by construction, the record of the deed is notice to subsequent purchasers of the real land intended: Anderson v. Baughman, 7 M. 69.

102. A contract to give a mortgage was put upon record, but, by mistake in drafting it, only the starting-point in the description of lands was given. A mortgage upon the lands intended to be described was subsequently given and placed upon record. It was held that the record of the contract was not notice to the mortgagee, since no one could say from the contract what was the specific land upon which the mortgage mentioned in it was to be given: Barrows v. Baughman, 9 M. 218.

103. Whether, where a description is so framed that it may be intended for one lot as well as another, the record of the instrument is not sufficient to put a purchaser of either upon inquiry, quere: Cooper v. Bigly, 13 M. 463. Subsequently held that it is not: Stead v. Grosfield, 67 M. 289.

104. The recording laws cannot be made by equitable construction to embrace cases not within them, or to give constructive notice of things the records do not show; where a mistake is made in recording, a subsequent purchaser has a right, in the absence of actual notice of the mistake, to rely on the records as showing the exact facts: Barnard v. Campau, 29 M. 162.

105. Where the mortgagee's name was omitted in copying a mortgage into the record, constructive notice to subsequent purchasers was supplied by the entry-book (which contained such name) and the record-book taken together: Sinclair v. Slawson, 44 M. 128.

106. A sheriff's notice of levy on execution, if filed and indexed as provided in H. S. § 6173, is constructive notice of the levy and of the execution creditor's rights and lien thereunder: Ward v. Citizens' Bank, 46 M. 832.

107. But to make such notice of levy constructive notice to subsequent purchasers, the description of the premises in the levy and notice must be sufficiently definite and certain to inform the public as to what particular land has been levied on: Burrowes v. Gibson, 42 M. 121; Davis Sewing Machine Co. v. Whitney, 61 M. 518.

108. And in a case where the notice of levy filed with the register omitted a portion of the lands levied on, it was held that a subsequent purchaser was not affected with notice: Campau v. Barnard, 25 M. 384; Barnard v. Campau, 29 M. 162.

109. Filing in the register's office a certified copy of an attachment levy does not, it seems, operate as constructive notice to third parties; certainly not as to those whose rights have previously accrued: Columbia Bank v. Jacobs, 10 M. 349; Millar v. Babcock, 25 M. 137; French v. De Bow, 38 M. 708.

110. Nor, under the laws of 1841, was the deposit of a certificate of levy upon execution in such office notice to bona fide purchasers: Campau v. Barnard, 25 M. 384.

111. The record of a conveyance or encumbrance is not constructive notice to a prior encumbrancer: James v. Brown, 11 M. 25; Cooper v. Bigly, 13 M. 463; Woods v. Love, 27 M. 308; Dewey v. Ingersoll, 42 M. 17.

112. Therefore a prior mortgagee need not examine the records before releasing portions of the mortgaged premises, unless he has notice enough to put a prudent man on inquiry: James v. Brown, 11 M. 25; Cooper v. Bigly, 13 M. 463; Dewey v. Ingersoll, 42 M. 17.

As to what constitutes such notice, see MORTGAGES, §§ 463, 464.

113. A sheriff's certificate of an execution sale is not constructive notice to prior mortgagees, though regularly filed in the register's office; and an execution purchaser cannot, by reason of the filing of such certificate, be authorized to attack a foreclosure in chancery to which he was not made a defendant: Woods v. Love, 27 M. 308.

114. The constructive notice furnished by the record of a mortgage will not prevent suit for false representations to a purchaser as to absence of encumbrances: Weber v. Weber, 47 M. 569.

That one is affected with notice of all that is contained in the recorded title whereunder he purchases, see NOTICE, §§ 74-85.

115. One who relies upon the records for the authenticity and validity of a deed does not stand in as favorable a position as does a good-faith holder of negotiable paper; and if the deed is a forgery, the question of good faith does not arise: McGinn v. Tobey, 62 M. 252. See NOTICE, §§ 113, 114.

(c) Record as evidence.

116. In the absence of a statute authorizing it the record of a deed is not primary evidence of the existence and genuineness of the original: Brown v. Cady, 11 M. 535; Bradley v. Silsbee, 33 M. 328.

117. The record of an instrument entitled by law to be recorded is prima facie evidence of the execution of the instrument: Bassett v. Hathaway, 9 M. 28.

118. The registry of a deed not entitled to be recorded is not evidence: Buell v. Irwin, 24 M. 145; Pope v. Cutler, 34 M. 150; Van Auken v. Monroe, 38 M. 725.

119. The record of a deed not properly executed is unauthorized, and cannot prove the existence of the original: Brown v. Cady, 11 M. 535; Farmers', etc. Bank v. Bronson, 14 M. 361.

120. Though in fact recorded, an unacknowledged deed cannot be proved by the record: People v. Marion, 29 M. 31.

121. An unauthorized record of a plat is not evidence of the validity and execution of the plat: Grand Rapids v. Hastings, 36 M. 122.

122. A book of plats, found in the office of the register of deeds, purporting to be plats of the various townships of the county, with the names of purchasers of sections and parts of sections marked thereon, is not evidence, as no law requires it to be kept in the registry: Smith v. Lawrence, 12 M. 431.

123. An entry which the register is not authorized or required to make is not evidence, though actually made by him: Ives v. Kimball, 1 M. 308; Farmers', etc. Bank v. Bronson, 14 M. 361.

124. Whether the want of any marks indicating seals, opposite the signatures in the record of a mortgage, is proof that none were attached to the original, and would prevent the record, or a copy thereof, being evidence, quere: Farmers', etc. Bank v. Bronson, 14 M. 361.

125. Under the laws in force in 1830 as to the execution, sealing and registry of deeds, the absence from the record of a deed of any trace of the "device by way of seal" which a grantor was authorized to adopt as a sufficient seal does not warrant an inference that the original was unsealed, or justify the rejection of the record as evidence: Starkweather v. Martin, 28 M. 471.

126. Where a deed covering lands in different counties is recorded in one of them, a certified transcript of the record from that county is admissible in evidence in every part of the state: Wilt v. Cutler, 38 M. 189.

127. But the record in one county of a certified copy of the record in another county of a deed is not evidence of such deed: Shotwell v. Harrison, 22 M. 410.

128. In the absence of a statute authorizing it, a certified copy of a record, in the office of the secretary of state, of a state patent, is not primary evidence: Bradley v. Silsbee, 33 M. 328.

Record not excluded because made after suit begun: See EJECTMENT, § 181.

That unauthorized record may be used as secondary evidence of lost original, see EVIDENCE, § 1200.

As to proof by copy of record, see EVIDENCE, §§ 1184, 1185, 1193, 1194.

IV. WHO PROTECTED AGAINST UNRECORDED INSTRUMENTS.

(a) *In general; subsequent purchasers.*¹

129. Where a party claims priority under the recording laws he must show a compliance with their provisions in order to entitle him to such priority: Thompson v. Mack, H. 150.

130. He who claims the benefit of the registry laws must bring himself within them: Sinclair v. Slawson, 44 M. 123.

131. One who relies upon the recording laws to take from the real owner an actual title must make a case strictissimi juris and bring it within the statute in every particular; otherwise he can have no protection: Heim v. Ellis, 49 M. 241.

132. One who seeks a benefit from the recording laws must incur all risks of the failure to put his papers properly on record, whether the fault be his or an officer's: Barnard v. Campau, 29 M. 163.

133. Where a purchaser under a second mortgage seeks relief against one who holds under a first mortgage, on the ground that the first was not filed or recorded until after the second, he must establish the case made by his bill or he cannot have relief: Hoffman v. McMorran, 53 M. 318.

134. The defence of a bona fide purchase for a valuable consideration can only be made by the purchaser himself or by some one claiming through his purchase: Blanchard v. Tyler, 12 M. 339.

135. By "subsequent purchaser" against whom, if his conveyance has been duly recorded, H. S. § 5683 avoids an unrecorded conveyance, is meant a subsequent purchaser from the same grantor: Smith v. Williams, 44 M. 240.

136. A tenant in common whose interest becomes severed by partition is a "purchaser for value" of the interest of his co-tenants in the lands set apart to him, so as to be protected against a previous execution, levy and sale of which he has no notice: Campau v. Barnard, 25 M. 381.

137. Attaching or judgment execution creditors are not "purchasers," within the meaning of the recording law, until the property attached or levied on has been sold in pursuance of law and has been purchased in by them: Columbia Bank v. Jacobs, 10 M. 349. (But see H. S. § 6173 as to the constructive notice now given by filing levy of execution.)

138. Therefore, before that time, they are not protected against prior unrecorded defeasances: Ibid.

139. By filing an attachment levy or by levying execution one does not become a bona fide purchaser so as to entitle him to object to the restoration of a third person's mortgages upon the land, which, by mistake of fact, were discharged of record before the execution levy: French v. De Bow, 38 M. 708.

140. One who bids in lands under an execution sale becomes a "purchaser" within the meaning of the registry laws, even though he does not yet receive the sheriff's deed; and if he records his certificate of sale he is entitled to protection against subsequent purchasers until he can receive his deed: Atwood v. Bearss, 45 M. 469; Drake v. McLean, 47 M. 102.

141. Purchasers or encumbrancers who become such after the discharge of a mortgage is recorded are entitled to the same protection that the recording laws afford to subsequent purchasers or encumbrancers in good faith as against unrecorded conveyances; they can be affected only by actual notice, or notice of such facts as should put them on inquiry: Ferguson v. Glassford, 68 M. 36.

142. Where a mortgage is left unrecorded, and the mortgager's heirs give a second mortgage, which is put on record, an assignee of the second mortgage, who takes it in good faith for a full consideration actually paid, and without any notice, actual or constructive, that any claim exists against the premises, and whose assignment has also been recorded, is protected and given precedence by H. S. § 5683: Burns v. Berry, 43 M. 176.

143. Purchasers in good faith, etc., under a deed recorded before an earlier mortgage are protected: Shelden v. Warner, 45 M. 633.

144. A bona fide purchaser of the fee without notice, under a deed recorded before notice of a builder's prior lien is filed, is protected against such lien as he would be against a mortgage not recorded until after his record: Sisson v. Holcomb, 58 M. 634.

145. A subsequent bona fide purchaser whose deed is recorded is protected against a claim of dower that depends solely on a prior unrecorded deed to claimant's husband: Wheeler v. Smith, 55 M. 355.

146. A bona fide purchaser of land without notice is protected against a prior unrecorded sale of the timber the same as against any other unrecorded instrument: Russell v. Myers, 32 M. 522.

147. An attachment was levied in October, 1840, and sale thereunder was made in February, 1842, the deed not being recorded until 1863; held, that a bona fide purchaser whose deed was recorded in 1843 was protected: Millar v. Babcock, 25 M. 187.

148. Though he himself has notice, the grantee, immediate or mediate, of a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, is protected against an unrecorded instrument that would not have bound such purchaser: Godfroy v. Disbrow, W. 260; Shotwell v. Harrison, 22 M. 410.

(b) Purchasers for valuable consideration.

149. As against a prior unrecorded deed a purchase in good faith and for a valuable consideration are necessary to give a later unrecorded one priority, and these are in their nature distinct questions: Shotwell v. Harrison, 22 M. 410.

150. To constitute a bona fide purchaser one must have paid the purchase money before notice: Thomas v. Stone, W. 117; Dixon v. Hill, 5 M. 404; Warner v. Whittaker, 6 M. 183; Blanchard v. Tyler, 12 M. 339; Stone v. Welling, 14 M. 514; Palmer v. Williams, 24 M. 328.

See CHATTEL MORTGAGES, § 85.

151. If a part has been paid before notice and part remains unpaid, the purchaser is protected in what he has paid but not in subsequent payments: Thomas v. Stone, W. 117; Kohl v. Lynn, 34 M. 380.

152. In equity a bona fide purchaser is protected to the extent of the payments actually made, and no further, even when future payments are provided for, unless those are secured in such a manner that the purchaser cannot be relieved against them: Dixon v. Hill, 5 M. 404.

153. A contract purchaser without a deed is protected by his good faith only so far as he has made payments, if meanwhile he has notice of litigation involving the validity of his vendor's title: Dickinson v. Wright, 56 M. 42.

154. One who claims as a bona fide purchaser, but who has only given his notes, must also show that he had made payment thereon before notice of the defect in his grantor's title: Matson v. Melchor, 42 M. 477.

155. On dismissal of a foreclosure bill as against a subsequent bona fide purchaser who has not made full payment, he may still be held for such sums as remain due after he has been notified of complainant's equities: Sheldon v. Holmes, 58 M. 188.

156. One who buys securities that are not delivered to him, and only makes a nominal payment until after receiving notice of another's interest in them, is not entitled to protection as a bona fide purchaser: Haescig v. Brown, 34 M. 503.

157. Where land is purchased on which there is an unrecorded mortgage, of which the purchaser had no notice, but of which he is notified before a mortgage given by him for purchase money is paid, any payment made by him on his own mortgage after such notice is made in his own wrong, and he is not protected, as to such payment, against the unrecorded mortgage: Warner v. Whittaker, 6 M. 183.

158. Where defendant gave his note, not negotiable, for land of which complainant held a prior unrecorded deed, but was fully informed of complainant's equities before making payment of the note, it was held that he could not claim the protection of a bona fide purchaser: Blanchard v. Tyler, 12 M. 339.

159. One who takes a deed of land in absolute payment of a debt due him, or who discharges and pays a note for the maker, whereof he is surety, as the consideration for such deed, is a purchaser for value: Hanold v. Kays, 64 M. 489. (This case cites Baker v. Pierson, 5 M. 456, as holding that one who takes a mortgage given for a precedent debt is a purchaser for value.)

160. A mere executory agreement to surrender to the grantor indebtedness owing by him to the grantee and others is not, while remaining wholly unexecuted, such a valuable consideration as to make the grantee a bona fide purchaser as against a prior mortgage not recorded when the deed was given: Stone v. Welling, 14 M. 514.

161. Where, as security simply for a precedent debt, a conveyance of premises upon which stands a mortgage, valid between the original parties, is given to one who has been led to believe the mortgage satisfied, it does not place the grantee, who has relinquished no remedy and lost no advantage by taking such conveyance, in the position of a bona fide purchaser for value, or clothe him with equities superior to those of such mortgagee, even though he acted in good faith and without notice: Boxheimer v. Gunn, 24 M. 372.

162. It seems that where the consideration is merely a past indebtedness the purchaser is not entitled to be regarded as a bona fide purchaser: Battershall v. Stephens, 34 M. 68, 74.

163. Where a chattel mortgage taken merely as security for a pre-existing debt was filed shortly before the filing of another mortgage given on the same property four days earlier, the mortgage first dated was given priority: People's Savings Bank v. Bates, 120 U. S. 556.

164. To constitute one a purchaser for value he need not pay all that the land is worth: Boydson v. Goodrich, 49 M. 65.

165. And where a son claimed protection as a bona fide purchaser from his father against the reinstatement of a mortgage inadvertently discharged, the fact that he paid only three-fifths of the value of the land did not defeat his claim: Sheldon v. Holmes, 58 M. 188.

166. The burden of proof is on the defendant, who claims title by virtue of priority of record, against a prior but unrecorded deed, to show affirmatively the payment of a valuable consideration, and that by some other evidence than the mere recital of it in the deed: Shotwell v. Harrison, 22 M. 410.

167. A previous unrecorded conveyance is valid as against a subsequent purchaser from the same grantor, unless he shows payment of the purchase price; the mere institution of a suit to quiet title does not make him a bona fide purchaser: Smith v. Williams, 44 M. 240.

(c) Purchasers in good faith.

As to what notice is afforded by record, see supra, III, (b).

As to notice generally, see NOTICE, I.

As to notice imparted by possession, see NOTICE, §§ 49-78.

As to notice imparted by recitals in deeds, etc., see NOTICE, §§ 74-84.

168. A subsequent purchaser whose deed is first recorded is presumed to be a bona fide purchaser without notice until the contrary appears: Godfroy v. Disbrow, W. 260.

169. A subsequent purchaser's "good faith," in the meaning of H. S. § 5683, is not required to be shown by him otherwise than by proof of the record, upon which he had a right to rely if he had no notice of the prior deed aside from the record: Shotwell v. Harrison, 22 M. 410.

170. And if he had such notice it must be shown by the party claiming under the prior recorded deed: Ibid.

171. The burden of proving notice, either actual or constructive, of a prior unrecorded deed is on the party claiming thereunder: Larzelere v. Starkweather, 88 M. 96.

172. One who seeks, as against a subsequent purchaser, to have a mistake in the description of the land in his unrecorded mortgage corrected, must show that the purchaser had notice of the mortgage when he bought: Hanold v. Kays, 64 M. 439.

173. The same principle applies in favor of an execution purchaser who records his certificate of sale in advance of previous conveyances from the debtor to third persons: Atwood v. Bearss, 45 M. 469.

174. Good faith is not less important than the payment of value in determining whether one is a bona fide purchaser; and it is not to be determined alone upon the party's testimony that he acted in good faith: Oliver v. Sanborn, 60 M. 846.

175. And whether one is a purchaser in good faith does not necessarily involve any question as to his integrity or the morality of his conduct in procuring a conveyance: Battershall v. Stephens, 84 M. 68.

176. The question of good faith is one to be determined from all the circumstances: Miller v. Clark, 56 M. 387.

177. Under our statutes the mere fact that the deed set up against the unrecorded conveyance is a quitclaim does not show that the grantee therein is not a purchaser in good faith. (The supreme court of the United States holds that one who takes by quitclaim is not a bona fide purchaser: See NOTICE, § 111): Battershall v. Stephens, 84 M. 68.

178. But a purely speculative purchase by quitclaim, where neither party supposed that a good title was being dealt with, and where the consideration was an indefinite sum, depending upon the grantee's outlays in securing a perfect title, did not constitute a bona fide purchase for value: Ibid.

179. If one buys a speculative title, knowing or having notice of an outstanding one, he is not a purchaser in good faith: Miller v. Clark, 56 M. 387.

180. Whether an unrecorded deed is void as against a subsequent recorded one that is a mere quitclaim of such interest as remains in the grantor, and that follows mesne conveyances to persons who were affected by notice of the first grantee's rights, quere; the court being equally divided: De Veaux v. Fosbender, 57 M. 579.

181. One who purchases lands omitted by mistake from a notice of levy on execution filed by the sheriff with the register of deeds is a purchaser without notice, although the indorsement of the levy on the execution mentions such lands with the rest: Campau v. Barnard, 25 M. 381.

182. And a mere oral statement to him by the execution creditor that such premises have been levied upon, without any suggestion that a mistake had been made in such notice, would only make it his duty to search the records before purchasing; if the records show a notice of a levy on other lands, but not on those in question, he may rely on the record as correct rather than the oral statement: Barnard v. Campau, 29 M. 162.

183. But if a deed that has been incorrectly recorded is shown to a prospective purchaser of the land conveyed by it, or if, in this case, the sheriff had shown the execution and the levy upon the land in question thereon indorsed, whether such positive and unequivocal notice would have any effect as against the record, quere: Ibid.

184. One who has notice of a prior unrecorded deed cannot, without further inquiry, rely upon a search of the records and the fact that no such deed is found recorded; and one who purchases with such notice and upon such search is not entitled to be considered a bona fide purchaser: Shotwell v. Harrison, 30 M. 179.

185. A person who, when he buys, has knowledge of an unrecorded deed, is bound by it as much as if it were on record: Farmers', etc. Bank v. Bronson, 14 M. 361.

186. A person who, at the time of receiving a deed from another, knows him to have no title, or has notice of his want of title, cannot be a bona fide purchaser under the recording laws, whether the real owner of the title is known to him or not: Fitzhugh v. Barnard, 12 M. 104.

187. A purchaser who has notice that another has claims upon the property, and that certain unrecorded papers relating thereto have been executed, and still, without seeing those papers, or inquiring into the nature of such claims, sees fit to buy upon the assumption that they relate only to a mortgage of record in favor of the same person, is not entitled to protection as a bona fide purchaser against such claims: Hosley v. Holmes, 27 M. 416.

188. Priority of record will not avail one who takes a deed from heirs of a deceased person with notice of a claim under a prior unrecorded deed from his grantor's ancestor; his failure to find the prior deed in the registry would give him no legal right to suppose such claim to be unfounded: Munroe v. Eastman, 31 M. 283.

189. One cannot be a bona fide purchaser of land which his grantor informs him has been conveyed to another: Oliver v. Sanborn, 60 M. 346.

190. Where a mortgage had been discharged of record by mistake, an abstract of title showing such discharge did not protect a subsequent purchaser who, when he bought, was informed by the mortgager that the mortgage was still outstanding and was held by a person named: Ferguson v. Glassford, 68 M. 36.

191. One who advanced money without security to enable another to purchase land which he had reason to believe was sold in fraud of the rights of a former contract purchaser was held to be without any equities as a bona fide encumbrancer on the land to secure his loan: Simon v. Brown, 38 M. 552.

192. As against a grantee who seeks to have correction of mistakes in his deed, a subsequent grantee from the same person is not a bona fide purchaser if he knew of the mistake before he bought: Kinyon v. Young, 44 M. 339.

193. He is not a bona fide purchaser who accepts a deed of land knowing of the existence of a prior unrecorded contract of his grantor for the sale of the land, and who fails to inquire of the vendee in such contract in regard to his claims (see NOTICE, § 106): Hains v. Hains, 69 M. 581.

194. And it makes no difference that the contract (which was executed prior to H. S. §§ 5709-5713) has no certificate of acknowledgment, and was not, therefore, entitled to record: Ibid.

195. Where a son has bought land from his father, the mere fact of the relationship does not show that he should not claim the rights of a bona fide purchaser against reinstatement of an inadvertently discharged mortgage given by his father to a third person: Sheldon v. Holmes, 58 M. 138.

196. Notice to a subsequent mortgagee of a prior unrecorded deed is not made out by proof of blind remarks and of ambiguous and misleading hints, not understood by him in such sense as to put him on inquiry: Shepard v. Shepard, 36 M. 178.

197. A statute (c. g., R. S. 1838, p. 260, § 25) requiring actual notice to validate an unrecorded conveyance excludes constructive notice, such as notice from possession in fact not known, or from filing attachment levy and sale thereunder: Hubbard v. Smith, 2 M. 207; Millar v. Babcock, 25 M. 187.

198. The question of a subsequent purchaser's good faith does not arise where his deed was not in fact recorded first: Shelden v. Warner, 45 M. 638.

199. Or where his deed is forged: McGinn v. Tobey, 62 M. 252. See NOTICE, §§ 113, 114.

RECOUPMENT.

1. Recoupment is equivalent to a cross-action: Allen v. McKibbin, 5 M. 449; Widrig v. Taggart, 51 M. 103.

2. It cannot, therefore, be enforced against an infant: Widrig v. Taggart, 51 M. 103.

3. Nor can a claim of recoupment be based upon breach of a contract void because made on Sunday: Brazee v. Bryant, 50 M. 136.

4. Or void because made ultra vires by a corporation (see CORPORATIONS, § 128): Day v. Spiral Springs Buggy Co., 57 M. 146.

That the vendee in a land contract, when sued for a balance due, may show by way of recoupment that value of land was lessened through destruction of timber by fire pending suit involving validity of plaintiff's title, see VENDORS, § 146.

As to recoupment of damages and notice thereof, see DAMAGES, §§ 143, 150, 188, 502-538. See, also, CERTIORARI, § 182; COSTS, § 22; ERROR, § 816; PLEADINGS, § 831; SALES, § 165.

II. REPORT; REQUIREMENTS AND EFFECT OF.
III. PROCEEDINGS AFTER REPORT MADE.

As to references in chancery, see EQUITY, XI, (e).

I. APPOINTMENT OF REFEREE; EXECUTION OF POWERS.

1. Even on stipulation of the parties a judge cannot appoint himself referee in a cause pending in his own court: Woodin v. Phoenix, 41 M. 655.

2. If a reference is improperly made the remedy seems to be by mandamus to set it aside, not by certiorari: Ibid.

3. Where a cause is referred, by consent, to a particular person, the court cannot appoint a new referee except by consent: Smith v. Warner, 14 M. 152.

4. H. S. § 7378, providing that a case in the circuit court cannot be referred without the consent of the parties, if within ten days after joining issue either has filed with the clerk a demand for jury trial, does not apply where issue was joined in justice's court, and on appeal the demand was filed under rule 61 by the first day of the term for which the case was noticed for trial, and on or before the first call of the calendar: Odell v. Reynolds, 40 M. 21.

5. A reference may rest on the written consent of the parties (H. S. § 7877): Bewick v. Fletcher, 89 M. 25.

6. A stipulation for a reference is not operative after judgment, and does not return a case, on reversal, to the referee. The case is simply remitted to the court: Hopkins v. Sanford, 41 M. 248.

7. The omission to enter an order of reference is cured by the statute of amendments (H. S. §§ 7634-7636): Bewick v. Fletcher, 89 M. 25.

8. A referee is not a judge, and does not act judicially in the strict sense of the term: Underwood v. McDuffee, 15 M. 361; People v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 18 M. 483.

9. Referees need not be sworn: Underwood v. McDuffee, 15 M. 361.

10. If the referee declines to proceed, relief must be asked in the circuit court to have the cause expedited: Abbott v. Mathews, 26 M. 176.

11. A referee can adjourn the proceedings on the reference as convenience requires, so long as the adjournments are consistent with law and practice: Campau v. Brown, 48 M. 145.

12. A reference must be conducted like a trial by a court, and contemplates the introduction of testimony with rulings and findings of fact and law subject to revision for errors; and it will not sustain judgment unless it conforms to the statute: Gibson v. Burrows, 41 M. 718.

13. If plaintiff fails to appear before the referee he will be nonsuited: Abbott v. Mathews, 26 M. 176.

14. The allowance of leading questions by a referee is not assignable as error, but in extreme cases may warrant an appeal to the discretion of the circuit court to avoid the decision: Campau v. Brown, 48 M. 145.

15. The referee must find the facts and the law separately: Smith v. Warner, 14 M. 152.

16. But classing a conclusion as to intent as one of law is a mere irregularity: Ferris v. Quimby, 41 M. 202.

17. The fact that references are not compulsory does not prevent them from being considered as a mode of trial authorized by law, and not to be treated with disfavor: People v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 18 M. 483.

II. REPORT; REQUIREMENTS AND EFFECT OF.

18. A stipulation to refer contained a direction to the referee to report within a certain time. He did not report until much later. Held, that a party by opposing a motion to set aside this report waived any objection for delay: Bewick v. Fletcher, 89 M. 25.

19. After a referee had closed the proofs, made his accounting and drafted his report, he was held not disqualified from completing it by stating what he thought the result would be in the circuit court: Heath v. Waters, 40 M. 457.

20. A referee is bound to decide according to the weight of evidence: Danaher v. Ward's Estate, 40 M. 800.

21. But by electing to refer, the party loses his right to complain that the referee's finding is against the weight of evidence: People v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 18 M. 483.

22. A finding of facts is not merely a narration of evidence, but must determine what is proved: Downey v. Andrus, 43 M. 65.

23. A referee is not required to supplement his general finding by answers to specific questions dictated by counsel: Odd Fellows v. Morrison, 42 M. 521.

24. A finding that defendant purchased a bakery is specific enough to include the oven and oven fixtures, and authorize a finding of the value of the fixtures: Neib v. Hinderer, 42 M. 451.

25. In finding the cost price of a stock of groceries, a referee may find the quantity and price of the different articles by name, even though he does not expressly find that each article enumerated constitutes a part of the stock; and though the testimony cannot be resorted to in aid of the finding, if it appears on inspection that the articles named are usually classed as groceries, the finding may be sustained, and it cannot be assumed that the referee included articles not within the contract of purchase: Ibid.

26. A referee, after finding that defendant had agreed to pay the cost price of certain articles, found what their "value" was according to a certain exhibit not set forth in the record. Held, that all reasonable intendments must be made in support of the finding and judgment, and that in the absence of a demand for a more specific finding it might be properly assumed that he used the word "value" to signify "cost price:" Ibid.

27. The statement in a referee's report, "I do not find" that plaintiff knew certain facts, is not equivalent to a direct finding that plaintiff did not know the facts mentioned; and it is defective: Mason Lumber Co. v. Buchtel, 101 U. S. 633.

28. A referee's statement of his conclusion as to what sums he should allow is not a finding of facts and will not sustain a judgment; there should also be such a statement as would show they were legitimate: Weirich v. Cook, 39 M. 134.

29. If the report is so defective that the court cannot ascertain the merits of the case no judgment should be rendered upon it: Carroll v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 19 M. 94.

30. Where, in an action to recover damages for the breach of a building contract, a referee's report finds as facts that a contract was made which was abandoned and broken, and that damages resulted, the conclusion of liability for an amount stated is not open to the general objection that it is inconsistent with the findings of fact, in the absence of any exception to any of the items found: Bevier v. Wright, 30 M. 484.

31. The statement in the report of a referee that he cannot find upon certain suggested questions of fact is not subject to exception where it does not appear that a finding on such questions was essential, or that there was evidence before the referee on which such a finding was practicable: Cook v. Stevenson, 30 M. 242.

32. Objections to the proceedings before a referee, on matters of practice, must be taken by exception as in trials at the circuit. And after his report is filed all exceptions not taken before him must be confined to his conclusions of law, his finding of facts being then conclusive: Abbott v. Mathews, 26 M. 176.

33. Where the report of a referee is not excepted to, it will stand as the finding or determination of the court for the purpose of enabling the party in whose favor it is made to take judgment upon it as of course: Amboy, L. & T. B. R. Co. v. Byerly, 18 M. 439.

34. The finding of a referee, upon which judgment has been rendered, constitutes, like the verdict of a jury, an essential part of the record of a case, and is conclusive as to the facts found in all subsequent controversies between the parties on the same contract: Mason Lumber Co. v. Buchtel, 101 U. S. 633.

III. PROCEEDINGS AFTER REPORT MADE.

35. Where, under H. S. § 7386, a cause is referred by the circuit court to auditors, the account stated and reported by the auditors, and nothing else, is made evidence for either party who may see fit to use it on the trial. If neither party uses it it is not evidence in the cause. Deposition taken by the auditors and returned into court with their report, but not attached to the report or forming any part of it, cannot be used as evidence on the trial: Beard v. Spalding, 12 M. 309.

36. The setting aside of a reference upon cause shown is such interlocutory action as is within the legitimate discretion of the circuit judge, and will not be reviewed on mandamus: Taylor v. Osceola Circuit Judge, 30 M. 99.

37. The circuit court, after report of a referee has been filed in court, cannot, on his application, refer the case back to enable him to review his conclusions upon the facts: Smith v. Warner, 14 M. 152.

38. It is only when exceptions have been taken that the cause can be referred back. Such reference back takes the whole case before the referee for consideration. Separate portions of the report cannot be referred back by themselves: Ibid.

39. But the court can, on motion, recommit a report to a referee for the correction of an error: Bewick v. Fletcher, 39 M. 25.

40. Where an omission in the report is complained of, the remedy is by seeking a further finding, not by excepting to the report: Mason v. Fractional School District, 34 M. 228.

41. The court may properly send back a referee's report to be completed, even if it has not been excepted to, where all that is needed is to correct a mere inadvertent omission that can be supplied from the exhibits attached to the report: Bryant v. Hendee, 40 M. 548.

42. A motion to send back for amendment a bill of exceptions in a case pending on a referee's report was properly denied where no defects were pointed out: Cool v. Snover, 88 M. 562.

43. Formal defects in a referee's report should be called to the attention of the trial court; they cannot be considered for the first time in the supreme court: Mason Lumber Co. v. Buchtel, 101 U. S. 638.

44. On writ of error to review the confirmation of the report the supreme court has no power to have such report made more full and perfect: Campau v. Brown, 48 M. 145.

45. Whether a special reference should be rescinded entirely upon setting aside the report of the referee, quere: Smith v. Warner, 14 M. 152.

46. There can be no new trial on the ground that the report is against the weight of evidence: People v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 18 M. 488.

47. When the report is wholly set aside the cause stands in the same condition as if it had never been tried, and no judgment can be rendered until a new trial is had: Rice v. Benedict, 18 M. 75.

48. Where, in a case that was tried before a referee, judgment is reversed and a new trial ordered by the supreme court, the case does not go again before the referee, but stands for trial in the usual manner in the court below: Hopkins v. Sanford, 41 M. 248.

49. A party who excepts to the conclusions of law in a report of a referee, and makes no complaint of irregularities in the reference proceeding, waives all objections to such irregularities: Abbott v. Mathews, 26 M. 176.

50. The supreme court will not go back of the finding of a referee to infer or imagine illegalities undisclosed thereby. Where a report found that a public improvement had been ordered and contracted for by a common council, the objection that it had not been shown that the city contracted duly and with all legal requisites was not considered: Bissell v. Collins, 28 M. 277.

51. A bill of exceptions settled before a referee performs the same office for the purposes of a writ of error as a bill settled upon a trial before the circuit judge: Altman v. Wheeler, 18 M. 240.

As to review in supreme court of reference cases, and as to when findings are conclusive, see ERROR, §§ 20, 160, 184, 298, 300, 350-357, 417, 431-438, 674, 716.

REGISTER OF DEEDS.

1. When an equal division of votes for the office of register of deeds appears, and lots are drawn as provided by H. S. § 188, the losing party is not precluded from contesting the validity of the election: Keeler v. Robertson, 27 M. 116.

2. As the common-law right to inspect public records and to make copies or abstracts thereof is confined to those who have some interest therein, and as H. S. § 5721, to "facilitate the inspection of the records and files in the offices of the registers of deeds," does not extend the right to other persons, the register is not compelled to permit copying, etc., by parties who are compiling a set of abstract books for selling abstracts of title: Webber v. Townley, 43 M. 534.

3. A foreign corporation claiming to have and to be constantly purchasing large interests in lands in a certain county, and to need a complete system of abstracts for the sake of protecting its rights, was denied a mandamus to compel the register to allow it to copy the records, where it showed no charter power to deal in land titles: Diamond Match Co. v. Powers, 51 M. 145.

4. Where a register of deeds who has received a conveyance not officially, but as a private person to hold it in escrow, is forbidden by the grantor to record it, the grantee cannot have a mandamus to compel him to do so: Austin v. Register of Deeds, 41 M. 723.

5. Act 262 of 1887 is entitled "An act to provide for reporting all mortgages by the several registers of deeds of the state to the supervisors and assessing officers of their respective counties, and to the registers of deeds of other counties wherein the mortgagee resides, for assessment purposes, and providing blank form-books therefor; also prescribing the duties of registers of deeds relative to the recording of mortgages." Sec. 12 provides that no mortgage shall be recorded that does not give the mortgagee's name and residence. Held, that the act does not embrace more than one object, and that the title expresses the object: People v. Sanilac Supervisors, 71 M. 16.

As to the register's duties in recording, see RECORDING ACTS, II.

6. Having agreed to furnish an intending purchaser with a full abstract of title the register is liable for the damages caused by his negligent omission to mention an encumbrance: Smith v. Holmes, 54 M. 104.

As to evidence in action for such negligence, see EVIDENCE, §§ 375, 497.

Receipt by, of redemption money, see MORTGAGES, §§ 989-991.

RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

Sunday subscriptions for benefit of unincorporated church held valid, see CONTRACTS, §§ 187, 241.

1. Under R. S. 1846, ch. 52 (repealed and supplanted by act of Feb. 13, 1855, H. S. ch. 170), a Roman Catholic congregation could not be incorporated through lay trustees, as such incorporation would give the corporators power that the laws and usages of the church vest elsewhere, and would thus cut off the local congregation from the communion of the church at large—a result that the legislature could not have contemplated: Smith v. Bonhoof, 2 M. 115.

2. Said statute was permissive, not mandatory, as to incorporation by trustees, and under § 23 thereof the person or persons in whom such power was vested by the church laws might become incorporated: Ibid.

3. The incorporation of a religious society or church is not sufficiently shown by the fact of holding the ordinary meetings of religious societies and electing officers; such acts may be performed as well by unincorporated associations: Fredenburg v. Lyon Lake M. E. Church, 37 M. 476. Nor is the election of trustees to receive and hold property enough, of itself, to constitute an act of incorporation: Allen v. Duffie, 43 M. 1.

4. Supporting meetings, contracting debts suo nomine, receiving and expelling members, and being represented in annual conventions or conferences, do not constitute the exercising of corporate franchises and privileges so as to entitle a religious society to the presumption, after ten years (H. S. § 4649), of a legal incorporation: Newark Methodist Church v. Clark, 41 M. 730.

5. A religious society that in good faith has exercised corporate powers for ten years must be treated as a legal incorporation, even though the proceedings taken to incorporate it were in themselves fatally defective: Ionia Congregational Church v. Webber, 54 M. 571.

6. Though a religious society be a corporation by virtue merely of a ten-years' use of corporate franchises (H. S. § 4649), it has the title to all property conveyed to trustees for its use; and it cannot be displaced by a new incorporation unless all the members practically acquiesce: Dearborn Lutheran Church v. Rechlin, 49 M. 515.

7. Suit upon a subscription was brought in the name of several persons designated as trustees of a certain church. There was no averment or recital of incorporation. Held that, as it must be presumed, in such case, that no incorporation exists or is relied upon, the absence of proof of corporate existence was not fatal; and that the want of proof to show that plaintiffs were trustees in fact was not available if raised for the first time on error: Allen v. Duffie, 43 M. 1.

8. The trustees, and not the church or society, constitute the corporation: Walrath v. Campbell, 28 M. 111.

9. The church and corporation are distinct, and the latter cannot be held in damages for an expulsion by and from the former: Hardin v. Baptist Church, 51 M. 187.

10. A church or religious society having no property will not be compelled by mandamus to restore a member irregularly expelled, where it appears that he had acted in hostility to the association and that his restoration would be destructive to its interests: Meister v. Anshei Chessed Congregation, 37 M. 542.

11. The office of deacon is ecclesiastical, not statutory, and is controlled by the unincorporated membership of a religious association, the decision of whose tribunals upon the election thereto is final. And the fact that the deacons are authorized by statute to be ex officio trustees of the church on its civil incorporation makes no difference: Attorney-General v. Geerlings, 55 M. 562.

As to testing right to church offices, see QUO WARRANTO, §§ 24, 30-32.

12. The official character of church trustees may be proved by parol in collateral proceedings: Druse v. Wheeler, 22 M. 439; Walrath v. Campbell, 28 M. 111.

13. It must be presumed that when the trustees of a church, constituting the elective body, choose another trustee, they determine that he is in fact eligible; and his official authority cannot be questioned indirectly: Cicotte v. Ancieur, 53 M. 227.

14. Where there is no incorporation, property must be held for the church by trustees. A certificate from the preacher in charge of a Methodist church society, drawn in accordance with the discipline of the church and appointing certain named persons trustees of the society, was held sufficient to constitute them trustees to hold society property: Newark Methodist Church v. Clark, 41 M. 730.

15. Under H. S. § 4624, and the statute of uses, H. S. § 5565, the title to lands held in trust for a religious society at the time it is incorporated passes at once to the corporation: Ibid.

16. The right of occupancy and possession given by the statute to incorporated trustees is applicable solely to cases where the property is granted or devised directly to the church or congregation, or to another person in simple trust for the use of such church or congregation, and does not apply to property conveyed to a trustee of the grantor's own appointment in special trust (so held under R. S. 1846, ch. 52); nor could a court, under ch. 52, § 18, R. S. 1846, authorize a sale of property so conveyed. And under a special deed of trust, and in view of the laws and usages of the Roman Catholic church, it was held that the right to rent pews belonged to the parish priest and not to the trustees elected under said statute: Smith v. Bonhoof, 2 M. 115.

17. The trustees have the power to mortgage the personal property of the church or religious society without any direction or vote for that purpose. H. S. § 4625 applies only to mortgages of real estate: Walrath v. Campbell, 28 M. 111.

18. Under H. S. § 4625 the notice of the meeting of the trustees of a religious society to mortgage the real estate of the society must, as must the action taken, or any vote or direction given at the meeting, be proved by the written notice itself and the record of the meeting, and not by parol: Ibid.

19. Where it was claimed that a mortgage on church property had been given in consideration of the mortgagee's services as pastor, but there was no evidence that his salary had been fixed as required by H. S. § 4634, or that he had been regularly hired by the church, and no evidence of the value of his services, if any, it was held that no consideration for the mortgage was shown. And as the mortgagee had sworn that the mortgage was made with the express design of hindering another person from collecting a debt by execution against the society, it was held that the giving of the mortgage must be held a fraud against such person, until shown to be otherwise by proof of such consideration: Ibid.

20. The execution of a mortgage upon the property of the First Orthodox Congregational Society of Middleville, in the name of "the Trustees of the Orthodox Congregational Church of Middleville," is not such a misnomer as to invalidate the mortgage, where the identity of the society intended is clearly proved: Ibid.

21. H. S. § 4625 gives church trustees "authority, under the direction of the society, to sell and convey, mortgage or lease any real estate belonging to such society," providing "no such sale or conveyance" shall be made unless the assent of two-thirds of those present at any meeting specially called for the purpose should be obtained. Held, that this does not require a two-thirds vote as a condition to a mortgage: Scott v. Jackson Methodist Church, 50 M. 528.

22. H. S. § 4628 provides that any two of the trustees of a religious society may lawfully call a meeting of the trustees, a majority of whom, when lawfully convened, can do anything which the trustees are authorized to do. Held, that when two out of three trustees have come together without notice to any one else, and unite in executing a mortgage on the church property, they are lawfully convened for that purpose: Ibid.

23. A religious society's ratification of an act of its trustees need not be by a direct proceeding with an express intent to ratify, but may be effected indirectly and by acts of recognition or acquiescence, or acts inconsistent with repudiation or disapproval; as, by taking advantage of the act, permitting action to be taken on it without objection, or making payments in pursuance of it: Ibid.

24. A religious society that has power to direct its trustees to take action, and can assent thereto by a majority of its members, can ratify action which the trustees have taken without any preliminary direction or assent, and if no rights have intervened such ratification relates to the date of the act: Ibid.

25. Proof that the action of the trustees of a religious society in giving a mortgage has been ratified by the society is admissible under a foreclosure bill alleging that the society gave the mortgage: Ibid.

26. The corporation of Ste. Anne's Church, Detroit, held to have power to transfer by quitclaim certain land granted by the governor and judges: Cicotte v. Anciaux, 53 M. 227.

27. And it seems that a trustee of the church who had previously joined with the other trustees in getting leave from the courts to sell such property could not object to a sale on the ground that the corporation had no right to sell: Ibid.

28. H. S. § 8152, authorizing a court of equity to intervene at the instance of a single trustee in corporate matters, does not apply to religious corporations, but is chiefly designed to protect business corporations having stockholders with pecuniary interests involved: Ibid.

29. H. S. § 4661 forbids Episcopal churches to acquire title to land until their articles of organization are recorded. But the grantees of certain land deeded it as a church site for use of a congregation that did not organize until several years afterwards. After it was organized, however, the rector, who knew the facts, took from the successors of these persons, who were then the vestry of the church, a deed to a part of the land in satisfaction of a claim he had for unpaid salary. Held, that he was thereby estopped from afterwards suing the church for the amount unpaid, and the members of the vestry who had given the deed were also estopped from claiming that the amount had not been paid: Skinner v. Grace Church, 54 M. 543.

30. Where a trustee performs services for his church from kindly motives and with charitable intentions the law does not imply a promise to pay for them even though they are outside of his services as trustee: Cicotte v. St. Anne's Church, 60 M. 552.

31. It was error to allow a claim for services as sexton to one who at the time was a vestryman, and some of the time a senior warden and treasurer of the society, where the evidence clearly showed that the performance of the duty was voluntary and without expectation of recompense: St. Jude's Church v. Van Denberg, 81 M. 287.

32. An attorney at law who is trustee of a church may be employed specially or impliedly by his co-trustees to render professional services in regard to the church property, and may recover compensation therefor: Cicotte v. St. Anne's Church, 60 M. 552.

33. A bishop is not liable for the salary of a priest whom he has engaged; they are fellow-servants of the church, for which the bishop acts merely as a superior agent, and not as a principal: Rose v. Vertin, 46 M. 457.

34. Where a note reading "we promise to pay," etc., and not purporting to bind the corporation, is signed by individual names, to each of which is appended the words "vestryman, Grace church," it is the note not of the church or corporation but of the signers: Tilden v. Barnard, 43 M. 376.

35. Payment of church debts by a trustee was held to have been by way of gift and not to preclude foreclosure in behalf of the church of a mortgage against such trustee, though it had been given as additional security to a previous mortgage upon the church property: Carpenter v. Buttrick, 41 M. 706.

As to bequests to religious societies, see WILLS, §§ 50, 183, 298-297.

I. JURISDICTION.

1. In an action of replevin brought in the circuit court the declaration alleged the value of the property to be $100, and claimed damages for detention to a still larger amount. Plaintiff had recently bought the property at a price exceeding $100, and defendant had taken it from his possession without his consent. The appraisal placed the value at $90. Held, that the court had jurisdiction: Eldred v. Woolaver, 46 M. 241.

2. Replevin being brought in the circuit court the property was seized under the writ and was delivered to plaintiff. It was appraised at $225, and the declaration alleged it to be worth $500. On the trial some testimony was given by which it appeared doubtful whether the value exceeded $100. Held, that the jurisdiction of the court depended on the amount claimed in the declaration, and that there was no authority, either in court or jury, to assess the value where the property has been delivered to plaintiff and he recovers a verdict for it: Merrill v. Butler, 18 M. 294.

8. After jurisdiction in replevin has attached the value of the property is not in issue except for the purposes of an assessment of value in defendant's favor: Eldred v. Woolaver, 46 M. 241.

4. While the circuit court may have jurisdiction, under the general replevin act (see H. S. § 8324), of replevin where the value of the property is clearly less than $100, it should not and probably was not intended to have it, and such actions should be brought in a justice's court: Kittridge v. Miller, 45 M. 478.

5. Where the affidavit and declaration in replevin brought in justice's court stated value below $100, judgment went for plaintiff, who, testifying on appeal taken by defendant, swore that the value was over $150. Defendant moved to quash the writ and for dismissal. The court held the motion under advisement and directed the case to proceed. Defendant then introduced testimony tending to show value less than $100. Held, that it was proper to deny the motion and to render judgment for plaintiff on a finding that the property was worth less than $100: Dinnen v. Baxter, 18 M. 457.

6. A justice's jurisdiction in replevin is limited to cases where the value of the property does not exceed $100; and the value as stated in the affidavit is presumptively the real value until otherwise shown in subsequent proceedings: Carew v. Matthews, 41 M. 576.

7. An affidavit for replevin does not give a justice jurisdiction if it does not state that the value of the property sought does not exceed $100; and the defect, unless waived, is fatal, if objection is seasonably taken: Sager v. Shutts, 53 M. 116.

8. It seems that the question of a justice's jurisdiction, as depending on value, is closed by the affidavit for the writ: Henderson v. Desborough, 28 M. 170.

9. Where the affidavit, writ and declaration set forth the value of the property as not exceeding $100, and defendant pleads the general issue, the fact that plaintiff's testimony on the trial shows the value to be greater does not oust the justice's jurisdiction: Ibid.

10. A defendant who prevails in replevin before a justice may recover the value of the property replevied, not exceeding $500, which is the constitutional limit of the jurisdiction of justices: Ibid.; Humphrey v. Bayn, 45 M. 565; Chilson v. Jennison, 60 M. 235.

11. Under R. S. 1848 justices had no jurisdiction of actions of replevin: People v. Jackson Circuit Judges, 1 D. 302.

12. A justice has jurisdiction of an action of replevin against an administrator: Singer Manuf. Co. v. Benjamin, 55 M. 330.

13. Justices of the peace have jurisdiction of the statutory action of replevin for beasts distrained, etc.: Pistorius v. Swarthout, 67 M. 186.

As to when replevin may be brought in state court against a federal marshal, see COURTS, §§ 152-155.

II. NATURE OF THE ACTION.

14. The object of our statutory replevin is to determine the right of possession at the commencement of the action as well as title to the property for temporary or permanent purposes connected with that possession: Belden v. Laing, 8 M. 500.

15. The primary object of our action of replevin is to enable plaintiff to obtain the actual possession of property wrongfully detained from him by defendant at the time the action is brought: Hickey v. Hinsdale, 12 M. 99; Clark v. West, 23 M. 242.

16. Replevin with us is a possessory action: Hickey v. Hinsdale, 12 M. 99; Hatch v. Fowler, 28 M. 205; Bacon v. Davis, 30 M. 157; Hunt v. Strew, 33 M. 85; Henry v. Ferguson, 55 M. 399; Adrian v. Rutherford, 57 M. 170; Pearl v. Garlock, 61 M. 419.

17. The action is not in the nature of a bill quia timet; its purpose is not to quiet title to property in plaintiff's possession: Hickey v. Hinsdale, 12 M. 99; Bacon v. Davis, 30 M. 157.

18. The form of the action under our statute is always in the detinet: Le Roy v. East Saginaw C. R. Co., 18 M. 233.

19. Replevin rests on a tortious taking or detention: Cadwell v. Pray, 41 M. 307.

20. An unlawful detention at the time of the institution of the suit is the gist of this action: Hickey v. Hinsdale, 12 M. 99; Sexton v. McDowd, 38 M. 148; Gildas v. Crosby, 61 M. 413.

III. WHEN THE PROPER REMEDY.

21. Replevin, not attachment, is the proper process to obtain possession of goods claimed by plaintiff as his property: Mendelsohn v. Smith, 27 M. 2.

22. Replevin is the only remedy to get personal property specifically: Corbitt v. Brong, 44 M. 150.

23. Not replevin, but trespass for the original value, is the proper remedy where plaintiff's trees have been cut down by an unintentional trespasser and converted into hoops of vastly greater value: Wetherbee v. Green, 22 M. 311.

24. Replevin is not the proper remedy for obtaining possession of papers filed in a public office. The custody of such papers belongs to the officer in charge, and it would violate public policy to allow a sheriff or constable, under color of legal process, to intermeddle with public files: La Grange v. State Treasurer, 24 M. 468.

25. Where the property sought to be recovered has been destroyed before demand made or suit brought, replevin is not the proper remedy: Gildas v. Crosby, 61 M. 413.

26. Replevin for the distrained beasts is the proper remedy to test the validity of a distrainer's proceedings: Hamlin v. Mack, 33 M. 103; Norton v. Rokey, 46 M. 460.

27. The special writ of replevin given by H. S. §§ 8372-8376 to one whose beasts are distrained or impounded negatives the general remedy by replevin: Johnson v. Wing, 8 M. 163; Campau v. Konan, 39 M. 362; Marx v. Woodruff, 50 M. 361; Marx v. Labadie, 51 M. 605.

28. But the general action of replevin is not defeated by a mere unfounded claim that animals have in good faith been distrained damage feasant: Campau v. Konan, 39 M. 362.

29. Under H. S. §§ 8372, allowing the owner of "beasts impounded in order to recover a penalty" to bring replevin for them, that action lies where plaintiff's beasts are held for the sums allowed by H. S. § 8356 per head for cattle distrained: Marx v. Labadie, 51 M. 605.

IV. WHEN MAINTAINABLE.

That replevin is not abated by assignment for creditors, see ASSIGNMENT, § 168.

As to replevin for express package of money sent to agent and levied on by creditor of principal, see PAYMENT, § 77.

(a) Conditions precedent.

30. One to whom goods have been assigned by way of security, but who has allowed them to remain in possession of the assignor, is not obliged to demand them before bringing replevin against an officer who has seized them under an execution against the assignor: Jackson v. Dean, 1 D. 519. 1

31. Where the taking by defendant was wrongful no demand is necessary before bringing replevin: Le Roy v. East Saginaw C. R. Co., 18 M. 233; Bertwhistle v. Goodrich, 58 M. 457.

32. Where one's property is disposed of without authority by the party having it in charge, the owner may bring replevin therefor without a previous demand, notwithstanding the property is in the hands of one who bought in good faith and without notice of the title of the real owner: Trudo v. Anderson, 10 M. 357; Ballou v. O'Brien, 20 M. 304.

33. Where defendant took possession of plaintiff's cow, claiming it under a chattel mortgage given him by plaintiff's husband, no demand was necessary before bringing replevin: Denton v. Smith, 61 M. 431.

34. Demand before bringing replevin is unnecessary where defendant has deliberately obtained the goods by a fraudulent promise to pay for them which he did not mean to perform: Carl v. McGonigal, 58 M. 567.

35. Demand need not precede an action of replevin for goods the taking of which by defendant constituted a trespass, unless the trespass has been satisfied or the plaintiff is estopped from asserting it; but where the wrongful taking arises out of contract relations, and defendant holds in good faith, demand is necessary: Adams v. Wood, 51 M. 411.

36. Where property, sold upon condition that the vendee keep it at a certain place till fully paid for, was transferred to another city and pawned, it was held that the vendee had violated his duty as bailee and was a wrongdoer, and that the vendor might bring replevin against the pawnee without previous demand, as the pawnee's possession originated in a tortious taking: Whitney v. McConnell, 29 M. 12.

37. Demand is not necessary before bringing replevin against an officer whose seizure of goods is an abuse of his authority: Vanderhorst v. Bacon, 38 M. 669.

38. Where a mortgagee of chattels has the right to take possession of them if sold, he cannot replevy them from the mortgagor until after demand made: Cadwell v. Pray, 41 M. 307.

39. A husband gave a chattel mortgage upon a span of horses in use on his wife's farm and absconded. The mortgagee, without making any demand for them, replevied them for breach of condition of the mortgage. Held, that the mere presence of the horses on the farm did not make the wife a wrongdoer, and that the mortgagee was at least bound to present his claim to her to be recognized or rejected before he could lawfully subject her to the costs of a suit: Campbell v. Quackenbush, 33 M. 287.

40. Demand is necessary before bringing replevin for an article which defendant has borrowed from one who did not know whose it was and did not claim ownership, but who found it on his premises, where it had been put for safety long before by another stranger to the title who found it exposed near by: Becker v. Vandercook, 54 M. 114.

41. Where parties agreed orally on a sale of lumber to an amount within the statute of frauds, and the vendor put it on the premises of the vendee, who refused to accept it unless upon a different inspection from that insisted on by the vendor, the vendor could not bring replevin for it until after the vendee had, on reasonable demand, refused to let him remove it; the vendor having voluntarily caused it to be put upon the premises, the vendee cannot be made a wrong-doer by simply letting it stay there: Darling v. Tegler, 80 M. 54.

42. Where defendant came lawfully into the possession of the goods, and there has been no wrongful detention, demand before suit must be made: Adams v. Wood, 51 M. 411.

43. Property sold under an agreement that title shall not pass until full payment cannot, without demand, be replevied from the vendee for non-payment of a balance due after part payment: New Home Sewing Machine Co. v. Bothane, 70 M. 448.

44. One who has given a bill of sale to secure a debt, which bill has been filed with the town clerk, cannot replevy the property without making demand for it or paying the debt: Brown v. Coon, 59 M. 596.

45. A demand for personalty need not be made upon one who has no control over it or authority to deliver or to refuse to deliver it: Barnes v. Gardner, 60 M. 183.

46. Where a chattel mortgage provided that the mortgagee might take possession in case the property was sold, held, that a demand of payment before the debt was due was not a demand for the goods, especially if made by the assignor of the debt upon the mortgager, since both had parted with their interests: Cadwell v. Pray, 41 M. 307.

47. Defendant being in possession of a quantity of wheat, plaintiff brought replevin for one hundred bushels, which were measured out and taken under the writ from the whole quantity. Held to be no objection to the maintenance of the action that plaintiff did not demand and take under the writ the whole quantity; the evidence showing the whole to have been the plaintiff's and that he did not own as tenant in common with others: Crouse v. Derbyshire, 10 M. 479.

48. Where demand is necessary before bringing replevin, a demand made by the officer after the issuing of the writ, and while he has it in his possession ready for service, is insufficient: Darling v. Tegler, 80 M. 54.

49. Replevin cannot be made to lie on a demand which, when made, was in violation of the injunction of a court of competent jurisdiction: Smith v. Smith, 52 M. 538.

50. Where one rescinding a trade of personal property for land sued out a writ of replevin for the personal property before tendering a deed of the land, the suit was held to be premature though the tender was made before the writ was served: Wilbur v. Flood, 16 M. 40.

51. Where an infant's chattels mortgaged by him to secure money borrowed for a business enterprise are seized by the mortgagee, the mortgager, being still under age, may replevy them without restoring the loan: Corey v. Burton, 32 M. 30.

52. One bringing replevin for goods which defendant claims under a bill of sale which he procured from plaintiff through deception and fraud, she being ignorant of the nature of the paper signed by her, need not first return money, not due, borrowed by her from defendant to pay off a mortgage on the goods; nor need she reconvey land which he, unknown to her, has conveyed to her in payment of his pretended purchase of goods: Moffitt v. Shields, 67 M. 610.

Replevin not defeated by neglect to tender reward, see LOST GOODS, § 4.

53. Replevin will not lie for property held in connection with a tenancy on shares running from year to year and terminable only by notice, so long as the year has not expired and notice has not been given: Coan v. Mole, 39 M. 454.

1. Generally.

54. A. brought replevin against B., who was a member of a firm, and C., who was its agent and in possession of the property replevied; the firm then brought replevin against A., and joined three other defendants with him, for the same property delivered to A. upon the first writ, and the only question in both suits was whether A. or the firm owned the property. Held, that the second suit was a cross-replevin, and could not be maintained: Fisher v. Busch, 64 M. 180.

55. That the parties in the second suit are not identical with those in the first is not important, unless the new parties claim some interest in the property or right thereto different from or independent of the parties to the first: Ibid.

56. Replevin will not lie for property in plaintiff's possession at the time suit is begun: Hickey v. Hinsdale, 12 M. 99; Aber v. Bratton, 60 M. 357.

57. The right to maintain replevin must exist at the very moment the writ is issued: Wattles v. Dubois, 67 M. 313.

58. One cannot bring replevin for property actually in his own possession at the time against an officer who has levied upon but has not removed it: Hickey v. Hinsdale, 12 M. 99.

59. Where a constable has levied on personal property in the possession of the judgment debtors, but has never taken it into his own possession or in any way interfered with theirs, the judgment debtors cannot maintain replevin: Bacon v. Davis, 30 M. 157.

60. It is not always necessary that goods levied on should be removed in order to constitute such possession as will be deemed a conversion sufficient to entitle a party to the writ of replevin: O'Connor v. Gidday, 68 M. 680.

61. Certain property was seized under attachment; an inventory made, and a portion of the goods packed up in a trunk, but left in the owner's office; some of the goods were also removed, and the key to the office was retained for a time by the officer. Held, that this was such a change of possession as would justify replevin: Maxon v. Perrott, 17 M. 832.

62. Replevin will not lie for property which, when levied upon, was left and has remained in plaintiff's possession, even though he became receptor for it to defendant: Morrison v. Lombard, 48 M. 548.

63. Where a levy on lumber had been indorsed on the writ of attachment, though the lumber was not removed nor any one left in charge of it, the sheriff had sufficient possession to justify replevin: Hatch v. Fowler, 28 M. 205.

64. Where an officer who has levied upon a house retains the key and control of the house, his permitting the husband of the owner to occupy it as a workshop is not such a restoration as prevents her bringing replevin: Gutsch v. McIlhargy, 69 M. 877.

65. Replevin is founded on an unlawful detention whether there was an unlawful taking or not: Sexton v. McDowd, 88 M. 148.

66. A detention appears when it is shown that the defendant withheld the goods and prevented the plaintiffs from having the possession of them: Johnson v. Moore, 28 M. 3.

67. Replevin for goods, on the ground that they were wrongfully detained, will not lie where defendant came lawfully into possession of them, unless the wrongful detention is proved: Adams v. Wood, 51 M. 411.

68. Replevin will not lie for property which is held in trust by defendant for plaintiff as a mere security for the payment of what the latter owes the former: Adriance v. Rutherford, 57 M. 170.

69. Replevin will lie for damages where property taken by defendant has been wrongfully transferred by him and is not in his hands when the writ issues: McBrian v. Morrison, 55 M. 851.

70. Replevin for timber cut from land cannot be maintained on a showing merely that plaintiff had title to an undivided half of the land, especially where defendant had possession when the cutting took place: Hess v. Griggs, 48 M. 397.

71. Property which by intent and act has been united to the freehold cannot be made the subject of replevin: McAuliffe v. Mann, 87 M. 539.

72. Replevin will not lie to recover possession of houses that had been erected on posts and were afterwards removed from land which plaintiff bought under a mechanic's lien sale for the indebtedness of one who had only an equitable interest in the premises: Wagar v. Briscoe, 88 M. 587.

73. If a carrier obtains possession of goods wrongfully, or without the owner's express or implied consent, and refuses to deliver them to the owner, the latter may replevy them: Fitch v. Newberry, 1 D. 1. And where a carrier has damaged goods to an amount equal to the freight charges, the owner may replevy them and prove such damage to show that nothing was due for freight: Bancroft v. Peters, 4 M. 619.

74. A contract of sale made on Sunday being void, the vendor may on a subsequent day tender back the price and replevy the property: Tucker v. Mourey, 12 M. 378; Winfield v. Dodge, 45 M. 355. But replevin cannot be based on a Sunday rescission of a contract of exchange: Benedict v. Bachelder, 24 M. 425.

75. Replevin lies for property which a bailee, who had been holding under option of purchase and agreement to keep safely and return, transfers to a third person's possession: Dunlap v. Gleason, 16 M. 158.

76. And it lies for property seized on execution in void garnishment proceedings: Iron Cliffs Co. v. Lahais, 52 M. 394.

77. The appointment of a receiver in a suit foreclosing a chattel mortgage is not ground for enjoining replevin by a third party who claims title to the goods: Merchants', etc. National Bank v. Kent Circuit Judge, 49 M. 292.

78. One whose agent, exceeding authority, has released a mortgaged chattel, cannot replevy it without restoring what his agent took in lieu; by keeping that, he ratifies the agency: Nichols v. Shaffer, 63 M. 599.

2. For property taken for tax.

79. The purpose of H. S. § 8818, prohibiting replevin "for property taken by virtue of any tax, assessment or fine, in pursuance of any statute of this state," is to prevent interference with the officer collecting taxes, in the performance of his duty, by a proceeding that would prevent the speedy realization of the public revenue: Hill v. Wright, 49 M. 229.

80. Said statute does not apply where the property seized belongs to another person than him against whom the tax was assessed: Travers v. Inslee, 19 M. 96.

81. Nor where there could have been no valid tax levied by regular proceedings: Leroy v. East Saginaw C. R. Co., 18 M. 233.

82. Nor where there was no jurisdiction to levy the tax: McCoy v. Anderson, 47 M. 502.

83. Replevin lies for property seized for a tax laid without authority of law as to any part of said property: Boyce v. Cutter, 70 M. 539.

84. Where the property of a corporation not liable to be assessed for taxation is seized by a tax collector, it may be replevied, notwithstanding H. S. § 8818: Le Roy v. East Saginaw C. R. Co., 18 M. 233.

85. Replevin will not lie for property that was rightfully assessed in the township where it is stored, and that was held, at the time suit was begun, under tax process valid on its face: Hood v. Judkins, 61 M. 575.

86. But while said statute does not cover cases in which the tax is manifestly unlawful on its face, or is levied against a stranger to it, it cannot be defeated by a mere claim that the tax is invalid, if it is apparently regular: Hill v. Wright, 49 M. 229.

87. And where a tax levy inflicts an injury cognizable by law, the injured party must seek redress otherwise than by an action of replevin for the property taken: Ibid.

3. For exempt property.

88. Replevin lies for exempt property levied upon by creditors: Elliott v. Whitmore, 5 M. 532.

89. An execution debtor does not waive the right to bring replevin for exempt goods wrongly seized by having receipted for them to the officer and agreed to deliver them at a specified time or pay the judgment: Vanderhorst v. Bacon, 33 M. 669.

90. That a constable levying execution has neglected to make an inventory of the goods taken will not enable the defendant in the execution to replevy them where his status was not such as to entitle him to any exemptions: Ferguson v. Washer, 49 M. 390.

91. One who is garnished in respect of household goods exempt from execution in his possession belonging to the principal defendant may, pending the garnishment, be sued in replevin for such goods by the owner's wife: Hanselman v. Kegel, 60 M. 540.

V. WHO MAY BRING.

92. Plaintiff in replevin must be the person entitled to the possession; the general owner cannot sue where another has the sole right of possession: Hunt v. Strew, 33 M. 85.

93. One who has a present right of possession may maintain replevin, and possession is prima facie lawful: Woolston v. Smead, 42 M. 54.

94. The lessee of attached property is the proper plaintiff, not the lessor: Hunt v. Strew, 33 M. 85.

95. One in the sole and peaceable possession of goods, not as an intruder, trespasser or wrong-doer, but as owner, either of the whole or some special property in them, has a valid title as against all mere strangers, which they cannot defeat by showing an outstanding title in some third party: Van Baalen v. Dean, 27 M. 104.

96. One from whom chattels have been taken by mere trespassers while he was in peaceable possession and holding subject to claims of persons other than the defendants can maintain replevin: Ibid.

97. One who has a right to use property at will can replevy it from any wrong-doer; as, for example, from a sheriff's officer who has taken it on an execution issued against another person: Tandler v. Saunders, 56 M. 143.

98. The defeated party in replevin, where there has been no assessment of damages, may, under a change of circumstances, maintain an action to recover the same property: Deyoe v. Jamison, 33 M. 94; Pearl v. Garlock, 61 M. 419.

99. An officer has no authority to deliver property which he has attached to plaintiff in attachment while the suit is still pending; and therefore plaintiff has no right of possession and cannot maintain replevin for it against one who takes it from the officer: Vanneter v. Crossman, 39 M. 610.

100. One who has granted the land excepting the timber can maintain replevin for trees severed without his consent: Wait v. Baldwin, 60 M. 622.

101. Replevin for timber wrongfully removed may be brought by an execution purchaser of land who has not received his deed: Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Atkinson, 44 M. 166.

102. License to a grantee of land to cut and carry away the timber would not prevent the licensor from maintaining replevin against one who had purchased the timber from the licensee, where the latter had paid nothing for the land and it was understood by all parties that ownership should remain in the licensor until payment: Ortmann v. Sovereign, 42 M. 1.

103. One who is under contract to take charge of a stone-yard for a specified time, as superintendent for the owners; to furnish all the money required to carry on the business; to pay for the labor and purchase the material; to keep an account of his expenses and sales and receipts, and report the same when required so to do; and who is to receive in full for all the money, labor and time so expended in said business the net profits arising therefrom during the said period, acquires by virtue of his contract no title as against his employers in the articles manufactured or the implements and appurtenances of the yard; and if he violates his agreement and removes said property, against the wishes of his employers, from their yard, they may maintain replevin for the same: Detroit Frear Stone Works v. White, 85 M. 77.

104. One who has contracted to sell chattels on credit with a present delivery, on condition that the vendee perform certain work he had contracted to do for the vendor, of the contract price of which a certain portion was to be applied in payment for said chattels, cannot, after the work has been substantially performed, transfer separate from the contract any title or interest in the chattels in his vendee's possession to a third person, so as to vest in the latter a cause of action in replevin: Blaisdell v. Todd, 88 M. 176.

105. The vendee in a contract for the sale of a certain quantity of pig iron by a manufacturer, to be thereafter delivered, cannot, before inspection or acceptance, and in the absence of any mark to identify any particular piles of iron as belonging to him, recover in replevin against an officer who levies execution against the vendor: First National Bank v. Crowley, 24 M. 492.

106. One can bring replevin for goods sold to him, if they have been identified, even though he has not yet received and weighed them, nor agreed upon or ascertained their quantity: Sandler v. Bresnahan, 53 M. 567.

107. Plaintiff had a contract with a firm engaged in sawing lumber by which they were to receive certain saw-logs belonging to him, manufacture the same into lumber, ship the lumber to parties to whom the same had been contracted, receive the payment therefor, and pay over to him a certain amount per thousand feet, retaining the balance for their services. The contract provided that the logs and lumber were at all times to be the property of the plaintiff until he had received the amount so to be paid to him. The logs having been levied upon in the hands of the firm as their property, it was held that plaintiff was entitled to immediate possession, and might maintain replevin therefor: Bassett v. Armstrong, 6 M. 397.

108. B., who was entitled to the possession of a certain chattel, replevied it of H. On the trial he was nonsuited, and H. took judgment for the value of the property under the statute. B., still retaining the property he had so replevied, brought trover against H., and recovered the full value of the property instead of damages for its temporary detention. H. paid the judgment, and, claiming the property by virtue of such payment, brought replevin for it against B. Held, that if H.'s taking judgment against B. in the original replevin suit for the value of the property amounted to a conversion, in paying the judgment in the trover suit he had only paid for the property he had converted; and if, on the other hand, the court erred in giving B. damages for the full value of the property, instead of damages for its temporary detention, such error could not transfer the title of the property to H.; and in neither case could he recover: Hoag v. Breman, 8 M. 160.

109. A bill of lading was sent to a bank, together with a draft upon the consignee, to whom the bill was not to be delivered until they had paid the draft. The bank, however, let them remove the merchandise to examine it, and they contested payment. Held, that the bank, on paying the draft itself, was fairly entitled to replevy the merchandise; and that the fact that it had first attached it without the consignor's authority was unimportant: West Michigan Savings Bank v. Howard, 52 M. 423.

110. One who makes a cash sale subject to acceptance can replevy the goods from a common carrier, or from any one, unless it be a bona fide purchaser, so long as the buyer has neither accepted nor paid for them, or received them, or had the right to compel delivery.

And if payment was due at once the mere acquisition of possession by himself or his assignee could not cut off the vendor's right: Lentz v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 53 M. 444.

111. A trustee in bankruptcy can maintain replevin for property of the bankrupt sold on an execution against such bankrupt after the decree of bankruptcy: Coats v. Farrington, 46 M. 422.

112. Or for property belonging to the bankrupt but held by one who claims under a contract purchaser who has not fulfilled the terms of the contract: Gordon v. Farrington, 46 M. 420.

113. Where property is sold under an execution, one who at the time of the sale holds a valid chattel mortgage on it, on which payment is in default, can obtain possession of the property by replevin, unless the purchasers stand in such relation to the parties to the mortgage as entitles them to assail the securities: Hendrickson v. Walker, 32 M. 68.

114. Where mortgaged chattels have been taken before foreclosure from the mortgager's possession, under an execution against him, the mortgagee cannot maintain replevin against the officer taking them, notwithstanding the mortgage is past due and unpaid, so long as the officer is proceeding in due course under the statute to a sale of the mortgager's interest: Cary v. Hewitt, 26 M. 228; Macomber v. Saxton, 28 M. 516.

115. A chattel mortgagee can bring replevin, after demand and refusal, against an officer who has attached the goods as the property of the mortgager while in the latter's possession: Wood v. Wetmar, 104 U. S. 786.

116. The mortgagee of a vessel that is afterward libelled for supplies furnished in a home port and is sold by the admiralty court without obtaining jurisdiction can replevy it from the purchaser: Gould v. Jacobson, 58 M. 288.

117. One who owns an undivided half of land from which timber has been cut cannot maintain replevin for such timber on proof merely of such ownership: Hess v. Griggs, 43 M. 397.

118. Replevin lies by a tenant in common who is entitled to the possession of an undivided interest in personal property against a wrong-doer who is a stranger to the title: McArthur v. Oliver, 60 M. 605.

119. Replevin will not lie for an undivided interest in a chattel where the execution of the writ will operate to deprive of his right of possession a co-tenant whose title is undisputed: Kindy v. Green, 32 M. 310.

120. A tenant in common of logs cannot bring replevin against his co-tenant for his share thereof: Busch v. Nester, 70 M. 525 (June 8, '88).

121. Where one of two persons owning chattels in common has mortgaged his share to the other he cannot maintain replevin therefor against the mortgagee, especially if he has made no offer to redeem: Kline v. Kline, 49 M. 419.

122. The rule that a tenant in common of chattels cannot maintain replevin against his co-tenant for the common property applies to tenants in common of ships and vessels: Wetherell v. Spencer, 3 M. 128.

123. In replevin for an undivided interest in a crop of wheat standing in shocks, the defendant, who has no interest in the other undivided half, cannot object to the action on the ground that the wheat was undivided when the writ issued: Crapo v. Seybold, 36 M. 444.

124. One who has leased a farm upon the tenant's agreement to deliver in payment half the produce is a tenant in common in respect to such produce, and can maintain replevin for it after it is in condition to deliver: Sutherland v. Carter, 52 M. 471.

125. A legatee may bring replevin for the possession of a specific bequest which the executor has left in his possession, but has taken away: Eberstein v. Camp, 37 M. 176.

126. A voluntary assignee for the benefit of creditors cannot replevy the property from a mortgagee in possession under a fraudulent mortgage: Wakeman v. Barrows, 41 M. 363. *

127. One partner may bring replevin for the whole partnership property if it is seized on execution for another's individual debt: Hutchinson v. Dubots, 45 M. 143.

128. In replevin to recover property acquired by a wife before her marriage she should join as plaintiff, and if he sues alone he will be nonsuited; nor need the non-joinder be pleaded in abatement: Brown v. Fifield, 4 M. 322.

129. Husband and wife may join in replevying exempt property seized on execution: Shepard v. Cross, 38 M. 96.

130. A wife may, in her own name, bring replevin for household property exempt from execution; she may join her husband as plaintiff, but need not do so: Hanselman v. Kegel, 60 M. 540.

131. A wife living apart from her husband may, after due demand, bring replevin against him for her individual goods: White v. White, 58 M. 546.

132. A husband who has left his wife cannot replevin from her household goods that would be exempt from execution: Smith v. Smith, 52 M. 538.

133. An agent to foreclose a chattel mortgage, who with the mortgager's consent has taken possession of the mortgaged goods and has kept them at his own expense awaiting sale, may bring replevin in his own name against the mortgager who surreptitiously takes them from him: Eldridge v. Sherman, 70 M. 266.

134. A pound-master may bring replevin for animals escaped or rescued and found outside the village limits: Grover v. Huckins, 26 M. 476.

135. An attorney may purchase a chattel from his client, and may then bring replevin against a third person to recover possession thereof. H. S. § 7185, which forbids certain dealings by attorneys in the way of getting demands with intent to prosecute them for profit, does not apply: Town v. Tabor, 84 M. 262.

As to replevin by agent appointed to reclaim timber cut from public lands, see OFFICERS, § 17; PUBLIC LANDS, § 190.

VI. WHO LIABLE.

136. Demand and refusal before bringing replevin will not make defendant's lawful possession unlawful: Adams v. Wood, 51 M. 411.

137. Replevin lies to recover from even a bona fide purchaser property which had been taken by the latter's vendor without the consent or authority of the owner: Parish v. Morey, 40 M. 417.

138. Replevin does not lie against one who is not unlawfully detaining the property at the time the affidavit for the writ is sworn to and the writ delivered to the officer. So held where the writ was sworn out and held until defendant could be caught in temporary possession: Burt v. Burt, 41 M. 82.

139. Replevin will not lie against one to whom the property has been delivered as security for rent, and who has sold and delivered it to a third person: Gildas v. Crosby, 61 M. 413.

140. A. sued B. in replevin for the skin of a fox, which he claimed because the animal was first started and wounded by him and chased to earth by his dog, and finally caught by the dog and killed by his help. There was no evidence tending to show that B. had or claimed any interest in or control over the skin. Held, that there was no ground for the action: Kittridge v. Miller, 45 M. 478.

141. Replevin will not lie against one not in possession, and who cannot deliver the property, unless he has concealed, removed or disposed of the same with intent to avoid the writ: Gildas v. Crosby, 61 M. 413.

142. Replevin will lie against the assignee of property, even though he allows it to remain in the assignor's hands, unless he clearly makes known that he does not claim it: Coomer v. Gale Manuf. Co., 40 M. 691.

143. Replevin can be brought against an executor or administrator (H. S. § 5902): Singer Manuf. Co. v. Benjamin, 55 M. 330.

144. Replevin lies against a sheriff for goods actually held by a receiptor: Mayhue v. Snell, 37 M. 305.

145. A wife owning goods levied on for the husband's debt may sue the officer in replevin though the goods are only in charge of the officer, who refuses, on her demand, to let her remove them from the premises, and avows his purpose to sell them unless the matter is compromised: O'Connor v. Giddy, 63 M. 630.

146. A tax collector who has levied upon property for a tax in a case in which no tax could by law have been levied cannot defend under his warrant as against replevin: Le Roy v. East Saginaw C. R. Co., 18 M. 233.

147. An execution creditor on whose premises the property seized has been stored is properly made a defendant in an action of replevin against the officer levying execution: McMillan v. Larned, 41 M. 521.

148. The evidence in a particular case held sufficient, as connecting two parties with the detention, to warrant their being joined as defendants: Deyoe v. Jamison, 33 M. 94.

149. An officer who levies upon chattels by virtue of a tax warrant fair on its face is liable in replevin if the goods belonged to a corporation exempt from taxation: Le Roy v. East Saginaw C. R. Co., 18 M. 233.

That process fair on its face does not necessarily protect officer from replevin, see OFFICERS, § 191.

When United States marshal may be sued in state court, see COURTS, §§ 152-155.

VII. THE WRIT.

(a) In general.

150. Partners must sue in the circuit court in their individual names. A writ of replevin issued on behalf of partners in the name of their firm is a nullity: Smith v. Canfield, 8 M. 493.

151. A justice's writ of replevin issued in a partnership name is not sustainable where the amendment permitted by H. S. § 6872 in cases where suit is so brought shows that there was only one plaintiff: Stirling v. Heintzman, 42 M. 449.

152. Where part only of the property was taken on the first writ and an alias was issued for the remainder, and the plaintiff had judgment, held, that it was immaterial whether the alias was regular or not, as the judgment was the same the plaintiff would have been entitled to under the statute had no alias issued: Mazon v. Perrott, 17 M. 332.

153. An alias writ of replevin may be issued for the purpose of personal service where the property has been seized on the original writ and turned over to the plaintiff, but personal service has not been had: Bell v. Mecosta Circuit Judge, 26 M. 414.

154. The objection that the writ was made returnable on a Sunday was held waived by defendant's appearing, pleading the general issue and going to trial without objection: Pierce v. Rehfuess, 35 M. 53.

155. A replevin suit begins as soon as a writ taken out in good faith and sworn to is ready for execution, and the entry fee is paid; and any reasonable delay before delivering it to an officer for execution does not postpone the date of beginning suit: McMillan v. Larned, 41 M. 521.

156. Plaintiff in replevin has full control of the writ after taking it out, and may even recall it after delivering it to an officer for execution: Ibid.

157. In case the property is claimed, held and apparently owned by a third person, and hence is not detained by defendant from plaintiff or so situated as to be subject to surrender by defendant, the process does not require the officer to seize it; and if he proceeds to take it, though it be the same property described, his writ will not protect him if such third person is the bona fide owner and holder: Sexton v. McDowd, 38 M. 148.

158. A sheriff's return to a writ of replevin may be amended on due notice and proper showing, but if not amended is conclusive as made: Green v. Kindy, 43 M. 279.

159. A return of service upon defendant "by delivering a certified copy of said writ to his wife personally," it not appearing that defendant could not be found, and that the service was at his dwelling, is bad: Wheeler v. Wilkins, 19 M. 78.

(b) Description of the property.

160. The description in a writ of replevin is sufficient if with outside help the officer executing it can identify the property: Sexton v. McDowd, 38 M. 148.

161. Where a writ of replevin describes a building to be replevied as on a specified lot, it speaks from time of the issuing of the writ; and the fact that at a later time the building was elsewhere does not defeat the proceeding: Elliott v. Hart, 45 M. 234.

162. Replevin was brought for a building that had been sold on execution. The replevin writ described it as on lot 7 of block 6, while the certificate of levy and notice of sale referred to it as on lot 8. Held, that the variance would not exclude evidence of the proceedings on execution, and that parol evidence was admissible to identify the property actually taken: Ibid.

163. A judgment in replevin for a quantity of stacked wheat, upon which plaintiff had a lien under a chattel mortgage, was reversed because the description of the land on which it grew, as given in the writ of replevin, differed from the description in the chattel mortgage as given in the record, which contained nothing showing that it was incorrect: Coman v. Thompson, 43 M. 389.

164. A writ of replevin is void if it does not describe the property to be seized; a description in the affidavit annexed to the writ is not sufficient: Paterson v. Parsell, 38 M. 607.

165. But the fact that the description given in the writ is of an undivided interest in a chattel held by a co-tenant with plaintiff does not deprive the court of jurisdiction to award judgment for return or for value. It is only where no description at all is set forth in the writ that such jurisdiction fails: Humphrey v. Bayn, 45 M. 565.

166. In replevin for grain or other chattels defined by measurement, a description indefinite in point of quantity, and not otherwise made certain, is fatally defective: Stevens v. Osman, 1 M. 92; Farwell v. Fox, 18 M. 166.

167. "A quantity of corn consisting of about two hundred bushels, and a quantity of rye consisting of about one hundred bushels," held an insufficient description: Stevens v. Osman, 1 M. 92.

168. A writ of replevin called for the seizure of "250 bushels of wheat of the Fultz variety grown upon plaintiff's farm;" the proofs showed that the wheat taken was of the Clawson variety. Held, that this variance was immaterial, as the writ fully identified the wheat as that grown upon plaintiff's farm, and as there was no testimony showing that any wheat of the Fultz variety was grown there: Wattles v. Dubois, 67 M. 813 (Oct. 20, '87).

169. A tenant in common of a crop of wheat brought replevin against his co-tenant, who had wrongfully refused to allow him to take his share. Held, that the writ was not premature in calling for the seizure of a certain number of bushels, although the wheat at the time of the writ's issuance had been harvested but not threshed: Ibid.

170. The description — in writ and declaration — of the property as "six oxen" held sufficient: Farwell v. Fox, 18 M. 166.

171. The description, "two yearlings, red and white in color," is sufficient: Kelso v. Saxton, 40 M. 666.

172. The following description in a writ of replevin, "sufficient of the boots and shoes now in the store or building situate on lot 182 of Moore's plat of the village of Edmore," etc., "and now occupied by defendant herein, to satisfy the claim of the plaintiffs herein, as mortgagees of said goods, amounting to $805," was held sufficient, it appearing that plaintiff's mortgage in fact covered the entire stock: Pingree v. Steere, 68 M. 204.

173. The description of the property in the affidavit and writ as "one sewing-machine and one pool-table" is sufficiently specific: Proper v. Conkling, 67 M. 244.

VIII. THE AFFIDAVIT.

174. The affidavit cannot be made before the cause of action has accrued: Darling v. Tegler, 30 M. 54.

175. The office of the affidavit in replevin in justice's court is to confer jurisdiction; and it can only be looked into to ascertain that fact, not made to operate as a defence on the trial upon the merits: Elliott v. Whitmore, 5 M. 532.

176. The jurisdiction to issue the writ of replevin in the circuit court does not depend on the affidavit; the statute contemplates the issuing of the writ before any affidavit is made, but provides that it shall not be executed till the affidavit is made and annexed to it: Baker v. Dubois, 32 M. 92.

177. The affidavit must show that plaintiff is the person entitled to possession: Hunt v. Strew, 33 M. 85.

178. The affidavit is essential before the writ can be served, and it must show a wrongful detention of plaintiff's property: Wilbur v. Flood, 16 M. 40.

179. The affidavit alleged that defendant had the property in his possession "unlawfully from the possession" of the plaintiff. Held, that the omission of the word "detained" after "unlawfully" was not a fatal defect: Smith v. Dodge, 37 M. 354.

180. The averments in the affidavit — "that the property was not taken for any assessment levied by virtue of any law of the state," and "that it was not seized under any execution against the goods and chattels of the plaintiff liable to execution," — being required by the statute, must be inserted, without regard to the nature of the property replevied: Phenix v. Clark, 2 M. 327.

181. The affidavit stated that the goods had not been "seized under execution in attachment against the goods and chattels of this deponent liable to execution," etc., whereas the word "or" should have been used instead of "in," and instead of the words "this deponent" the plaintiff should have been described, inasmuch as the deponent was not the plaintiff. Held, that these defects were merely clerical, and were waived by pleading the general issue: Baker v. Dubois, 32 M. 92.

182. Under R. S. 1838, where defendant's christian name was stated incorrectly (James for Joseph) in the affidavit, the court might, after service of the writ and before the execution of the replevin bond, permit the plaintiff to file a new affidavit, and thereupon to amend the writ by inserting the true name: Parks v. Barkham, 1 M. 95.

183. Mere clerical defects in an affidavit annexed to a writ of replevin are waived by pleading to the merits: Baker v. Dubois, 32 M. 92.

184. Where defendant in replevin is personally served, but nothing is taken on the writ, the action becomes merely personal; and by appearing and joining issue and allowing the case to be adjourned from time to time without objection, he waives the right to have the writ set aside for defects in the affidavit and bond: Clark v. Dunlap, 50 M. 492.

Presumption that affidavit correctly states value, see supra, §§ 6, 8.

IX. REPLEVIN BONDS.

(a) In general.

185. Plaintiff in replevin is not bound to give a bond as a condition to maintaining his action: McBrian v. Morrison, 55 M. 351.

186. Whether, in replevin for distrained beasts, the replevin bond can be given before appraisal, quere; but, if so given, any objection to the irregularity is waived by pleading issuable and going to trial on the merits; and where the jury has found that there was no right in defendant, the bond's irregularity could not prejudice him and could not affect the judgment: Pistorius v. Swarthout, 67 M. 186.

187. As H. S. § 8324 allows a replevin bond to be signed by some one in behalf of the principal, such bond may be sufficient though signed by none but sureties: Cahill's Appeal, 48 M. 616.

188. A replevin bond containing the principal's name in the body of it, but not signed by him, is nevertheless valid as against the surety if delivered by the latter with the intention that it shall be effective and binding without the principal's signature: Ibid. See Green v. Kindy, 43 M. 279.

189. A bond in replevin taken by the deputy sheriff in his own name is in substantial compliance with the statute: Wheeler v. Wilkins, 19 M. 78.

190. Where a justice of the peace issued a writ of replevin before any bond had been filed by the plaintiff, and approved it next day under a misapprehension as to a surety's qualifications, it was held that § 6857 would not prevent the defendant from excepting to the sureties: Johnson v. Stilson, 42 M. 541.

191. The sheriff in a replevin suit is not authorized or directed by the statute to deliver to the plaintiff the property seized upon the writ until the plaintiff furnishes him a bond with sureties of undoubted sufficiency. He accepts them, when excepted to, at his peril, unless directed to do so by the court or the defendant: People v. Lee, 65 M. 557 (April 28, '87).

192. The failure of the sureties in a replevin bond to justify their responsibility in writing upon such bond is not jurisdictional, and is waived when not seasonably objected to: Hatch v. Christmas, 68 M. 84.

193. It is competent, in giving a statutory replevin bond, to add to the condition a covenant of the same tenor, and to bring action upon it in case of a breach. In such an action damages should be recovered instead of the penalty of the bond: Prentiss v. Spalding, 2 D. 84.

194. Under R. S. 1838 the court could not compel the plaintiff to file a new replevin bond: Lynch v. Bruce, 2 D. 123. But see H. S. § 8380.

195. Where bond is given it stands to defendant in place of the property until the suit is finally determined, and meanwhile he cannot contest plaintiff's right of possession: Ford v. Bushor, 48 M. 534.

196. And plaintiff's right to possession continues even after judgment for defendant and while the case is pending in the circuit court on certiorari: Clark v. West, 23 M. 242.

197. Sureties on a replevin bond are not parties to the action in replevin and have no control over it: Lindner v. Brock, 40 M. 619.

(b) Actions on replevin bonds; defences; recovery.

198. The sheriff's return to a writ of replevin, certifying that the plaintiff in replevin had not filed a bond, is conclusive upon all the parties to the replevin suit, and defeats an action upon an alleged bond: Green v. Kindy, 43 M. 279.

199. Where plaintiff in replevin before a justice takes an appeal, his appeal bond gives defendant a cumulative security which does not supersede that furnished by the bond in replevin: Brabon v. Pierce, 34 M. 89.

200. Removal of the cause to another court does not discharge the sureties on a replevin bond, where the removal law was in force when the bond was given: Reusch v. Demass, 84 M. 95.

201. An action on a replevin bond based upon a lawful judgment cannot be defeated on the ground that the judgment was entered by consent: Estey v. Harmon, 40 M. 645.

202. But where a plaintiff in replevin made a secret and fraudulent agreement that judgment might be entered for defendant, to whom the replevin bond was afterwards assigned, held, that the sureties were discharged from their liability thereon, and might have an action thereon enjoined: Wright v. Hake, 38 M. 525.

203. One who replevies property transferred to him in fraud of creditors, and levied upon accordingly, cannot after suffering judgment in replevin enjoin a suit on the replevin bond, on the ground that the debtor has made a composition with creditors and thereby recovered his assets: Jacobson v. Metzgar, 43 M. 403.

204. The obligation of the surety in a replevin bond is determined by the statute, and cannot be enlarged by the fact that circumstances, accidental or otherwise, render a judgment in replevin impossible: Scott v. Scott, 50 M. 372.

205. If a replevin suit abates through no fault of plaintiff, as by the justice's removal from his township, defendant's remedy is not upon the bond, but he may bring replevin or trover: Kidder v. Merryhew, 32 M. 470.

206. So where the replevin suit was abated by the justice's failure to appear at his office on the return day of the writ, suit could not be brought on the bond; but other remedies might be resorted to if plaintiff in replevin should detain the goods: Scott v. Scott, 50 M. 372.

207. After judgment for the defendant in replevin, an execution was issued in form in assumpsit, and purporting to be in favor of a plaintiff. It was not amended, but, after return unsatisfied, the replevin bond was sued. It was held that this could not be considered an execution on the judgment, and that consequently no liability upon the replevin bond was created by its return: Williams v. Vail, 9 M. 162.

208. There is no liability on a replevin bond without proof of execution in the action; the judgment should also be put in evidence: Phillips v. Waterhouse, 40 M. 273.

209. But in declaring in an action on a replevin bond, the issue and return of execution in the replevin suit need not be averred: Jennison v. Haire, 29 M. 207.

210. Where action was brought on a replevin bond against all the obligors, two of whom were defaulted, and the plaintiff, instead of proceeding to trial as to the others, discontinued as to them and took judgment against those who were defaulted, this action was held erroneous: Winslow v. Herrick, 9 M. 380.

211. A replevin bond, when judgment is given for the return of the property, binds one to take active measures to surrender it, and not simply to passively submit to a forcible taking of it by legal process; obligors on such a bond, who have declined on demand by an officer armed with a proper writ to make such surrender, cannot, when sued on their obligation, set up in defence the failure of the officer to find and seize the property; this would permit them to take advantage of their own wrong: Jennison v. Haire, 29 M. 207.

212. Plaintiffs in replevin, against whom a judgment for a return of the property has been rendered, are estopped, when sued upon their replevin bond, from setting up in defence any infirmity in the proceedings by which they obtained the possession of the property: Ibid.

213. In an action on a replevin bond, the judgment in the replevin suit for a return of the property cannot be impeached as evidence for lack of proof that any affidavit accompanied the writ of replevin; it would be presumed, in aid of such judgment of a court of record, that all the proceedings essential to its validity were taken: Ibid.

214. Defendant in action on a replevin bond can show that the principal obligor had property in the county where the judgment in replevin was entered which was subject to execution at the time of the judgment, and that the plaintiff, under a private arrangement with him, released him for a consideration and relied on the sureties: Greenlee v. Lowing, 85 M. 63.

215. Dealings with the principal obligor in a replevin bond for her discharge, without the assent of the sureties therein, will release the sureties; and instructions to the sheriff, whether consistent with the release or not, could not change the legal effect of the agreement previously made: Ibid.

216. Where a judgment in replevin is rendered on a waiver of a return for the value of the property, all proper questions must be litigated on the assessment of damages, and are not afterwards open in an action on the replevin bond: Williams v. Vail, 9 M. 162; Ryan v. Akeley, 42 M. 516; Pearl v. Garlock, 61 M. 419.

217. If the pendency of bankrupt proceedings invalidates a levy they should be shown in an action of replevin to recover the value of the goods levied on, and not withheld to be litigated in proceedings relating to the replevin bond: Jacobson v. Metzgar, 43 M. 403.

218. In an action on a replevin bond it cannot be shown that property already adjudged to belong to the principal in the bond was really only held by him to sell on commission: Henry v. Ferguson, 55 M. 399.

219. A finding in a replevin suit of general ownership in a specified person is only to determine rights between the parties to that suit, and is not so conclusive in a subsequent suit on the replevin bond as to establish his right to mortgage the property, especially if the mortgage postdated ownership: Ibid.

220. Where property attached was replevied by a third party, and the defendant in replevin took judgment by default, it was held that as against the plaintiff the judgment showed that the defendant in attachment had a leviable interest that would bind him and his sureties in an action on the replevin bond: Ryan v. Akeley, 42 M. 516.

221. A replevin bond in justice's court covers costs recovered by defendant on appeal; it is not satisfied by a return of the property, with costs, on judgment by the justice: Brabon v. Pierce, 84 M. 39.

222. A replevin bond covers the costs of all courts, even though the case be removed on certiorari from before a justice, if a final judgment on writ of error awards costs of all the courts: Monroe v. Heintzman, 46 M. 12.

223. In an action against the sureties in a replevin bond, no judgment can be recovered for an amount exceeding the penalty and costs of suit; and an allowance of interest beyond the penalty, from the time of breach of the condition, is erroneous: Fraser v. Little, 13 M. 195.

224. Where plaintiff in replevin is nonsuited, defendant, if he waive a return of the property, is entitled to a judgment for its full value. And in an action upon the replevin bond afterwards, the measure of damages is the amount of the judgment; and the obligors cannot show, in mitigation of damages, that defendant in replevin was but a part owner of the property (but see H. S. § 8354): Williams v. Vail, 9 M. 162.

225. Under H. S. § 8354, which permits defendants in a suit on a replevin bond to show, in mitigation of damages the extent of plaintiff's special interest, it is held admissible, in an action by a sheriff on a bond conditioned for the return of property which he had held under attachments, to show that the attachment debtor had been adjudged bankrupt and an assignee had been appointed for him before execution had issued in the attachment cases. Such evidence does not dispute, but admits, the debtor's title, and the sureties are not therefore estopped from giving it: Lindner v. Brock, 40 M. 618.

226. Sureties in a suit on replevin bond conditioned to return property that had been held by the sheriff under attachment may show in mitigation of damages that the demand on which the attachment was taken out had been afterwards paid: Ibid.

227. Defendants in a suit brought by the sheriff on a replevin bond may show that after the property had been taken from him he had seized and sold part of it on other writs: Ibid.

228. A sheriff suing on a replevin bond is equitably entitled to not more than will indemnify him; and he was not damnified by proceedings against him in replevin for property in which he had no special interest: Ibid.

229. H. S. § 8354, providing that in an action on the replevin bond the defendants may show that the obligee had only a special property, only applies where the obligee has taken judgment for a return of the property and sues on the bond to recover its value; and it cannot apply where the value is not sued for: Ryan v. Akeley, 42 M. 516.

230. The plaintiff in replevin suffered judgment by default, and the defendant waived return and had his damages assessed. Held that, in suing on the replevin bond, the defence could not introduce evidence in reduction of the judgment in replevin, as allowed by H. S. § 8354 in cases where judgment had been taken for a return: Ibid.

231. In an action on a replevin bond a surety thereon who has become owner of a judgment under which a valid levy was made is entitled to have the amount of the judgment deducted from the value of the replevied property if the claim was not presented with those on which the lien was grounded. So, also, property owned by the principal in the bond may be deducted, though included in the lien, if it had not belonged to the execution defendant and had gone to a bona fide holder: Henry v. Ferguson, 55 M. 399.

232. It seems that when sued on a replevin bond the sureties are entitled to reduce the judgment in replevin by showing that they had a special interest in the property; as, e. g., that one of them held a chattel mortgage on it which antedated the levy on which the suit was grounded: Henry v. Quackenbush, 48 M. 416.

233. A defendant in replevin should not recover upon the replevin bond more than his legal damages. If he had merely a possessory or partial interest in the property, and was in no position to hold the entire interest for some one else, he should not recover the full value: Pearl v. Garlock, 61 M. 419.

X. DISMISSAL.

234. Failure to give bond in replevin is no ground for dismissing the suit, which can still be tried on the merits: McGuire v. Galligan, 57 M. 39.

235. An officer who has seized goods by virtue of legal process is a merely nominal defendant to an action of replevin for them; and, unless the real party in interest has refused to indemnify him, cannot prejudice the latter's rights by stipulating with the plaintiff for the dismissal of the suit without judgment: Casper v. Kent Circuit Judge, 45 M. 251.

236. It is erroneous to dismiss a writ of replevin on motion based upon affidavits on the ground that defendant was a deputy-sheriff and that the writ was directed to the sheriff and served by another deputy, that the writ was issued without authority of law, and that the service was unlawful and irregular and gave the court no jurisdiction; such questions are not properly triable on affidavits, but should in some way be brought to trial on evidence upon an issue of fact. Whether they are triable under the general issue or should be made the subject of a plea in abatement, quere: Jewell v. Lamoreaux, 30 M. 155.

237. Dismissal of a writ of replevin amounts to judgment of nonsuit: Stall v. Diamond, 37 M. 429; Humphrey v. Bayn, 45 M. 565.

238. A writ of error is the proper remedy to review the decision of a circuit judge dismissing a writ of replevin and quashing all proceedings with costs on a motion: Jewell v. Lamoreaux, 20 M. 155.

XI. PLEADINGS.

239. The forms prescribed by statute for actions of replevin are applicable alike to justices' courts and courts of record: Elliott v. Whitmore, 5 M. 532.

240. Oral pleadings are admissible in justice's court: Smith v. Dodge, 37 M. 354.

241. In replevin for property taken in execution, and claimed by plaintiff as exempt, the declaration need not specifically set out the character of the property so as to show the exemption: Elliott v. Whitmore, 5 M. 532.

242. A count that the plaintiff "was lawfully possessed as of his own property of one certain gray mare, and was lawfully possessed as aforesaid of two yearling colts," sufficiently avers the ownership of the plaintiff in the colts: Haseig v. Tripp, 20 M. 216.

243. A surety who, having paid his principal's debt, sues in replevin for an article to a lien upon which he has been subrogated, need not allege an assignment in his declaration: Myres v. Yapple, 60 M. 339.

244. In replevin a plea in abatement was interposed, setting up the pendency of a prior suit in replevin, by virtue of the writ in which the property in controversy was taken and held by one of the defendants as sheriff. The plea did not allege that any affidavit was attached to the writ in the first suit, or that the writ commanded the sheriff to take the property in controversy. Held, that the plea was insufficient on both grounds: Belden v. Laing, 8 M. 500.

245. A plea in abatement that defendant took the goods as deputy United States marshal on an execution issued out of the federal circuit court against a third person named is bad on demurrer if it fails to allege that the execution was issued on any judgment, or that any judgment had been obtained against either the plaintiff in replevin or the defendant in the execution, or that the property had been levied upon as belonging to the defendant in execution: Heyman v. Corell, 36 M. 157.

246. A plea in abatement to an action of replevin for goods seized on an execution issued against a third person merely alleged that defendant seized them under a certain described execution, without also alleging that they were seized as the property of the defendant named therein or were liable to seizure for his debt; whether sufficient, quere: Carew v. Matthews, 41 M. 576.

247. A plea in abatement to a suit in replevin asserted that defendant had seized and held the goods as deputy-sheriff. Demurrer to the plea was overruled, return waived and judgment given for defendant. Held, that the plea should have stated facts, and not merely matters of conclusion, so that the court could have determined whether the defendant's seizure and custody were lawful, and what became of the property after it was seized on the writ of replevin, in default of which the demurrer should have been sustained and judgment given that defendant answer over: Dubois v. Hutchinson, 40 M. 262.

248. Whether the defence that the property sought to be replevied was held, at the time of the commencement of the replevin suit, under the process of another court, should not be pleaded in abatement to the jurisdiction rather than in bar, quere: Weber v. Henry, 16 M. 399.

249. In replevin by one plaintiff against three defendants, plea in abatement was interposed of a prior action in replevin by two of the defendants against the plaintiff and another, by virtue of which the other defendant as sheriff took and detained the property. Held, that the issues in the two cases were not identical, as the possessory rights of the sheriff under his writ, if valid, could not be impaired or affected, although the plaintiff in the present suit should show a perfect title as against the other defendants, the plaintiffs in the first suit: Belden v. Laing, 8 M. 500.

250. Under R. S. 1888, as amended by laws of 1889, p. 230, the general issue put in issue every fact stated in the declaration necessary to sustain the plaintiff's action, and not the detention of the property only: Loomis v. Foster, 1 M. 165.

251. The defence that the property was taken under legal proceeding against a third person claimed to be the owner thereof is admissible under the general issue without notice: Snook v. Davis, 6 M. 156; Craig v. Grant, 6 M. 447.

252. Anything going to show that plaintiff had no right to the possession when he began suit is admissible under the general issue: Belden v. Laing, 8 M. 500; Singer Manuf. Co. v. Benjamin, 55 M. 330.

253. No special plea or notice of lien is necessary in replevin proceedings. If the facts make out a lien judgment may be given for it: Gratwick Lumber Co. v. Lewis, 66 M. 533 (June 23, '97).

254. Under the plea of the general issue, without notice, defendant may show his official character as special administrator, and that as such he claims to hold the property replevied: Singer Manuf. Co. v. Benjamin, 55 M. 330.

255. By pleading the general issue, where the affidavit, writ and declaration allege value under $100, defendant admits a justice's jurisdiction and cannot afterwards question it on the ground that the value of the property exceeded the jurisdictional limit of $100: Henderson v. Desborough, 28 M. 170.

256. Where the notice of special defence in replevin for timber merely puts in issue the title to the land at the time the timber was cut, the existence of a remedy by way of action for waste is not in question: Hess v. Griggs, 43 M. 397.

257. Replevin was brought in justice's court designating defendant by his surname and by the initials of his christian name. No misnomer was pleaded, and judgment, which was rendered for plaintiff, was appealed by defendant in his full name, after pleading to the merits below. Held, that the informality was no longer material: Baldwin v. Talbot, 43 M. 11.

258. In replevin a defective description of the property must be taken advantage of by special demurrer, as it would be held sufficient after verdict, avowry, or plea of property in defendant: Stevens v. Osman, 1 M. 93.

259. A motion to quash the writ of replevin in a cross-suit is not the proper procedure for getting rid of the cross-action. The second proceeding may be shown in bar of the first, or the defendant in the cross-writ can plead in abatement if he wishes to raise the question at the outset: Fisher v. Marquette Circuit Judge, 58 M. 450.

XII. EVIDENCE; DEFENCES.

260. A plaintiff in replevin in opening his case should set forth any special or proprietary interest on which he relies, and not rest it on a mere presumption of possession; he should not reserve evidence of his special interest to make out a new case, if necessary, by way of rebutting evidence that the real right of possession was in another: Woolston v. Smead, 42 M. 54.

261. Whether plaintiff in replevin need show that the property taken on the writ was the same as described in the declaration, where there was a variance in description between the writ and the certificate of appraisal, quere: Burrows v. Bailey, 34 M. 64.

262. In replevin for shingles claimed by both parties to have been purchased from the mill-operators who cut them, the burden of proving title is not shifted from plaintiff to defendant because of the operators' wrongdoing in selling their shingles twice and mixing them: Marthinson v. Wagner, 63 M. 543.

263. When replevin is brought for exempt property seized under execution, plaintiff must prove every fact necessary to establish the legal conclusion that the property is exempt: O'Donnell v. Segar, 25 M. 367.

264. Under the ordinary declaration plaintiff may show that the property replevied was exempt from the execution whereunder defendant held it: Elliott v. Whitmore, 5 M. 532.

265. Anything going to show that the plaintiff had no right to the possession when he commenced his suit is a complete bar to the action and is to be admitted in evidence: Belden v. Laing, 8 M. 500; Clark v. West, 23 M. 242.

266. As, that the defendant lawfully held the property as against the plaintiff by virtue of a prior writ of replevin: Ibid.

267. Where, during pendency before a justice of a suit in replevin, possession has been awarded to one of the parties, he is entitled to it as against the other while the suit is pending, subject only to interruption by service of a precept to return the property; and if the suit is decided against him and he gives due notice of his intention to remove the cause, as by certiorari, he has still the right to retain possession after completing the remaining steps required by law for such removal. The completion of such steps suspends the further operation of the justice's judgment and leaves the writ by which the suit was begun in legal force. And where one had surrendered the property upon a precept issued after he had declared his intention to remove the cause, it was held that he was thereafter at liberty to regain possession by his own act, if he could do so peaceably and without personal interference. And held, also, that, for his protection, the proceedings for removal and the judgment for reversal in the higher court related back to the time of giving notice, and that in a suit in cross-replevin no plea puis darrein continuance was needed to support evidence of such judgment of reversal, though granted after the last continuance: Clark v. West, 23 M. 242.

268. In replevin it is competent to disprove plaintiff's title to the goods, and one way to do this is to show that some one else owns them: Nicholson v. Dyer, 45 M. 610.

269. Replevin is a possessory action, and, as a general rule, a party in actual and undisputed possession of property cannot be required, as against a mere intruder, to show how he became possessed of the title, or even that he has any title; but where, instead of proving possession, the plaintiffs undertake to prove title deduced from a third person, and the evidence as to possession is merely incidental to the question of title, the case turns upon the question whether there had been a completed sale: Hatch v. Fowler, 28 M. 205.

270. Defendant in replevin cannot object that plaintiff acquired title by an abuse of confidence, so long as the person from whom he acquired it does not complain: Town v. Tabor, 34 M. 262.

271. Where replevin against a sheriff holding under attachments is brought by one who claims by virtue of chattel mortgages and sales thereunder, it is a full defence to show that plaintiff acquired his rights with knowledge of the antecedent rights of the attaching creditors: Barmon v. Clippert, 58 M. 377.

272. Whether the ousted owner of a freehold sued in replevin for logs cut by his dis-seizor may not show the true title, quere: Busch v. Nester, 62 M. 381.

273. Where the owner of land wherefrom trees have been cut is sued in replevin for the logs by one who claims to have been in possession of the land in good faith under a tax-deed, he may assert his title in defence though it has not been established in an action of ejectment: Busch v. Nester, 70 M. 525.

274. Defendant may testify that he pointed out plaintiff's property, as bearing on such confusion of goods as justified seizure of the whole: Sleight v. Henning, 12 M. 371.

275. Defendant in replevin for goods sold him under written lien for payment may show that before demand he sold the property to specified third persons, not parties to the record and ignorant of any lien on the goods, no notice of any lien having been on file: McMorran v. Murphy, 68 M. 246.

276. In replevin by a mortgagee for chattels held under attachment and execution levies, the fact that plaintiff, after getting possession, sold the chattels on foreclosure and bid them in himself, is admissible to show that this was his purpose in demanding them: Wilson v. Montague, 57 M. 638.

277. In replevin for property seized in satisfaction of a village tax regularly assessed, the validity of the village's organization and charter, whereunder it has acted without question for twelve years, cannot be attacked: Coe v. Gregory, 53 M. 19.

278. In replevin for goods wrongfully attached the fact that defendant in attaching them was a wrong-doer in respect to some third person can form no basis for investigation or judgment: Tandler v. Saunders, 56 M. 142.

279. In replevin against a constable for property taken by him on an attachment against a third person, it was held no error to exclude a defence based upon contract rights in the attaching plaintiff, so long as the contract gave possession to another, and it did not fairly appear that the constable was instructed to hold on the footing of such rights, and no such rights were asserted in answer to the demand preceding replevin: Town v. Tabor, 34 M. 262.

280. A sheriff in possession under a fraudulent levy may, when the goods are replevied from him by a purchaser from the execution debtor, show in defence that the sale by such debtor was fraudulent as against his creditors: Pierce v. Hill, 35 M. 194.

281. An assignee replevying from a constable who had levied under an execution against the assignor may be cross-questioned as to his pecuniary responsibility where the purpose is to show that the assignment was a fraud: Jennings v. Prentice, 89 M. 421.

282. Where a defendant, in an action of replevin, rests his claim to the property upon a seizure as constable by virtue of an execution, he must, before proving the execution, show a valid judgment upon which it issued; and he will fail to establish any right to the property by virtue of the levy if it appears that the judgment was void or had been paid before the issuing of the execution: Beach v. Botaford, 1 D. 199; Gidday v. Witherspoon, 35 M. 368.

283. In replevin against a constable claiming under a levy of execution, the defendant can recover the amount of his lien only on proof of a valid judgment and execution; proof of an execution alone, even though valid on its face, is not enough: Andrews v. Smith, 41 M. 683.

284. A purchaser of goods replevied them from a constable, who justified under an execution against the vendor, but it was found that the judgment supporting the execution was invalid. Held, that there was no basis for a showing that the sale to plaintiff was fraudulent: Wilson v. Martin, 44 M. 509.

285. Where the defendant in replevin is an officer holding the property under an execution against the plaintiff that is regular on its face, the plaintiff can show that the judgment upon which the execution issued was void for want of jurisdiction: Adams v. Hubbard, 80 M. 104.

286. In replevin for goods seized under an execution defendants need not prove the judgment if plaintiff, for the purpose of claiming exemption rights against the levy, has introduced the execution in which the judgment is described: McGuire v. Galligan, 53 M. 458.

287. Where defendant in replevin justifies under an execution, the record of the judgment and proceedings on which it is issued are admissible in evidence: Gavigan v. Scott, 51 M. 378.

288. In an action of replevin, parol evidence that at the time the goods were taken from the plaintiff he was served with an attachment against a third person and in favor of the defendants, without any proof of the process or proceedings in attachment, is insufficient to prove that the goods were in the custody of the law when the replevin suit was brought: Van Baalen v. Dean, 27 M. 104.

289. Parol testimony that the property in question had been taken on an execution may be given, not to show the contents or validity of the execution, but to identify the transaction: Hunt v. Strev, 83 M. 85.

290. Under H. S. § 8842, which requires the judgment in replevin to accord with the respective rights and interests which the parties have in the property, the exact extent of the subsisting claim of one who sues as a mortgagee is a legitimate subject of inquiry: Kohl v. Lynn, 84 M. 360.

291. In replevin against a constable for goods levied on, the question whether defendant was indemnified in making levy; and also by whom, is irrelevant: Jennings v. Prentice, 39 M. 421.

292. If a mortgagee of chattels seizes them without having previously brought a personal action upon the debt secured, and replevin is brought to recover them, the plaintiff in replevin can show how much has been paid upon the debt: Gardner v. Matteson, 88 M. 200.

293. An attachment was levied upon chattels sold by an insolvent debtor and the purchaser brought replevin therefor against the sheriff. Held, that the judgment in the attachment suit was admissible in a suit in replevin to show the extent of defendant's lien, in order that his special interest might be assessed if he recovered judgment: Berger v. Clippert, 53 M. 468.

294. A judgment creditor who became execution purchaser acquired thereafter a chattel mortgage made by the debtor. Held, that in replevin by the debtor the defendant had a right to show the existence of the mortgage as reducing plaintiff's interest; and, if the mortgage gave the right of possession, as affecting also his claim of damage from being deprived of the property: McGuire v. Galligan, 53 M. 458.

295. Where replevin against an officer who had taken the property under an attachment was brought by a person to whom a bill of sale had been given as security but not put on file, it was held proper for defendant to show that part of the debts on which the attachment issued accrued after the bill was given and in reliance upon the vendor's continued possession and apparent ownership: Talcott v. Crippen, 52 M. 633.

296. In an action of replevin for logs, as to the quantity whereof a witness testifies, the quantity he has made in scaling other lands of which plaintiff has the actual scale may be shown to test his accuracy: Busch v. Nester, 70 M. 525.

297. In replevin brought by a legatee against the executor for a specific bequest, testimony from the legatee tending to show that the property claimed had been promised to the legatee before the testator's death, but not as a gift in presenti or causa mortis, is inadmissible: Eberstein v. Camp, 87 M. 176.

298. In replevin for goods bought by some of the defendants from plaintiff to satisfy the purchasers' debt to another defendant with whom they had gone into partnership, the dealings of the firm in regard to partnership matters, after the goods were replevied, were immaterial in the absence of any charge of fraud: Cass v. Gunnison, 58 M. 108.

299. In replevin for horses levied upon as the property of the husband of one of the plaintiffs, evidence touching the husband's management of the farm and horses, and the number of notes plaintiffs had in bank when they got the money from the bank to pay for the horses, is immaterial: Gould v. Sanders, 69 M. 5.

300. Neither the constitutionality of a statute authorizing an inspector to seize and condemn meat in the public market, nor the justification of such a seizure, can be considered in an action of replevin brought by the owner of meat that has been taken by an inspector, if there is no evidence of inspection and condemnation beyond the fact that a person, known to the owner as the inspector, marked the meat and took it away: Kamman v. Lane, 55 M. 426.

301. In replevin for impounded cattle where defendant justifies under a seizure for going at large in the highway, the question of the efficiency of the control over the cattle is immaterial, so long as defendant admits that he is unable to show that the particular cattle were in the highway or upon his land when seized: Blanck v. Hirth, 56 M. 330.

302. In replevin for a horse it was held not error to allow the plaintiff to be questioned as to what he had done with the horse after replevying it, defendant not being jeopardized by this ruling: English v. Caldwell, 30 M. 382.

And see EVIDENCE, § 891.

303. The appraisal made under the writ is prima facie evidence of the value of the property where there is no other evidence upon the point: Walrath v. Campbell, 28 M. 111.

304. The appraisal may be received as evidence of value as against the plaintiff, though such evidence is not very conclusive: Hunt v. Strew, 33 M. 85. And to be evidence of value it must be offered in evidence: Williams v. Bresnahan, 66 M. 684.

And as to miscellaneous matters of evidence in replevin, see EVIDENCE, §§ 85, 87, 88, 280, 334, 342, 343, 423, 428, 485, 486, 489, 1094.

XIII. INSTRUCTIONS; VERDICT; FINDINGS.

305. Where the record showed that the defendants in replevin asserted a right of property and possession adverse to the plaintiff and inconsistent with his claim, and nothing of a contrary tendency appeared, it was held that a charge to the jury that the detention was not disputed was not error: Johnson v. Moore, 28 M. 3.

306. Defendant in replevin claimed to have bought the disputed property, and gave evidence tending to show that plaintiff had admitted his ownership to a third person. Plaintiff claimed to have lent the property to defendant, and denied selling it. Held proper to instruct the jury to consider the statements as to ownership, and the denial of the same, and to determine the ownership from all the testimony: McDonald v. McDonald, 55 M. 155.

307. In a suit against the sheriff for the conversion of an article seized under a writ of replevin, the special verdict rendered in the replevin suit, that the defendant was not in possession when the article was demanded or suit was brought, was introduced in evidence. Held, that it would not warrant an instruction that the right of the plaintiff in replevin had been adversely decided by it, and that evidence to the contrary need not be considered: Sexton v. McDowd, 38 M. 148.

308. Where defendants in replevin set up that the property was held under levies in favor of specified parties, and parol evidence was given, without objection, of one of the levies, with testimony tending to show that one of the firm in whose favor it was made was spoken to on the subject and refused to release the levy, it was error, while directing a verdict against the officer who took the property, to charge that in the absence of documentary evidence the firm could not be held, as there was enough to go to the jury on this question: Grindrod v. Lauzon, 47 M. 584.

309. If the defendant in replevin shows a lien under an execution, and himself entitled to damages to the extent it exists, still, that extent, the validity of the lien and the amount of damages are questions for the jury, and the court cannot direct a verdict: O'Connor v. Giddy, 63 M. 680.

310. A jury answering special questions in a replevin suit stated that the property was not held by defendant when the affidavit was made and that he was then connected with the detention or possession. Held, that these special findings are not necessarily inconsistent with a general verdict for the plaintiff: it is presumable that the jury meant defendant did not hold the property personally: Foster v. Gaffield, 34 M. 356.

311. A special finding involving the conclusion that a certain person is holding chattels under an unexpired lease is inconsistent with a general verdict for the lessor in an action of replevin brought by him against an officer who has levied on the chattels under an execution against the lessee, as it negatives the plaintiff's possessory right: Nottingham v. Vincent, 50 M. 461.

312. Where the general title is in plaintiff a verdict for defendant must specify the amount of his interest if he only claims a lien upon the property or a special interest in it (H. S. § 8842): Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. St. Clair, 34 M. 518.

313. In replevin between claimants of property under rival mortgages the verdict and judgment should specify the amount of the lien of the successful party: Williams v. Bresnahan, 66 M. 684.

314. H. S. § 8842 requires a specific finding, in replevin, of any lien or special property claimed. Held, that if not found the judgment cannot recognize it; much less if the evidence would not support such finding: Giddy v. Witherspoon, 35 M. 368.

315. In replevin against a constable for goods levied on, a finding merely that plaintiff was the general owner and that defendant had a lien to the amount of his levy cannot be sustained where the interests of the parties are conflicting; as where the defendant levies on plaintiff's goods to satisfy an execution against a stranger. H. S. § 8342 contemplates a special and full finding or verdict to authorize judgment for a lien: Alderman v. Manchester, 49 M. 48.

XIV. DAMAGES.

(a) What recoverable.

316. Plaintiff may recover damages for such property even as he has refused to take possession of when pointed out by defendant as a portion of that sued for, whether such refusal is before or after the service of the writ: McBrian v. Morrison, 55 M. 351.

317. If a plaintiff in replevin who recovers his property does not claim or does not have assessed his damages for the detention, it is a waiver of such damages equivalent to a satisfaction: Delevan v. Bates, 1 M. 97.

318. Where in the court below there was no evidence submitted as to the value of the property replevied, an award of more than nominal damages was held erroneous: Phenix v. Clark, 2 M. 327.

319. A plaintiff in replevin cannot complain that the court awarded nominal damages to him when the jury gave none; the error, if any, being in his favor: Sleight v. Henning, 12 M. 371.

320. The plaintiff cannot recover as a part of his damages the value of the services of his attorney and counsel in attending the suit: Hatch v. Hart, 2 M. 289.

321. The damages in replevin where the property is recovered must be limited to a fair compensation for the use of the property, together with such special damages as necessarily accompanied the detention, and any actual injury to the property. Speculative or contingent profits cannot enter into the computation: Aber v. Bratton, 60 M. 357.

322. Where the original detention of goods was unlawful, a subsequent delivery in good faith does not prevent a recovery of damages for the detention before such delivery: Hanselman v. Kegel, 60 M. 540.

323. In replevin for tools of one's trade taken on execution, the jury should be confined in estimating damages to the amount exempted by law and to the period during which plaintiff was deprived of his property; and if they give damages for lost profits interest cannot also be allowed: McGuire v. Galligan, 53 M. 453.

324. When the goods are not taken upon the writ of replevin, and plaintiff elects to take judgment for the value, the measure of damages is the value of the property at the date of the conversion, and interest thereon to date of verdict: Hanselman v. Kegel, 60 M. 540.

325. The measure of damages in replevin, where the property is not found or taken and plaintiff proceeds for the value, is the value at the date of the unlawful taking, with interest upon such value: Just v. Porter, 64 M. 565.

326. Whether damages are allowable in replevin for detention of the property after the writ issues and before the property is found and taken on the writ, quere: English v. Caldwell, 30 M. 362.

327. A defendant who waives return may elect to take judgment for the value at the time of the taking under the writ with interest up to the date of the verdict, but he cannot also have damages for the detention or use: Just v. Porter, 64 M. 565.

328. Damages allowed the defendant may include the value of the use of the property while it is kept from him by means of the replevin proceeding: Burt v. Burt, 41 M. 82.

329. One who institutes an unfounded suit in replevin may incur damages against defendant, even though the latter does not own the property: Ibid.

330. A deputy-sheriff who has seized goods under an attachment has no right to make use of them while holding them; and therefore, when he prevails in an action of replevin against him, he has no right to damages for being deprived of their use: Tandler v. Saunders, 56 M. 142.

331. One who enters upon land under a tax-title void upon its face and cuts timber cannot claim to be acting in good faith, and when he fails in replevin for the logs against the owners of the land, they, on waiving return, are entitled to damages measured by the value of the logs at the time they were replevied, with interest from that date: Nitz v. Bolton, 71 M. — (July 11, '88).

332. Where property sold under an agreement that title should not pass until full payment of the price was, after part payment, unlawfully replevied by the vendor, the measure of the vendee's damages on waiver of return, the property having lost nothing in value, was held to be the sum of the vendee's payments with interest thereon from the time of replevy: New Home Sewing Machine Co. v. Bothane, 70 M. 443.

333. Under H. S. § 8342, where either of the parties at the commencement of the suit has only a lien upon or a special interest in the goods replevied, he can only recover according to his special interest as against the general owner or one who has taken the goods by his direction; but as against a stranger the full value of the goods may be recovered, although exceeding the lien or special interest, and the plaintiff will be a trustee for the general owner as to the balance: Davidson v. Gunzolly, 1 M. 388.

334. Where a sheriff was sued in replevin for taking property on executions against a third person, but not from the possession of the plaintiff, and recovered judgment, it was not error to assess his damages, on a waiver of the return of the property, at the full value of the property, notwithstanding it exceeded the amount of the executions in his hands. The plaintiff had no right whatever to the property, and as between him and the sheriff the latter had the whole title, and would be bound to account for any surplus to the execution debtor. H. S. §§ 8342, 8347, providing for an assessment of the value of the special property only, does not apply here: First Nat. Bank v. Crowley, 24 M. 492.

335. Where a person setting up only a special property in chattels replevied waives a return and claims only pecuniary damages, his recovery cannot exceed the extent of his interest as shown. And when it appears that he has no interest, the award of damages for the value of the property is erroneous: Weber v. Henry, 16 M. 399.

336. A defendant in replevin whose lien under a chattel mortgage upon the goods replevied is sustained cannot recover beyond the value of the goods, which, if not proved, is governed by the appraisal made under the writ: Walrath v. Campbell, 28 M. 111.

337. In replevin against a sheriff for goods replevied by him at the instance of a third person claiming under a chattel mortgage, defendant, if he succeeds in the suit and waives a return of the goods, is not entitled to a judgment for their value, but only to the amount of his special interest therein: Williams v. Bresnahan, 66 M. 634.

338. Where mortgaged chattels are taken by the mortgagee in replevin, and the defendant, the mortgager, succeeds in the suit and waives return, he will be entitled to judgment only for such part of the value of the property as remains after deducting a sufficient sum to satisfy the amount remaining secured and unpaid upon the mortgage: Fowler v. Hoffman, 31 M. 215.

339. Where, after mortgaged goods attached by the mortgager's creditors have been replevied by the mortgagee, payments are made on the mortgage debt, the mortgagee cannot enforce his lien on the goods or the value beyond the amount actually due him when the judgment is rendered: Wood v. Weimar, 104 U. S. 786.

340. An execution creditor and an officer who had levied the execution upon the mortgager's interest in mortgaged chattels were sued in replevin by the mortgagee, who, having obtained possession of the goods under the writ, sold them to the execution creditor under the power of sale in his mortgage. Held, that such sale, whatever the price paid, would not affect the measure of damages in the replevin suit under the statute regulating the judgment in case of separate interests. The sale did not convey the special property acquired by the levy, but only the separate interests represented by the mortgage: Cary v. Hewitt, 26 M. 228.

341. Where defendant in replevin has established a lien for sawing upon a quantity of lumber of which that replevied was only a portion, a ruling which permits the assessment of his damages at such a proportion of his whole lien as the lumber replevied bore to the whole quantity subject to the lien is not one of which plaintiff can complain, the error being in his favor: Chadwick v. Broadwell, 27 M. 6.

342. Where the proofs in replevin show clearly and without contradiction that the defendant, if in possession, is a possessor without any valuable interest in the property, but yet require judgment in his favor for want of a proper demand, he can recover no damages under H. S. §§ 8342, 8347, beyond his special interest, which would be merely nominal; a judgment for damages for the full value of the property is erroneous: Darling v. Tegler, 30 M. 54.

343. A sheriff is not damnified by proceedings against him in replevin for property in which he holds no special interest: Lindner v. Brock, 40 M. 618.

344. The damages against an unsuccessful plaintiff in replevin for distrained animals include all claims arising out of the distress and damage done defendant by the estrays: Sterner v. Hodgson, 63 M. 419.

345. Where defendant in replevin for impounded cattle does not dispute title but only claims a lien, he is not entitled, on failure of the replevin suit, to anything but costs: Marx v. Woodruff, 50 M. 361.

(b) Assessment.

346. A motion for an assessment of damages in a replevin suit, made the next term after judgment in the case, was held too late; the parties being out of court: People v. Jackson Circuit Judges, 1 D. 802.

347. Where plaintiff recovered judgment before a justice, which was reversed by the circuit court on certiorari, and plaintiff in error afterwards moved for an order that a jury be impanelled to assess his damages, it was held that the circuit court, under the statutes of 1888, had no such power; but that under §§ 170 and 135 of the justices' act of 1841, it had power to award a restitution of the property: Ibid.

348. Under H. S. § 8347 a defendant who waives a return may have the value of the property assessed by the court without jury: Pearsons v. Eaton, 18 M. 79.

349. In replevin, when the property has been delivered to plaintiff and he receives a verdict, there is no authority given by the statute either to the court or jury to assess the value of the property replevied: Merrill v. Butler, 18 M. 294.

350. Where, on motion of the defendant in replevin, the writ has been quashed as void for not describing the property seized, the defendant cannot have an assessment of damages, which is confined by H. S. §§ 8346-47 to cases where "the property specified in the writ" has been delivered to the plaintiff, and can cover no other property: Parsell v. Genesee Circuit Judge, 39 M. 542.

351. H. S. § 8342 provides that in replevin the fact that either party has only a special property in the goods may be proved on the trial, or the assessment of value, or on the assessment of damages. Held, that this is meant to permit proof on the trial if a jury is had; or on assessment of value when demurrer is interposed; or on assessment of damages in case of judgment by default. But it does not authorize a second jury to be impanelled to assess damages after the case has been tried on its merits: Quackenbush v. Henry, 38 M. 369.

352. When judgment of discontinuance is rendered by the justice in a replevin suit, the defendant, if he waives a return of the property, is entitled of right to have his damages assessed, and if the justice refuses to assess them he may be compelled to do so by mandamus: People v. Tripp, 15 M. 518; Forbes v. Washtenaw Circuit Judge, 23 M. 497; La Barr v. Osborn, 38 M. 313; Humphrey v. Bayn, 45 M. 565; Johnson v. Dick, 69 M. 108 (March 2, '88).

353. When a plaintiff suffers a discontinuance, the defendant must elect whether he will claim or waive a return, and the election must be entered before proceeding to the assessment of damages; of which assessment the notice required by the statute must be given: Wheeler v. Wilkins, 19 M. 78.

354. An assessment of value in replevin, and final judgment thereon, cannot accompany the allowance of a motion for judgment as in case of nonsuit, without any notice and hearing beyond that given for the motion: Hill v. Webber, 50 M. 142.

355. An assessment of value in replevin is authorized on the trial or on the assessment of damages (H. S. § 8346). Held, that this refers to the stage of the case at which damages are assessed, and not to the act of assessing them; and that defendant's omission to claim damages does not dispense with the necessity of assessing the value, or of the notice of assessment in any case in which he demands judgment for value: Ibid.

356. Where plaintiff in replevin, after appealing from a justice, discontinues on paying costs, defendant may waive return and elect to recover the value, and, without any interlocutory judgment, may notice the cause in the circuit court for an assessment of damages by a jury: Soper v. Hawkins, 56 M. 527.

357. Where judgment goes against one who brings replevin for distrained animals the damages may be assessed subsequently upon an inquest by jury: Sterner v. Hodgson, 63 M. 419.

358. Where a writ of replevin in justice's court is dismissed for defects in the affidavit, and defendant, waiving return, has an assessment for the value, he may appeal from the judgment thereon. On an assessment of damages in replevin there is always an issue between the parties, whether expressed in words or not: Stall v. Diamond, 37 M. 429.

XV. JUDGMENT.

(a) Upon what based; form.

359. It is the general nature of replevin that the state of things existing at the beginning of a suit will ordinarily control its determination: Cary v. Hewitt, 26 M. 228; Cass v. Gunnison, 58 M. 108.

360. Where, on a trial by the court without a jury, the court found the value to be $120 and assessed the damages at six cents, an error by the clerk in entering judgment so as to recite the damages at $120 instead of six cents was corrected by the finding and by the statute of jeofails: Lyman v. Becannon, 29 M. 466.

361. A joint judgment in replevin is proper where the possession of the defendants was joint and they were connected in all the transactions on which it was based: West Michigan Savings Bank v. Howard, 52 M. 423.

362. Where, in replevin against two, the court finds that each of the defendants has an independent lien to a specified amount on the property in controversy, it is erroneous to render a joint judgment in their favor for the value of the property: Sweetzer v. Mead, 5 M. 107.

363. A judgment against the plaintiff in replevin for value cannot be entered in favor of several defendants jointly where some of them are not found to have been interested: Steele v. Matteson, 50 M. 318.

364. Joint judgment in money should not be entered in favor of defendants who have no joint interest in the property replevied; e. g., in favor of an assignee and one who claims title by purchase from him: Redpath v. Brown, 71 M. — (July 11, '88).

365. Judgment in replevin for return of the property is erroneous where plaintiff's action failed because it was in his possession when he sued out his writ: Gidday v. Witherspoon, 35 M. 368.

366. Judgment may be given for the return of property instead of for its value, if, when the verdict is rendered, no one is present for the party entitled to it, and no evidence of value is produced: Kelso v. Saxton, 40 M. 606.

367. Return need not be awarded in replevin where the property has been delivered under the writ to the plaintiff: Smith v. Dodge, 37 M. 354.

368. Where replevin is discontinued after the return day — as where the writ is set aside for defective service or where plaintiff on appeal voluntarily discontinues — defendant is entitled to judgment for return or for value and damages: People v. Tripp, 15 M. 518; Forbes v. Washtenaw Circuit Judge, 23 M. 497; Humphrey v. Bayn, 45 M. 565; Soper v. Hawkins, 56 M. 527.

369. The fact that the description given in the writ is an undivided interest which should not be made the subject of a replevin suit does not deprive the court of jurisdiction to render judgment for return or for value: Humphrey v. Bayn, 45 M. 565.

370. A conditional vendee, who by part payment has acquired an interest in the property, may, when his vendor fails in replevin, take judgment for the value of his interest: New Home Sewing Machine Co. v. Bothane, 70 M. 443.

371. It is essential to a judgment in favor of the defendant in replevin for the value of the property that the record should show affirmatively and distinctly the election to take the value instead of a return of the property: Adams v. Champion, 31 M. 233.

372. Waiver of a return in an action of replevin is not, in practice, required to be made before trial or in writing, and no entry of it need be made beyond the proper recital in the judgment: Kline v. Kline, 49 M. 419.

373. A waiver of return in a justice's court, made in open court and entered by the justice at defendant's request, is sufficient to authorize a judgment for value instead of for a return: Humphrey v. Bayn, 45 M. 565.

374. Election to take judgment for value in replevin before a justice cannot be exercised, as matter of right, after an adjourned day on which the plaintiff discontinued and defendant did not appear: Stack v. Smith, 54 M. 238.

375. Where defendant in replevin has waived return he is entitled to a verdict for the value of such property in his possession as is claimed by the declaration, but as to the ownership of which there is no evidence: White v. White, 58 M. 546.

376. A finding in replevin that defendant did not unlawfully detain the property, that he had a lien on or special property in the same to an amount named, and that plaintiff was the general owner, subject to defendant's lien, authorizes a judgment in defendant's favor for the amount of the lien as found: Moore v. Vrooman, 32 M. 526.

377. Where a jury finds that defendant in replevin has a special lien, but does not find what the property is worth, there is nothing on which to base a personal judgment against the plaintiff for the amount of the lien: Alderman v. Manchester, 49 M. 48.

378. A finding in replevin that plaintiff has the general property, but that defendant did not unlawfully detain the goods, is contradictory, and cannot sustain a judgment in a case where it is impossible that a special property should co-exist with the general ownership: Rodman v. Nathan, 45 M. 607.

379. Replevin was brought contrary to the statute (H. S. § 8318) for property taken under a tax levy. Held proper, on quashing the writ, to give judgment for defendant for the amount of the tax lien: Hill v. Wright, 49 M. 229.

380. Where goods held by the sheriff under an attachment or execution are taken from him on writ of replevin, a judgment in his favor before the attachment proceedings are decided must be for the return of the property and not for the special value of his lien; and if the judgment has been erroneously entered, mandamus will lie upon a seasonable application to change the journal entry thereof accordingly, unless such change will prejudice the rights of strangers: Frederick v. Mecosta Circuit Judge, 52 M. 539.

381. Where a plaintiff in replevin is general owner of the goods, but defendant has a special lien thereon under a levy made by him upon them, the plaintiff must necessarily hold the title levied on; but if he is not the general owner, defendant is entitled to a return; and there is no propriety in determining the amount of his lien unless he waives return and asks to have the value determined: Alderman v. Manchester, 49 M. 48.

382. Where a defendant in replevin sets up no right or claim to the property, but denies having been in possession when the writ was issued and served, and defends on that ground, and has verdict in his favor that he did not unlawfully detain, etc., he has no claim to a judgment for the return of the property or for its value, and is entitled to a judgment for costs only: Hinchman v. Doak, 48 M. 168.

(b) Conclusiveness and effect.

383. A judgment in replevin against an agent does not conclude his principal, even though the principal acted as the agent's attorney at the trial: Warner v. Comstock, 55 M. 615.

384. A judgment for defendant in replevin for exempt property taken by him on execution bars trover against him for its conversion unless after the return of the property and before its sale the claim of exemption is plainly made: McGuire v. Galligan, 57 M. 38.

385. Judgment for value in replevin is not final, but interlocutory, and only decides the right, while the ascertainment of the value is referred to a further inquiry by the court: Hill v. Webber, 50 M. 142.

386. A judgment in favor of defendant for a return is a solemn legal adjudication that he, not plaintiff, is entitled to the property; and it gives all legal remedies, not prohibited by statute, to obtain possession of the property or its value: Smith v. Demarrais, 39 M. 14.

387. Judgment for the return of goods replevied from a buyer by the seller restores to the buyer the possession of the goods without impairing the seller's rights under their contract of sale: Adams v. Wood, 51 M. 412.

388. A judgment for return in favor of defendant in replevin is not evidence of title to the property in question as against one not a party to the proceeding and who has possession of the property, but is not shown to have acquired such possession or to claim title under either party: Rathbun v. Ranney, 14 M. 382.

389. Nor does such a judgment show general ownership as against any one: Ibid.

390. Although a judgment in replevin does not in itself decide anything more than the right of possession, yet it may be rendered conclusive by showing that the right of property was in fact tried and determined: Lansing v. Sherman, 30 M. 49. See EVIDENCE, § 242.

391. A judgment in replevin, where there is no assessment of damages, does not necessarily determine title, but merely determines the right of possession at the time, and is not inconsistent with the right of the defeated party to recover it back under a change of circumstances: Deyoe v. Jamison, 83 M. 94; Pearl v. Garlock, 61 M. 419.

392. A replevin suit in which the property is not taken on the writ and the plaintiff proceeds for damages determines the title to the property: Parmalee v. Loomis, 24 M. 242.

393. Where a judgment in replevin is rendered on a waiver of a return for the value of the property, all proper questions must be litigated on the assessment of damages, and are not afterwards open: Pearl v. Garlock, 61 M. 419. See infra, §§ 212-220.

394. It seems that a judgment in replevin cannot settle the title to land: Busch v. Nester, 62 M. 381, 70 M. 525.

395. A judgment in replevin against a vendee cannot be evidence of a breach of his vendor's warranty of title in the absence of any evidence that such judgment depended upon the state of the title at the time of the sale: Moore v. Bostwick, 23 M. 507.

396. A judgment in replevin against a vendee for the amount of a lien does not prove breach of warranty of title unless the vendors undertook to defend the suit or had proper notice to do so: De Witt v. Prescott, 51 M. 298. See Axford v. Graham, 57 M. 422.

397. A judgment in replevin was allowed to be shown in mitigation of damages in trespass for the detention of the property: Briggs v. Milburn, 40 M. 512.

XVI. EXECUTION.

398. Executions against the body cannot be issued on circuit court judgments in replevin: Fuller v. Bowker, 11 M. 204; Tomlin v. Fisher, 27 M. 524.

399. They may, however, issue on justices' judgments (H. S. § 6958): but appeal avoids them: Tomlin v. Fisher, 27 M. 524.

400. A writ of return upon the judgment cannot be issued to the sheriff of any county except that upon which the judgment was rendered: Rathbun v. Ranney, 14 M. 382.

401. Where plaintiff in an action on a replevin bond puts in evidence a part only of the files in the replevin suit, defendant can introduce the rest in order to show that more executions have been issued on the judgment than have been made to appear: Greenlee v. Lowing, 85 M. 63.

RESTITUTION.

See ASSISTANCE, WRIT OF.

1. One in possession under a forged deed can claim no rights, and, notwithstanding improvements, ejectment need not be resorted to for possession after a decree against him; a writ of restitution is enough: Crawford v. Hoeft, 58 M. 1.

2. This writ in forcible entry cases must follow the judgment, and consequently the complaint, in describing the premises: Clark v. Gage, 19 M. 507.

3. A constable has authority under the statute of forcible entry and detainer to execute this writ: People v. Gay, 2 D. 867.

4. The writ, if served, may be proved in an action for rent based on the condition of the appeal bond, and if not served the proof is immaterial: Hecht v. Ferris, 45 M. 376.

REWARD.

1. A bank had a claim against an individual who purported to have conveyed away certain property by a deed dated in 1872. An attorney who had discovered certain facts while prosecuting a claim against the same person agreed with the bank for $100 to put it in possession of evidence or information which would enable it to collect its claim, and then showed facts indicating that the deed was fictitious. There was evidence tending to show that, by means of his knowledge, the bank obtained payment of its claim through proceedings against the property conveyed. Held, in an action for the reward, (1) that defendant's claim that furnishing the means of getting proof was not furnishing evidence was unreasonable; (2) that the information was of a kind that in the nature of things could not be shown by documents alone; and (3) that it was for the jury to determine how far it was unknown, and whether the evidence established the plaintiff's demand: Huckins v. Second National Bank, 47 M. 92.

I. WHAT CONSTITUTES; NATURE AND EFFECT.

1. A sale is a transmutation of property from one person to another for a consideration: People v. Auditor-General, 7 M. 84.

2. A sale is a parting with one's interest in a thing for a valuable consideration: Western Mass. Ins. Co. v. Riker, 10 M. 279.

3. Where property is taken at a fixed money price the transaction is a sale, whether the price is paid in money or in goods: Picard v. McCormick, 11 M. 68.

4. Every transfer of property for an equivalent is substantially a sale; money's worth is a valuable consideration as much as money itself: Huff v. Hall, 56 M. 456.

5. The sale of a chattel, where the consideration is actually paid, is valid without actual delivery, or even if the chattel at the time is lost or withheld from the vendor by a wrongdoer: Davis v. Ransom, 4 M. 238.

And see CONTRACTS, § 260.

As to validity of agreements for sale for future delivery, see CONTRACTS, §§ 280, 281, 283, 284, 287.

6. Mere knowledge on a vendor's part at the time of the sale that his vendee intends to use the property for an illegal purpose does not make the sale illegal so as to prevent the vendor's recovering the value: Webber v. Donnelly, 83 M. 469.

7. An arrangement with a miller to deliver wheat to be paid for on delivery or at any subsequent time when payment shall be demanded, and with an understanding that the miller may use it in his milling business, is a sale absolute if no right is reserved to recall or return it: Jones v. Kemp, 49 M. 9.

That the deposit of grain in an elevator constitutes a bailment and not a sale, see BAILMENT, §§ 1, 2.

8. A., desiring a loan from B., offered to mortgage his rig, but B. would not take a mortgage because of the trouble to record it. He agreed, however, to buy the rig for $25, on the understanding that A. might buy it back at the end of a month for $27, keeping and using it meanwhile. The rig was in fact left for seven months in A.'s possession, and during that time A. mortgaged it to C., who took it on his mortgage. Held, that the transaction with B. was not a sale, but a mere agreement for securing a loan, and that B. could not bring trover against C.: Berry v. Monroe, 57 M. 187.

9. The owner of a span of horses asked W. to bring them from Canada. Instead of doing so W. traded them for another span, and on his return told H. he had sold them, concealing the fact of the trade, and said he had a span that would suit him, which he subsequently pointed out to him. Held, that this was not evidence of a title to the second span: Houghton v. Ross, 54 M. 335.

10. A quantity of mowers and reapers were delivered by the manufacturers under a contract which left it uncertain whether they were sold to the recipient or whether he was merely made an agent for their sale to others. He was under no restriction as to selling them, but if in payment to the manufacturers he turned over any notes received by him, the contract required him to indorse them himself, and such notes were also to contain a "property statement," and be payable at certain dates. Held, that this was consistent with a sale of the machines to the recipient, and that a further provision that the proceeds of his own sales, whether in notes, cash or accounts, should be the manufacturers' property, and held in trust for them, was not necessarily inconsistent with it, as it only contemplated that such proceeds should be treated as security: Adriance v. Rutherford, 57 M. 170.

11. Where defendant gave plaintiff his check for $800 for a watch worth $15, the whole transaction being mere pleasantry, neither party contemplating a sale, held, that no recovery could be had on the check though defendant did not offer to return the watch until the trial: Keller v. Holderman, 11 M. 248.

12. In order to make a valid and complete contract of sale the parties' minds must meet on all essential requirements: Warner v. Feige, 65 M. 93.

13. And there is no bargain unless in some form the minds of the parties are brought into a state of concurrence in favor of the specific arrangement or transfer, even though the decision in the mind of a party to buy is settled: Peck v. Detroit Novelty Works, 29 M. 313.

14. A board of directors adopted a resolution that the corporation buy of an individual whatever stock he held at what it had cost him, but not fixing the price or the time or manner of payment. He tendered his stock, and demanded what he claimed it had cost him. Held, that he could not recover as upon a completed sale: Ibid.

15. A., who was operating a mine on royalty, offered to sell to B. a large pile of ore at 25 cents a ton and half of the net proceeds as soon as he could learn what royalty he would have to pay. B. was allowed to load a number of cars with the ore, but was informed that he could have no more on the terms stated, as it had been ascertained that the ore was worth more than first estimates. Held, that there was no sale, there being no fixed price or time of payment or delivery: Foster v. Lumbermen's Mining Co., 68 M. 188 (Jan. 12, '88).

As to acceptance and revocation of offers to sell, see CONTRACTS, §§ 54-73.

16. After shipping goods orally ordered the vendor received this telegram from the vendee: "Cancel order. Will explain by mail." The vendor replied: "Goods were shipped on 21st. Receive, and wait further orders." The vendee received the goods and put them in his stock, and no other communication passed until he had sold them. Held, a completed sale: Sullivan v. Sullivan, 70 M. 588.

17. An arrangement between father and son for an immediate and actual transfer of personal property by the former to the possession and control of the latter, in consideration of his undertaking to support and provide for his parents, will warrant the son, if he has performed on his part, in detaining and claiming title to the property upon his father's death, and as against the administrator; and in a controversy over the title between such son and administrator, there being evidence tending to establish such an agreement and performance, it is held error to put the case to the jury as one involving a promise of a testamentary gift instead of a present sale: Chambers v. Hill, 84 M. 528.

18. A lumberman turned over a quantity of logs to a banker, who took them for a firm, giving the firm's paper to the lumberman in payment, but himself keeping the title to the logs until the notes should be met, and the lumberman having the right to deposit the notes with the banker and draw against them. Held, that the transaction would warrant a finding that it was a sale from the lumberman to the banker: Davis v. Maltz, 57 M. 496.

19. By contract A. was to take and receive from B. all of certain lumber B.'s mill should get out up to Oct. 15, 1864, at a certain price per thousand feet, the lumber to be delivered at a certain pier. A. was to pay B. $500 Feb. 1, 1864, on logs already purchased by B., said amount to be secured by logs and placed in A.'s name on B.'s books, and thereafter all logs to be bought in A.'s name, A. to pay on them $500 March 1 and $500 March 15; the balance of payments to be made on delivery of said lumber in drafts payable at 30 and 60 days' sight in Chicago; and if the measurement of said lumber should overrun the scale, the difference was to belong to A., and all lumber remaining unshipped after Oct. 15 was to be paid for at that time in drafts as above mentioned. Under said agreement a large number of logs were got out, and placed in A.'s name on B.'s books, and sawed by B., and a portion of the lumber delivered. In replevin by A. for part of this lumber, held, that the intent was to place the logs to be purchased, as well as those already purchased, in A.'s name as security only; that the object of the security was not only to secure any advantages that might be made, but the performance of the entire contract on B.'s part; and that B. was bound to deliver the lumber on a proper demand, it not appearing that A. refused to pay according to the contract: Phillips v. Raymond, 17 M. 287.

20. An agreement to sell certain stock, including fifteen of the vendor's "best pigs and such two sows as they belong to," means the best two litters aggregating fifteen: Howard v. Bellows, 49 M. 620.

21. A contract for a specified quantity, more or less, is valid where the parties understand that a reasonable deviation from the amount stated shall not defeat the contract. Held, that 473,000 feet of lumber was enough to satisfy a call for 500,000, more or less, especially where the purchaser took away part of the mass and paid for what he removed: Holland v. Rea, 48 M. 218.

22. A contract purported to sell "all the brick now situated and being in a certain kiln . . . to the amount of 530,000." Five hundred thousand were delivered and paid for.

The provisions in the contract for freight and payment tended to show that the parties did not contemplate a sale of more than 500,000, and this was confirmed by a written undertaking, signed by defendant, "to load 420,000 brick on the balance of 500,000 not shipped." Held, that the contract passed only 500,000: Brown v. Starret, 67 M. 577.

23. A contract for the sale of "timber now lying in Van Etten lake" gave "the privilege of increasing the amount," and provided that "all timber hereafter cut is to scale 12 inches and upwards." Held, that this final clause did not cover the timber in the lake: McKay v. Evans, 48 M. 597.

24. Where timber was contracted for, to average not less than seventy feet to the stick, and a subsequent agreement was made to take more timber on the same terms, the purchaser was entitled to have the whole lot average seventy feet to the stick, and to damages for any deficiency in that average: Merick v. McNally, 26 M. 874.

25. And where the agreement was to furnish timber suitable for a particular market, the standard of measurement customarily used for that market is contemplated: Ibid.

See CONTRACTS, §§ 352-355, 363.

26. A contract was made for timber to be delivered on the cars at P., subject to the inspection of the railway company's inspector. Held, that the contract contemplated such inspection as was customary: McLennan v. McDermid, 50 M. 379.

27. By the contract of purchase of goods the price was to be regulated by the price of gold, but no advance or reduction of 25 per cent. in the price of gold was to change the price of the goods unless it should remain at the advanced or reduced rate sufficiently long to affect the general price of merchandise. Held, that such qualification was not applicable where the change in the price of gold had greatly exceeded 25 per cent.: Ames v. Quimby, 96 U. S. 324.

As to locality of contract of sale, see CONFLICT OF LAWS, §§ 21-30.

(b) When title passes.

28. At the common law a contract for the sale of goods, where nothing remained to be done by the seller before making delivery, transfers the right of property, though the price has not been paid nor the thing sold delivered to the purchaser: Kling v. Fries, 33 M. 275.

29. Where no question arises under the statute of frauds and the rights of creditors do not intervene, the question whether a sale is completed or only executory must usually be determined from the intent of the parties as ascertained from their contract, the situation of the thing sold, and the circumstances surrounding the sale: Lingham v. Eggleston, 27 M. 324.

30. The question whether a contract of sale operates as an immediate transfer of title is to be determined by the intent of the parties as gathered from the contract: Brewer v. Michigan Salt Assoc., 47 M. 526.

31. Defendant sent wheat by railroad from Hudson to Toledo, consigning part of it to H. & Co. and part to F. On its arrival at Toledo the wheat was mingled with other like grain in the railroad elevator. The receipts given for the wheat made it deliverable to the consignees or order. Defendant then made sale of the wheat to plaintiff, and received payment for the same, and gave him an order on F. for its delivery. Before plaintiff found F., or obtained delivery of the wheat, it was destroyed by the burning of the elevator. Held: 1. That the legal control of the wheat was in the consignees, through whose co-operation alone the title could be vested in the plaintiff. 2. That the order upon F. was an undertaking on the part of defendant that F. would complete the sale by delivery of the wheat; and that he was liable to the plaintiff for a breach of that undertaking: Perkins v. Dacon, 13 M. 81.

32. T. agreed orally to sell P. certain logs on the skidways, to be there scaled by C., and to be paid for in indorsed paper unless cash was paid. At P.'s request F. was to be allowed to assist C. in scaling, and the scale was made and agreed on as figured by F. The logs were scaled May 7, 1887, and between that and May 12 P. bargained them to B., who was to have them as delivered on the cars. During the interval M., on T.'s behalf, applied to P. for pay, and P. requested him to procure written authority; but before this was obtained the logs were burned. In suit by T. against P. for agreed price, held it was for the jury to say whether there had been a completed sale so as to pass title to P.: Toohy v. Plummer, 65 M. 688, 69 M. 345 (April 13, '88).

33. Goods were consigned by a vendor in excess of his order, and were received by the vendee, who held the excess subject to the consignor's order, advancing the freight charges and notifying the consignor. Held that, on the destruction of the excess by fire, without the consignee's fault, he was not liable for their value; that he could recover the freight advanced, and that it was immaterial, the goods being of the same quality, from what cars, whether earlier or later, he took the quantity necessary to fill his order: Larkin v. Mitchell & R. L. Co., 42 M. 296.

34. Goods were forwarded for acceptance if satisfactory, but acceptance and payment was unreasonably delayed and the consignee meanwhile assigned. Held, that title had not passed and the goods were not covered by the assignment: Shipman v. Graves, 41 M. 675.

35. Under a contract for the sale of lumber, to be delivered "when ready to ship, or when vessel is ready to send for it," it was held that, when nothing remains to be done by the vendor except to deliver it, and everything depends upon the action and convenience of the vendee, the title passes and vests in the vendee, so that upon the destruction of the lumber by fire, without the vendor's fault, neglect or carelessness, the vendor is entitled to recover the purchase price: Whitcomb v. Whitney, 24 M. 486.

✓ 36. A. agreed, in the month of August, to buy from B. all the lumber to be cut from a certain lot of logs, A. to pay the cost of freighting said logs to mill on the railroad the first of each month, as the logs should be delivered to the mill, he also to pay the saw-bill as the lumber should be sawed and delivered on the dock at Tawas, Mich., and the remaining balance of said purchase at ninety days from date of shipment of the lumber; and the lumber was to be shipped within thirty days after it should be sawed and piled. Held, (1) that the title passed with the piling on the dock; (2) that the time of shipment should be left to the jury to ascertain from all the facts and circumstances what was the intent of the parties: Jenkinson v. Monroe, 61 M. 454.

37. Title by sale never passes absolutely and for all purposes on delivery without payment, except in sales on credit: Lentz v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 53 M. 444.

38. L. bargained for hogs at a price of which he paid part down, and was to pay the rest on delivery at the shipping place, where they were to be weighed. He contracted to sell the whole to M. at a specified price per pound, receiving part payment down and the rest when the weight should be ascertained and delivery made to him. If M. did not pay then in full the payment down was to be forfeited. On the day fixed for delivery M. was not ready to pay, and next day S. sold the hogs to B. Held, that M. could not, upon tender of payment, maintain trover against S. and B., nor any other action based on his ownership of the hogs, for he never had title: McDonough v. Sutton, 85 M. 1.

39. An understanding that title to personalty should pass before full payment is made for it may be implied from circumstances: Bonn v. Haire, 40 M. 404.

40. The presumption that title does not pass upon a sale so long as anything remains to be done to determine the sum to be paid is not conclusive, but may be overcome by such facts and circumstances as indicate a contrary intent in the parties, and the intent is a question of fact and not of law: Byles v. Colier, 54 M. 1.

41. Where the vendor of logs on delivering them to the vendee's agent put the vendee's mark thereon, an agreement that title should not pass before payment was held waived: Hance v. Tittabawassee Boom Co., 70 M. 237 (May 11, '88).

42. The fact that there is no change in possession is not conclusive against a change of title: Brewer v. Michigan Salt Assoc., 47 M. 526.

43. A corporation made a contract with manufacturers of salt, whereby it was to take all the salt manufactured by them, the salt to become its property as soon as inspected and branded, but the manufacturers to furnish storage for the salt and be responsible for it until delivery. Held, where a certain quantity belonging to a manufacturer, after being inspected and branded, and while it remained on his premises, was destroyed by fire, that the corporation had become the owner and must pay for it: Ibid.

44. Where parties contract to make a present sale with possession of an interest in a crop of wheat, payment thereof to be made at a future day in oats instead of money, and such possession is given as is possible in such a case, the title passes at once: Crapo v. Seybold, 36 M. 444.

45. Under a contract for the sale of personal property not within the statute of frauds, manual delivery of the article sold is not essential to the passing of the title, unless made so by the understanding of the parties, and their intention is the governing consideration in every case: Whitcomb v. Whitney, 24 M. 486.

46. Title may pass without delivery if the property sold is sufficiently identified, and even if something remains to be done to fit it for delivery: Byles v. Colier, 54 M. 1.

47. Sale of machinery to be affixed to the freehold, a part of the price being paid down and the balance secured by mortgage on the machinery, which, however, was not to be delivered until the owner of the realty should indorse upon the mortgage his recognition of the mortgagee's rights. Held, that the title passed at the time of the sale, and only the delivery was suspended until such recognition was indorsed: Hicks's Case, 20 M. 280.

48. Delivery of possession is enough to transfer title on the sale of personal property: Adams v. Lee, 31 M. 440.

49. Complete delivery is almost conclusive evidence that the property shall vest in the purchaser and be at his risk, notwithstanding that weighing, measuring, inspection, etc., is to be done afterwards: Lingham v. Eggleston, 27 M. 324.

50. Where there has been a complete delivery of the property in accordance with the terms of sale, the title passes, although something remains to be done in order to ascertain the total value of the goods at the rates specified in the contract: Hatch v. Standard Oil Co., 100 U. S. 124.

51. While delivery is usually the most significant fact to prove the transfer of title, it is not conclusive, as there may be an express understanding to the contrary, and so likewise there may be an implied one: Wilkinson v. Holiday, 33 M. 886.

52. Delivery of symbolic possession is not in itself conclusive evidence of passage of title, and has not as significant a bearing upon the question whether a sale has been completed as the fact that the quantity and the amount to be paid have not been determined: Hatch v. Fowler, 28 M. 205.

53. Whether by the understanding of the parties the title to logs under contract of purchase was to pass with their delivery to the boom company, held, under the circumstances of the case, to be a question of fact for the jury: Wilkinson v. Holiday, 33 M. 886.

54. Under a contract of sale of logs in a boom, it being a sale of all the logs at fixed prices, and nothing remaining for the vendors to do—the amount to be ascertained by a boom-master whose duty it is to scale the logs—the title vests at once in the vendee: Leonard v. Davis, 1 Black (U. S.), 476.

55. Delivery is not always necessary to perfect a sale; but there must always be an identification of the thing sold, in some way, so that it may stand apart from other things with which it might be confounded, and there must be a present transfer of the entire property: Perkins v. Dacon, 13 M. 81.

56. Where, under a contract for the purchase of personalty, something remains to be done to identify the property, or put it in condition for delivery, or determine the sum to be paid for it, the presumption is strong, but not conclusive, that by the understanding of the parties the title was not to pass until such act had been fully done; the question is only one of mutual intent: Wilkinson v. Holiday, 33 M. 886.

57. That a boom company's charges upon logs contracted to be sold were to be paid by the vendee raises a strong presumption that the logs were held for him and that the company was his bailee; but the fact that the logs were to be subsequently scaled in order to determine how much was due tends to rebut this presumption: Ibid.

58. A bargain was made for the sale of 200 cords of hard wood, to be taken out of the first six tiers, and as far as required out of the seventh tier of a pile of mixed wood, and to be removed by the purchaser and measured as taken, the soft wood being thrown out; held not to constitute a completed sale or to transfer the title to any specific portion of said wood so as to authorize the vendor to recover the purchase price upon its destruction by fire: Hahn v. Fredericks, 30 M. 223.

59. Under a contract for the sale of two hundred tons of No. 1 pig iron, to be thereafter delivered, the vendor manufacturing various grades of iron and producing large quantities daily, and piling all the iron as fast as made upon the dock in separate piles according to the several qualities as he chooses to determine them, it was held that in the absence of any inspection for or acceptance by the vendee, or of any mark upon any of the respective piles to identify them as belonging to the vendee or to distinguish them from any other of the same grade, the title to any specific portion does not pass to the vendee, and he cannot recover in an action of replevin against the sheriff for taking any portion thereof on a valid execution against the vendor: First National Bank v. Crowley, 24 M. 492.

60. If goods are unmistakably designated, neither delivery, deliverable condition, nor a determination as to the quantity or quality, when the price depends on either or both, is absolutely essential to the completeness of the sale; these circumstances bear on the intent, but are not conclusive: Lingham v. Eggleston, 27 M. 324.

61. A contract for the sale of specific ascertained goods vests the property immediately in the buyer and gives the seller a right to the price, unless it is shown that such was not the intention of the parties: Hatch v. Standard Oil Co., 100 U. S. 124.

62. Under a contract for the sale of staves to be manufactured, piled and counted, title passes to the vendee when those things are done: Ibid.

63. Where a debtor has turned out to a creditor in payment of the debt certain specified piles of lumber, which were designated and marked, and put into the charge of a person who accepted the duty for the vendee, though in the general employ of the vendor, the transaction amounts to a completed sale and transfer of the title, though the amount was to be ascertained by future measurement, and the purchase price to be determined by future inspection, the vendee paying any excess of the purchase price over his debt, and the vendor making good any deficiency: Colwell v. Keystone Iron Co., 36 M. 51.

64. An executory agreement to sell a growing crop of wheat for one hundred bushels of oats is held not to have constituted a completed sale and transfer of title of the wheat, so long as the oats remained undelivered and mingled with other oats belonging to the purchaser of the wheat, under an arrangement that they should be stored by him for a time and be measured out and delivered in the future, or should be drawn to market and sold and the proceeds paid over to the vendor of the wheat: Crapo v. Seybold, 35 M. 169.

65. Under a contract to saw and sell lumber at stipulated prices according to quality, the sorting and inspection to be final when loaded in cars, it was held that title did not pass to lumber sawed and piled in the mill-yard and burned before inspection, and the vendee could not be liable in an action on the contract as for a refusal to accept: Wagar v. Farrin, 71 M. — (July 11, '88).

66. On a sale of ore from which that which is worthless has to be separated when it is loaded for delivery, title does not pass to the purchaser until then: Foster v. Lumberman's Mining Co., 68 M. 188.

67. Where the vendees, by oral contract, bought $3,000 worth of lumber, no class being designated in quantity, but the amount to be taken out of any of three grades as they might order, and to be loaded by the vendor — there being no designation, marking or setting out of the lumber — the title did not pass to any lumber until it was loaded: Case v. Gunnison, 68 M. 147.

68. Where a contract was made for the sale and delivery within a specified boom of a certain number of logs, measuring a certain number of feet by a scale agreed upon, and it afterward appeared that the enumeration and measurement were wrong and that the logs delivered exceeded those contracted for in number, but fell short in cubic contents, it was held that the contract was not for a sale in bulk, but for a fixed number measuring a certain amount; that there being more than the number stated, these logs could not be identified until delivery in the boom, and that no title passed till delivery: Ortman v. Green, 26 M. 209.

69. Delivery of a greater quantity than was contracted for does not prevent title from passing to the vendee, if the vendor has received the consideration agreed on. All the vendor can claim is liberty to remove the excess without putting the vendee to inconvenience: De Graff v. Byles, 68 M. 25.

70. Where an amount of timber was identified and sold at a given price per foot, and put under the control of the purchaser, it was held that the sale was complete, measurement not being necessary in such case to pass title, and none but a constructive delivery being possible. Such a sale could not be revoked by subsequent notice: Adams Mining Co. v. Senter, 26 M. 78.

71. Where the price depends on the quantity or quality of the goods, whatever remains to be done by the vendor or by the mutual concurrence of both parties for determining it, as by weighing, testing or measuring, is presumptively a condition precedent to the transfer of the property: Lingham v. Eggleston, 27 M. 324.

72. Where money has been paid upon a sale of personalty that has been set apart for the purchaser by examination and estimate of its quantity, the fact that it must be further inspected in order to determine how much remains to be paid is not inconsistent with the purpose that the title should pass upon the partial payment: Byles v. Collier, 54 M. 1.

73. A contract for the sale of lumber provided that a balance of payment was to be adjusted "on basis of eight per cent. interest, after thirty days from date, on amount due either party hereto, when lumber is tallied or inspected. Said tally or inspection is to be made within thirty days from date by tallyman or inspector agreeable to both parties hereto, and each party standing one-half of the expense thereof; all other expenses from and after this date to be paid by the" purchaser. Held, that title passed by this memorandum of agreement; but, whether it did or not, the expense of storage until the lumber should be removed fell upon the purchaser: Ducey Lumber Co. v. Lane, 58 M. 521.

74. Whether a contract for sale of a cow at a certain price per pound passed title before or after the weighing was held to depend on the intention of the parties and to be a question for the jury: Sherwood v. Walker, 66 M. 568.

75. Where goods sold have been identified and set apart for the vendee, who accepts a draft delivered to a third party for the price, the fact that they have not yet been received and weighed by the vendee and the quantity agreed upon or ascertained does not prevent the title's passing to him: Sandler v. Bresnahan, 53 M. 567.

76. The purchaser of goods replevied them from an officer who took them on an attachment against the vendor. The sale embraced transactions beginning Jan. 6th, and closing on the 9th or 10th. The levy was made June 10th. Under a charge that, unless the sale was made before the levy, defendant was entitled to a verdict, the jury found for plaintiff. Held, that it must be assumed that they found the sale to have been completed on the 9th, if such assumption were necessary to sustain the verdict. And if the case was so submitted that the jury might have found that the sale was completed on the 6th, although the facts were not sufficient to establish it, the verdict must stand if no instruction was asked for as to the effect of what took place that day; and if no exception was taken on the specific point, that the evidence was insufficient to show a complete sale at that time: Id., 54 M. 343.

As to measure of damages for failure to deliver as per agreement, see DAMAGES, §§ 83, 84, 89, 90, 188-205, 232-238, 241.

Delivery to take case out of STATUTE OF FRAUDS, see that title, IV, (c).

77. Where a contract for the sale and delivery of wool provides that the delivery is to be made upon notice from the purchaser, such notice is essential to a recovery: Chadwick v. Butler, 28 M. 349.

78. In an action for the price of wool sold which the vendee refused to accept and pay for, the vendee claimed that he was not liable because the wool had not been delivered within a reasonable time after notice was mailed directing the vendor to forward the wool. Held, that the vendor was not in default if he acted promptly after receipt of the notice: Burhans v. Corey, 17 M. 282.

79. If a contract to sell and deliver logs fixes no time for delivery, it is enough if they are delivered in a reasonable time: McGraw v. Dole, 63 M. 1.

80. Where a contract was made on July 20th to sell and deliver a crop of wool "in a reasonable time, viz., within two weeks," a demand for delivery made on August 12th was held to be within a reasonable time: Chadwick v. Butler, 28 M. 349.

81. Where a contract was made for a harvester to be delivered ready for use by July 15th, and the vendor was to furnish a man to set it up and start it, it could not be considered delivered until set up; and no question of reasonable time would arise, especially if the machine was needed for immediate use: Wood Mowing, etc. Machine Co. v. Gartner, 68 M. 520.

Further as to reasonable time, see CONTRACTS, §§ 504, 505.

82. The question of delivery is one of fact, and is mainly governed by the intention of the parties. Where the evidence is equivocal it is properly a question of fact for the jury, under proper instructions, and must be submitted to them, unless it is plain, as matter of law, that the evidence will justify a finding but one way: Gibbons v. Robinson, 63 M. 146.

83. When an actual transmission of the thing itself by the seller to the buyer is impossible, constructive or symbolical delivery, producing as far as practicable the same effect, is allowed (Per MARTIN, Ch. J.): Perkins v. Dacon, 18 M. 81.

84. A symbolic delivery is sufficient to pass the title to logs floating in the water: Leonard v. Davis, 1 Black (U. S.), 476.

85. Vendor and purchaser can agree for future symbolical delivery, as by tender of warehouse receipts; and before the time for delivery the vendee can transfer his right to a third person, who would be entitled to possession at the time specified: Gregory v. Wendell, 39 M. 337.

86. In delivering grain to a purchaser on 'change it is sufficient to tender elevator receipts if it appears that the bearer could obtain the grain upon them: Gregory v. Wendell, 40 M. 432.

87. Where ore is piled at the point of delivery in a mass larger than was contracted for, and nothing remains but to take the contract quantity from the pile, it seems that it is a sufficient delivery: Iron Cliffs Co. v. Buhl, 42 M. 86.

88. A mining company agreed to sell two thousand tons of ore to an iron company and deliver it at a certain point whence it was to be taken by rail to the consignees. The contract quantity was delivered, and with more ore of the same kind was deposited in a pile at the point of delivery; but the consignees directed the railroad company to cease forwarding it for a time, as they had no room for it. They paid in full for the contract quantity, however; but as they did not finally receive the full amount, they sued the railroad company for the amount which it had failed to deliver. Held, (1) that by these acts the iron company asserted their understanding that when the ore was delivered in the pile it was under their control; and (2) that they could not sue the mining company for the deficiency: Ibid.

89. Delivery of such property as a flock of sheep can only be made by surrendering possession with intent to transfer the title thereto, and by accepting it as owner: Case v. Dewey, 55 M. 116.

90. A contract for logs provided that the vendor should drive them to the main stream to be taken in charge by a booming company when its drive went down, and if too late should follow and overtake the drive. The vendor engaged another person, who was taking a large quantity of other logs, to meet the drive, to take these logs with them, but he missed the drive, and as he could not separate the logs and had engaged to take the other logs further he took these also, the vendor apparently acquiescing. When he reached his destination the main drive had not been overtaken, and as he was going no further the purchaser, without objection from the vendor, engaged the booming company to go back and collect the logs and run them to a designated place. Held, that the course of the parties to the contract of sale amounted to a delivery which cut off any lien the vendor might have had on the logs, and his right to stop them in transit: Muskegon Booming Co. v. Underhill, 43 M. 629.

91. Where a contract for the sale of a stock in a store specifies that the vendor excepts and reserves therefrom whatever the same may inventory above $4,500, which excess he is to take from the stock, payment to be made in land and money as soon as the inventory is completed — the delivery of the goods and payment in the mode specified in the contract to be simultaneous — and the inventory shows an excess, there can be no delivery so as to pass title until the vendor takes out the goods excepted and reserved in excess of $4,500: Pierson v. Spaulding, 67 M. 640.

92. Where, under an arrangement that the store should be kept open for trade while the inventory was making, and in contemplation that a sale would be consummated in accordance with the written agreement the vendee made purchases and assisted in selling goods from the stock, and did other acts in expectation that the purchase would be completed as provided for in the contract, and no actual delivery or acceptance was alleged by plaintiff to have occurred until the 9th day of June, held, that testimony as to what the vendee said and did prior to the 9th day of June, and while the delivery was making, was not admissible for the purpose of showing delivery and acceptance upon the 9th: Ibid.

93. The counting out of shingles by purchasers, and the marking of a bunch on the top of each pile or two with their brand, is a complete delivery sufficient to pass the title where nothing remains to be done by either party except to load them upon the cars, as required by the contract: Marthinson v. Wagner, 63 M. 543.

94. A quantity of barrels were sold from a large stock stored in the warehouse of a bailee who was accustomed to deliver to purchasers upon presentation of a bill of sale. He was notified of the sale by both parties, and at the request of the purchaser, to whom a bill of sale had been given, he undertook to keep the barrels safely until called for. But they were not designated, nor separated from the rest, which were of the same size and quality. Held, that there was sufficient delivery to pass title, and protect the barrels sold from an execution levy against the vendors upon the general stock: Carpenter v. Graham, 42 M. 191.

95. Where machinery sold is in a building owned by the vendee's wife, and of which he holds the keys, all the possession that can be delivered is taken by him: Edwards v. Edwards, 54 M. 347.

96. A farm laborer orally agreed with his employer to take in payment a number of hogs which were pointed out, but which were to remain in the pasture and be fed by the employer, with others, until there should be an opportunity to sell them. Held, that there was sufficient delivery to transfer title as against a subsequent levy on the employer's property: Webster v. Anderson, 42 M. 554.

97. The evidence necessary to show a change in the possession of property transferred by an uncle to his nephews living together on the same premises would be different from that otherwise needed; and where there is uncertainty, it is for the jury to determine from the evidence whether the change was effected: McLaughlin v. Lange, 42 M. 81.

98. The possession of logs by a boom company for booming purposes is the possession of the owner, and not in contravention of any right of property, control or possession in him, but subordinate and subservient to his authority and purpose; such custody, therefore, is no obstacle to such a change of possession or delivery to a purchaser or mortgagee as the nature of the property and its situation permits: Sheldon v. Warner, 26 M. 408.

99. Possession of goods by a warehouseman or other agent or bailee of the vendor or mortgager is not that of a third person so as to dispense with the necessity of delivery and of an actual change of possession, unless notice is given to him of the change of title. After such notice he ceases to hold as the vendor's agent, and, if he still retains possession, he becomes the vendee's agent: Buhl Iron Works v. Teuton, 67 M. 623.

As to the change of possession required where bulky or heavy property is mortgaged or sold as security, see CHATTEL MORTGAGES, §§ 59, 60.

See STATUTE OF FRAUDS, IV, (c).

100. A contract for delivery of timber "on the rail" of a vessel does not, in the absence of express provision, contemplate that it shall be inspected for acceptance at any later stage: Brownlee v. Bolton, 44 M. 218.

101. If one who contracts for goods to be delivered at a given time receives them as the goods bargained for, without objection, though not delivered until long afterwards, he is liable for the contract price: Peter v. Thickstun, 51 M. 590.

102. The act of a contract purchaser in receiving without protest what is delivered under the contract to the amount bargained for, amounts to a waiver of any difference in quality between what he had a right to demand and what he has actually received: Comstock v. Sanger, 51 M. 497.

103. If a vendee accepts and pays for blocks delivered to him under contract without rejecting any, though complaining of their defects, he waives any particular time and condition for such delivery; nor can he reject sound blocks thereafter delivered: McFadden v. Wetherbee, 63 M. 390.

104. A purchaser under a contract for the delivery from time to time of a certain number of logs measuring in the aggregate a given number of feet does not waive his objection to the failure to furnish logs of a proper average size by receiving such as are furnished below it; because he cannot assume that the deficiency will not be made up by the logs not yet delivered: Ortman v. Green, 26 M. 209.

Acceptance of goods as fulfilling warranty, see supra, §§ 162-165. See, also, as to acceptance, supra, §§ 232, 233.

II. FRAUD AND MISTAKE.

Sales fraudulent as to creditors, see FRAUD, II.

As to rescission, see infra, IV, (b).

105. A purchase made by one who is insolvent, and with the purpose not to pay, is void even though the buyer has not made false representations: Shipman v. Seymour, 40 M. 275.

106. If a merchant buys goods intending never to pay for them, and intending to avoid payment by mortgaging them to another creditor, this is such a fraud as avoids the sale; it is the same as if the vendee had made false and fraudulent representations as to his financial standing at the time of the purchase: Ross v. Miner, 67 M. 410.

107. To avoid, on the ground of fraud, a sale of goods on credit, the fraud must have existed when the goods were sold, but it may be made out by evidence of the vendee's subsequent acts, admissions and dealings; and the vendor in an action to recover the goods is not restricted to evidence of the fraud and misrepresentations made by the vendee at or before the time of the sale: Ross v. Miner, 64 M. 204.

108. In order to prove fraudulent purchases it is not necessary to show defendants' complicity in the original scheme if there was a scheme. They may be unable to hold the goods without being guilty of actual dishonesty: Redpath v. Brown, 71 M. — (July 11, '88).

109. No inference of fraud can be drawn from the fact that money not yet due remains unpaid; but there is no error in admitting testimony that the purchase price of goods purchased by means of a falsehood is still unpaid: Shipman v. Seymour, 40 M. 275.

110. In an action for the value of goods sold, evidence that they were sold to defraud the vendor's wife is irrelevant; the sale might be fraudulent as to her but good as between the parties, and the question of fraud must be left to be raised by the party defrauded, who waives it by taking no proceedings to obtain redress: Cool v. Snover, 38 M. 562.

111. A bill of sale of a livery stock included "two two-seated full-top carriages," but it afterward appeared that one of the carriages which the vendor supposed was a full-top was not so. Held, that this mistake of fact could not, in law, relieve him of the obligation to deliver a full-top in its place or account for the value of such a carriage: Lampson v. Cummings, 52 M. 491.

In sale of land, see VENDORS, II.

As to false representations generally, see FRAUD, §§ 15-37.

112. A mere assertion of value made by the seller, where no warranty is intended, is no ground of relief to a purchaser, because the assertion is a matter of opinion which does not imply knowledge, and in which men differ. Every person reposes at his peril in the opinions of others where he has equal opportunity to form and exercise his own judgment: Picard v. McCormick, 11 M. 68.

113. But it cannot be laid down as a rule of law that value is never a material fact. And when the purchaser expressly relies upon the knowledge of the seller as to quality or value, the seller is bound to act honorably and deal fairly with the purchaser: Ibid.

114. A jeweller, knowing the purchaser's ignorance, deliberately and designedly availed himself of it to defraud him by false statements of the value of articles in his trade, which none but an expert could reasonably be expected to understand. It was held that an action would lie for fraud: Ibid.

115. A vendor's statements of his opinion as to his stock do not generally stand on the same footing as facts; but they are sometimes ground of liability in an action for fraud where they are meant and understood on both sides to be relied on: Jackson v. Collins, 39 M. 557.

116. A vendor's honestly expressed but incorrect opinion as to the amount, quality and value of the goods he sells will not support an action for fraudulent representations if the purchaser sees or knows the property, or has opportunities to know it. The purchaser cannot recover unless the vendor, with superior means of knowledge, intentionally gives a false opinion as to material facts for the purpose of defrauding the purchaser, and the latter has reason to rely and does rely on it as true: Collins v. Jackson, 54 M. 186.

117. In an action for fraudulent representations by the vendor on the sale of goods, it is for the jury to determine whether the opinion expressed is false and known to be so to the vendor, and to what extent it is relied on by the purchaser without negligence: Ibid.

118. Complainant being owner of certain real estate sold the same to defendant, and received in payment certain copper stock and defendant's note. Defendant directed complainant, before taking the stock, to make inquiries as to its value, and not to rely upon the defendant's estimation of it. The stock proved worthless. Held, that in such a case, where parties stand upon equal terms as to their opportunity of obtaining information concerning them, each must rely upon his own judgment and means of information: Becker v. Hastings, 15 M. 47.

119. Where one who offers a mortgage in payment remarks on its value, irrespective of the question of the existence of a prior mortgage, his remarks should be taken simply as the expression of his opinion, or as a matter of commendation; the other party to the trade, if ordinarily diligent, can judge of the value as well as he, and is therefore not relieved from the application of the principle of caveat emptor in regard to it: Bristol v. Braidwood, 28 M. 191.

120. Where one used a mortgage in making payment, his statement that there was no prior mortgage that he knew of, was not a fraudulent representation, but was of a character to fairly put the vendor upon inquiry to ascertain the fact for himself: Ibid.

121. Where the purchaser of a mortgage on distant lands relies on and is misled by representations made to him by the seller as to the mortgagor's responsibility and the value of the securities, which representations, though honestly made, were really false, they amount in legal effect to fraud, even though the seller had suggested to the purchaser that he look at the lands himself, as their judgment might not agree, and had offered to pay his traveling expenses if they did not suit; such a suggestion implies the assertion that the seller had exercised an intelligent judgment, and would increase the purchaser's sense of security therein: Webster v. Bailey, 31 M. 86.

122. A contract of sale cannot usually be avoided for an undervaluation, or because a party in bargaining has sought to abate and depreciate the price by the common bantering between buyer and seller: Swinn v. Bush, 26 M. 99.

123. A vendor's representation that a corporation's mortgage bond which he was selling "was just as good as gold, and was just as good as wheat in the bin, and was worth $1,000," was not allowed to sustain a recovery in an action for fraud and deceit brought by the vendee: French v. Fitch, 67 M. 492 (Nov. 10, '87).

124. In an action to recover damages for the sale to plaintiff of certain corporate stock by fraud and deceit, and also a mortgage bond of the corporation, certain evidence as to the value of the corporation's real estate, made some time after the sale and after the company's factory had closed, was held too remote, and the error of admitting it was held not cured by the court's charge: Ibid.

125. Defendant sold plaintiff shares of corporate stock, representing that the capital stock was all paid up. Defendant admitted the representation, and claimed that it was true. The evidence showed that when the company was formed only 60 per cent. was paid in on the stock, and it was claimed that afterward, before plaintiff bought, 40 per cent. was paid in by stock dividends or by adding the profits of the business to the capital stock, thus increasing it to its full face value. Held, that there was sufficient evidence in the case to warrant submission to the jury (who found for plaintiff): Kryger v. Andrews, 65 M. 405.

126. Representations made by a vendor at the time of a sale as to the quality of the article sold are merged in an express warranty; and an action of fraud cannot be based on such representations unless the vendor knew them to be false when made: Horner v. Fellows, 1 D. 51.

127. One who, to induce another to buy, recklessly makes a false representation, of the truth or falsity of which he knows nothing, whereby the vendee is deceived and defrauded, is liable: Beebe v. Knapp, 28 M. 53.

128. One is liable for false representations made intentionally to induce, and which do induce, action in reliance upon them; and it is fraud if he believes or has reason to believe them false, whether he knows them to be false or not: Stone v. Covell, 29 M. 359.

129. In an action for the value of timber delivered under a contract, there was no error in excluding testimony that before the contract was made one of the plaintiffs had represented the timber as of specified dimensions, where there was nothing to show that the representation was made to any one interested: McKay v. Evans, 48 M. 597.

130. In trover for goods sold upon representations by the purchaser as to his solvency, the jury have no right to assume that the plaintiff did not rely on the representations in making sale, if there is testimony to support his claim that he did, and none to the contrary: Heineman v. Steiger, 54 M. 282.

131. One who enters a vessel on a shipbroker's books as for sale is responsible for the correctness of the data of description there appearing, if they were meant to be relied on and were relied on: Gilchrist v. Manning, 54 M. 210.

132. The continuous use which the purchaser of a vessel may be compelled to make of it after discovering defects does not waive damages to which he is entitled for false representations, whatever effect it may have on his right to a rescission: Ibid.

133. False representations, whereby a vendee is deceived and defrauded, may be treated as warranties and assumpsit brought at the vendee's option: Carter v. Glass, 44 M. 154.

Damages for inducing vendee to buy goods on false representations, see DAMAGES, § 240.

III. WARRANTIES.

134. Where a blank warranty with the vendor's printed signature is indorsed on an order for a machine, in which order the full benefit of such warranty is reserved to the vendee, such reference to the warranty constitutes the order and the warranty one instrument, and failure to fill up the blanks is immaterial; and the printed signature, being adopted by the vendor, binds: Grieb v. Cole, 60 M. 397.

135. No particular form of words is required to constitute a warranty, nor need the word "warrant" be used; but it is necessary that such expressions should be used as show the intention of the party to bind himself to make good the quantity named, and not a mere statement or expression of opinion as to the quantity of lumber which could be manufactured from the logs from which it was to be cut: Switzer v. Pinconning Manuf. Co., 59 M. 488.

136. A binding contract of warranty must express or imply a promise to make good such representations as to the merchandise sold as were relied on by the purchaser in buying; it cannot rest merely on the seller's expressions of an honest opinion, however mistaken it may be: Linn v. Gunn, 56 M. 447.

137. The representation by the vendor of a threshing-machine that it is a very good machine and will do nice work is not a warranty: Worth v. McConnell, 42 M. 478.

138. In a contract for the sale and delivery of a patent diamond drill, the proviso that the machine was "to be complete in everything for working" is held not to be an express warranty that the machine would do the work for which it was purchased, but to mean only that the machine, such as it was in principle and range of usefulness, should be delivered fully prepared and equipped to do what in principle it was capable of doing: McGraw v. Fletcher, 35 M. 104.

139. The vendee of a steam-engine which proved of little or no value defended a suit for the purchase price, claiming that he bought with warranty, and relying upon statements of the vendor at the time of the sale to establish the warranty. But it appeared that after the engine had been thoroughly tested and proved a failure, he had written letters to the vendor from time to time, apologizing for not having paid for the engine as he had agreed, and asking more time—in none of which was any allusion made to a warranty, or claim set up to damages. Held, that these letters satisfactorily negatived any idea that the statements of the vendor at the sale were regarded as a warranty: Deuel v. Higgins, 9 M. 228.

140. Value may be the subject of warranty in a contract of sale: Picard v. McCormick, 11 M. 68.

141. A warranty of the soundness of a horse, unless expressly restricted, extends to all manner of soundness, whether known to the vendor or not; and the question whether the animal was in any way unsound at the time of sale is for a jury: Van Hoesen v. Cameron, 54 M. 609.

(b) Implied warranties.

142. Where a warranty is express there can be no implications: McGraw v. Fletcher, 35 M. 104.

143. When articles of food are bought for domestic consumption, and the vendor sells them for that express purpose, the law implies a warranty that they are fit for such purpose, whether the sale be by a retailer or by any other person: Hoover v. Peters, 18 M. 51.

144. A baker impliedly warrants the wholesomeness of the bread which he sells at a discount to the peddler who distributes it: Sinclair v. Hathaway, 57 M. 60.

145. A usage in effect warranting without express warranty the soundness of uninspected fish caught within the state, and sold, is void as defeating the policy of the inspection law: Tremble v. Crowell, 17 M. 493.

146. Where the vendee of timber sold by written contract failed to secure an express warranty as to the amount of timber of the quality sold, it was held that no warranty could be implied, though the yield through unsoundness fell short of what was expected: Nester v. Michigan Land, etc. Co., 69 M. 290 (April 13, '89).

147. A sale according to a scale already made, without any previous employment of the scaler by the vendee as well as the vendor, implies a warranty by the vendor that the scaler is competent and the scale honestly made, unless it clearly appears that the vendee assumed that risk: Ortman v. Green, 26 M. 209.

148. Where a sale of all the merchantable logs in a certain lot is made without inspection by either party, no warranty that any particular log is merchantable is implied; and after the buyer, or the person selected by the parties to scale the logs, has accepted one, he cannot afterwards complain that it is not merchantable: Leonard v. Davis, 1 Black (U. S.), 476.

149. Whether a warranty of utility in the working of a machine in some special service not strictly within the sphere of action for which it was contrived can be implied must depend upon the particular facts; and a strong case ought to be required to support the inference of an agreement by the seller that a machine designed for one kind of work will operate well in practice in work of a different character: McGraw v. Fletcher, 35 M. 104.

150. Where a rock-drill was bought to use in exploring for minerals, both parties understanding that the machine had not been contrived for that kind of work and that its usefulness therefor had not been tested, but the vendor having, before his purchase, seen it in operation drilling rock, and the indications being that it was tacitly understood he should take it at his own risk, it was held no warranty was implied: Ibid.

151. A purchase of a machine from a dealer implies that the machine shall be new—that is, not second-hand or the worse for wear; and under an order therefor the dealer cannot impose upon the vendee a second-hand and worn machine, whether it complies with the terms of his warranty or not as to its being well made and that it will do as good work as any machine of its class: Grieb v. Cole, 60 M. 897.

152. A contract for the exchange of property implies and includes a warranty of title: Hunt v. Sackett, 31 M. 18.

153. A sale of genuine documents—such as school-orders—does not involve any warranty that the officer who issued them was authorized to do so: White v. Robinson, 50 M. 73.

154. One must be understood to warrant the genuineness of a transaction between himself and another on which he has induced a third person to rely: Gregory v. Wendell, 40 M. 482.

(c) Rights and remedies under warranty.

1. Return; acceptance; waiver; release.

155. Two months' delay in tendering back an unsatisfactory machine that had been sold with a warranty and did not fulfill its terms was not unreasonable where the vendor was allowed for the greater part of that time to continue his efforts to make it work: Felt v. Reynolds Rotary Fruit Evap. Co., 52 M. 602.

156. Payment for goods sold with a warranty does not necessarily preclude the purchaser from tendering them back for non-fulfillment of conditions if the payment was made as an accommodation and without waiving any rights: Ibid.

157. Breach of warranty may be set up as a defence without returning the goods, unless the contract of sale expressly requires their return. The omission to return them only affects the amount of damages recoverable: Hull v. Belknap, 87 M. 179.

158. Where the vendor of a machine warrants it to do as good work as one owned by a certain third person, and there is nothing in the contract of sale requiring the purchaser to notify the vendor of the machine's failure to do good work or to return it in that event, the vendee is not bound to return it: McCormick Harvesting Machine Co. v. Cochran, 64 M. 636.

159. A fanning-mill was sold on the representation that it was good and would do a good business. The purchaser gave his note for it, to which it was added that the note was given for the mill, which was warranted to be good and to do a good business, and that if it was not good the purchaser was to have the privilege of returning it within a certain time, and the seller was to furnish a new mill in exchange which should be good. In an action on the note it was held that, unless it was shown the seller knew at the time of the sale that the mill was not good, the purchaser was bound to return it according to the condition annexed to the note before he could avail himself of any defect in the mill in his defence: Horne v. Fellows, 1 D. 51.

160. A manufacturer who sells an engine not made by himself with warranty that it is in good condition, and, if not found so, shall be placed in such condition, puts himself in a position analogous to that of one who contracts to build and furnish one; and an acceptance by the purchaser is conditional, and does not bind him to keep it, unless answering the warranty: Kimball & A. Manuf. Co. v. Vroman, 85 M. 310.

161. Suit was brought on a note given for a reaper which the vendor had warranted to do first-class work. The warranty purported to bind the purchaser to give reasonable notice of defects to the vendor or his agent, and provided that if the latter did not remedy the difficulty the machine was "to be returned" and replaced, or the money or note refunded. It was not signed, however, by the purchaser, and was silent as to the manner and place of delivery in case the machine should be returned. The vendor and his agent lived at different places. Held, that the court could not say at which place the machine must be returned; and that when the purchaser had given notice of defects to the vendor or his agent, it was the latter's place to remedy them or furnish a perfect machine, and if he claimed that it was all it had been represented to be, the case should have been submitted to the jury on that issue, irrespective of the purchaser's failure to deliver the machine again to the vendor: Osborn v. Rawson, 47 M. 206.

162. A wind-mill was bargained for, to be put up in good order and warranted for sixty days. It worked ill, and the vendors from time to time agreed to put it in proper condition and endeavored to do so. Held, that the vendee's allowing it to remain meanwhile upon his land and using it at times did not amount to an acceptance; and that it was proper for the jury to take these facts into consideration to determine whether there had been a performance by the vendors and an acceptance by the vendees: Phelps v. Whitaker, 87 M. 72.

163. Where the vendor of a machine warrants it to do good work, and the vendee has notified the vendor that it does not work well, the vendee's allowing it to remain on his land and continuing to use it while the vendor is trying to repair it does not amount to an acceptance: McCormick Harvesting Machine Co. v. Cochran, 64 M. 636.

164. Logs were sold warranted to cut a certain proportion of lumber of first quality, and the tests for determining the quality were agreed upon. The purchaser by his voluntary act after delivery rendered it impracticable to apply these tests. Held, that he must be deemed to have accepted the logs as fulfilling the warranty: Hall v. McEwen, 19 M. 95.

165. Rope sold in October, 1868, with an express warranty of its strength, was delayed in transportation and the vendee refused it; but afterwards, in May, 1885, while the vendor was negotiating a sale of it to others, the vendee appropriated it, credited the vendor on his books with the price, and sent him a payment which was accepted. In an action for the price begun in April, 1887, held, that the defendant could not for the first time set up defects in the rope and recoup damages for a breach of the original warranty: Roebeling's Sons v. Winthrop Hematite Co., 70 M. 346.

166. One who sells goods with warranty of title to a purchaser in another jurisdiction cannot claim that his liability thereon is released by any reasonable arrangements which the buyer finds himself compelled to make with the holder of an existing lien to enable him to remove the goods to his own domicile; and the fact that such a removal changes the venue of any consequent action does not necessarily support an inference of fraudulent combination by the buyer and the lien-holder against the seller: De Witt v. Prescott, 51 M. 298.

2. Claim by third party; notice; assumption of defence.

167. Judgment in favor of a third person in replevin against the vendee of a horse was not allowed to sustain a recovery by the vendee against the vendor as for breach of warranty of title: Moore v. Bostwick, 23 M. 507.

168. Where a vendee is sued in replevin by a third person who recovers judgment for the amount of a lien, such judgment is not evidence of a breach of the vendor's warranty of title, unless the vendor was properly notified to defend the suit or undertook to do so without notice: De Witt v. Prescott, 51 M. 298.

169. Nor is a vendor bound unless notified to defend — even though he was a witness in the cause — by the result of a suit which his vendee received notice to defend, and which was brought against the vendee of the latter: Axford v. Graham, 57 M. 422.

170. Notice to a joint vendor, who is manager of the business and makes all the bargains, to defend a suit brought against the vendee, is notice to his co-vendor: De Witt v. Prescott, 51 M. 298.

171. If the vendor assumes the defence of an action by a third party against the vendee for the value of the goods sold, judgment for plaintiff shows a breach of warranty, even though the suit is in assumpsit when it ought, strictly, to have been in trespass or trover; and to charge the vendor with the costs of such suit written notice to defend was unnecessary, vendor having in fact assumed the defence: Jennings v. Sheldon, 44 M. 92.

172. Where replevin is brought against a purchaser, and the seller assumes the defence in order to protect himself on his warranty, the purchaser cannot be required to watch and defend the action without at least adequate notice and adequate reason: De Witt v. Prescott, 51 M. 298.

3. Actions; pleading.

173. The right of action for breach of warranty is assignable: Felt v. Reynolds Rotary Fruit Evap. Co., 53 M. 602.

174. Where a contract for the sale of machinery contemplates that it shall be tested and put in running order, a cause of action does not arise upon the warranty therein until a reasonable time has been allowed to make the necessary tests; and the time taken by the parties in trying to make the machinery fulfil the conditions of the contract is a proper criterion as to what is reasonable: Ibid.

175. The sale of goods by a vendee who has accepted them on condition that they comply with a warranty makes the conditional acceptance absolute; but a conditional acceptance alone does not perfect his right of action upon the warranty until it appears, upon reasonable trial, that the goods do not comply with it: Ibid.

176. A vendee sued by an adverse claimant need not await the result of the action before suing for breach of warranty: Jennings v. Sheldon, 44 M. 92.

177. An action brought for breach of the implied warranty in a contract for the exchange of property does not rescind but affirms the contract, and need not be preceded by any such act of disaffirmance as tendering back boot-money or demanding the property given in exchange: Hunt v. Sackett, 31 M. 18.

178. When it is one of the terms of a contract that an engine is good, and if not found so on trial shall be made good, the right to return it in case of failure is in pursuance and not in avoidance of the contract; and a count for breach of warranty is not inconsistent with one averring return, or with the common count for money had and received: Kimball & A. Manuf. Co. v. Vroman, 35 M. 310.

179. Where a declaration for breach of warranty fully sets out the contract of sale and avers a return, the question whether, upon a breach, the right exists to return the property, is one of law; and where there is no such right an averment of return is mere surplusage: Ibid.

180. The declaration in an action for breach of the implied warranty of title in a contract for the exchange of property must count on the contract itself, as this alone creates the obligation: Hunt v. Sackett, 31 M. 18.

181. Even in justice's court a declaration for breach of warranty must show the nature of the warranty and state the breach: Smith v. Hobart, 43 M. 465.

182. A vendee deceived by a false warranty may sue in tort; and the fact that he sets out the warranty and avers breach does not make his declaration one in assumpsit when the essentials of a declaration in case appear: Carter v. Glass, 44 M. 154.

183. Such a declaration need not allege that defendant "falsely and fraudulently warranted," and "falsely and fraudulently deceived" plaintiff, if the false warranty, the fraudulent sale and deception of the purchaser are substantially alleged: Hopkins v. O'Neil, 46 M. 403.

184. A declaration in justice's court setting up false warranty, etc., sustained as one in assumpsit for damages for vendor's refusal to surrender note given on sale: Thomas v. Schram, 52 M. 218.

4. Evidence; recovery.

185. The vendee rejected the goods on arrival as not merchantable. Held, in assumpsit against him, that it was not error to permit the exhibition of some of them to the jury, and to admit evidence as to how they compared with others, and also to allow the exhibition of samples from other merchants to show that the goods were not as ordered: Imbrie v. Wetherbee, 70 M. 103.

186. And where the goods were such that the court could not take notice that they were perishable (see EVIDENCE, § 1015), it was not error, in the absence of evidence that their condition was subject to change, to admit testimony as to examinations made by the vendee first, on their arrival, then ten days afterwards, and again after nine months: Ibid.

187. Where the evidence showed that three days after a machine was delivered to defendant he gave plaintiff written notice of his refusal to purchase it, and that it was at plaintiff's risk — the testimony showing also that it had not been used since, — held, that evidence of the condition of the machine was admissible though based on an examination made after trial in justice's court: Grieb v. Cole, 60 M. 397.

188. In an action for the price of a machine sold, evidence as to how similar machines worked is inadmissible to prove that the one in question worked as it was warranted: Osborne v. Bell, 62 M. 214.

189. In an action for the price of a machine sold, where the question is as to the working of the machine, testimony of a witness as to the working of other machines is properly stricken out if it appears therefrom that they are not like the one in suit: Locke v. Priestly, 71 M. — (July 11, '88).

190. In suit for the purchase price of a McCormick harvester, where the defence is a breach of warranty that the machine would do as good work as any in the market, the question whether the McCormick is as good as any in the market is to be excluded, the merits of the particular machine sold being all that is material: McCormick Harvesting Machine Co. v. Cochran, 64 M. 686.

191. A contract of sale of a machine stipulated that it would produce a certain number of wheels when used in a certain way. Held, in an action for the price, that testimony of a witness who had worked with other machines as to the working of such others was inadmissible: Locke v. Priestly, 71 M. — (July 11, '88).

As to evidence and tests of performance of warranty in an action for price of an engine warranted to effect a certain saving in fuel, see EVIDENCE, §§ 73, 98-101, 197.

192. Admissions by one of two vendees that the machine worked well are not binding upon the other, who was absent when the statements were made: Osborne v. Bell, 62 M. 214.

193. Where goods were sold with warranty, and the defence to an action for part of their price was grounded on a breach thereof, an inquiry as to whether part of the goods were sound that had been returned as unsound was relevant on the cross-examination of the plaintiff, who had testified as to the contract and its performance: Hull v. Belknap, 37 M. 179.

194. In a suit on a warranty of a horse, evidence that two years after he was bought he killed himself in a fit of balking is not too remote if it is shown that his balking was a common habit extending through the whole time. Evidence may also be given that he was balky three years before the sale: Daniels v. Aldrich, 42 M. 58.

195. One who sues on a warranty of the soundness of a horse can show by the testimony of a former owner that the horse while owned by him was diseased, if the disease was one which might have resulted in subsequent unsoundness: Van Hoesen v. Cameron, 54 M. 609.

196. In an action upon a warranty the allowance of a hypothetical question which did not relate to the condition of the article sold at the time of the sale was held to be cured by a cross-examination which supplied the omission and placed all the facts necessary to the formation of an opinion before the witness: Ibid.

197. In a suit on a warranty of a horse it was shown positively, and was undisputed, that defendant assured plaintiff that the animal was a good work-horse; that he was true and all right, and true as a dollar, kind as a kitten, and as good a horse as any in the county. Held, that a refusal to require the jury to find specifically and report whether the defendant warranted the horse, and if so in what words, was not error, as the evidence, if believed, was enough to make out a warranty, and there could not have been any finding inconsistent with it: Daniells v. Aldrich, 42 M. 58.

198. The agent for a firm of wind-mill manufacturers took a written order for and put up a mill under a bargain involving oral representations and a printed warranty. In a suit for the price of the mill he was called upon to prove that he put it up and furnished it with the appurtenances required by the order, and left it in good condition. Held, that the defendant was entitled to show by cross-examination what was said and done between them from which the contract rose, and also that the agent had not put up and left the mill in good running order: Phelps v. Whitaker, 37 M. 72.

199. One who trades horses and takes money to boot cannot, on failure of title to the horse he receives, recover back the consideration or the value of the horse he gives, on the ground of a total failure of consideration, so long as he keeps the boot-money; his right is really to sue to recover damages for a breach of the warranty which the trade implies: Hunt v. Sackett, 31 M. 18.

And see ACTIONS, § 53.

200. Where the warranty broken is one that justifies the return of the property, which is attempted and refused, plaintiff, if he shows the purchase price, is at least entitled to recover such price with interest: Kimball & A. Manuf. Co. v. Vroman, 85 M. 810.

IV. RIGHTS AND REMEDIES OF PARTIES.

(a) In general.

201. Where a merchant sells goods to a purchaser at a distance, and contracts to ship them at a certain time by a specified route, but, instead of doing so, sends them by some other, it is at his own risk of loss or unseasonable delay: Fleming v. Mills, 5 M. 420.

202. Where it was contracted that timber should be delivered in the river to vessels sent for it, it was held that, unless the purchasers delayed unreasonably in sending vessels, they could not be held for any expenses in caring for it while in the river awaiting delivery: Merick v. McNally, 26 M. 374.

203. A purchaser's delay in removing merchandise from the charge of a bailee in a reasonable time after constructive delivery cannot subject the vendor to the risks of storage: Carpenter v. Graham, 42 M. 191.

204. If one who ships poorer goods than are ordered does not notify his customer of their inferiority he must stand the reasonable and necessary expense of testing them, and then of storing them to await the vendor's orders; and these expenses may properly include insurance, freight and cartage: Philadelphia Whiting Co. v. Detroit White Lead Works, 58 M. 29.

205. The vendor cannot recover for the barrels in which the goods were shipped, nor is the buyer chargeable for the quantity necessarily used in testing the quality: Ibid.

206. An arrangement having been made between vendor and vendees that the quantity of logs embraced in the contract of sale should be determined by the mill-run at the mill where vendees were having them sawed, the vendor on suing for the purchase price cannot ignore the facts concerning the scaling at such mill, but must show them: Perkins v. Hoyt, 85 M. 506.

(b) Rescission.

As to rescission of contracts generally, see CONTRACTS, XIII.

As to rescission of contracts for the sale of land, see VENDORS, I, (d).

207. A contract of exchange may be rescinded where the property received on the trade is taken away again by virtue of a valid chattel mortgage: Hunt v. Sackett, 31 M. 18.

208. Parties bargained for the sale and purchase of a cow upon the mutual understanding and belief that she was barren, the price being about one-tenth of the value if capable of breeding. Before delivery it was discovered that she was with calf. Held, that the vendor was entitled to rescind and to refuse to deliver: Sherwood v. Walker, 86 M. 568.

209. Where a man agreed to sell a "certain cow and fifteen of his best pigs and such two sows as they should belong to," and the bargain for the cow at first stood by itself, but the vendor privately agreed to take seventy-five dollars, but told the purchasers they might fix the price of the cow at thirty or thirty-five dollars, as they chose, and give the rest for the pigs, the contract could not be considered so far indivisible as to justify the purchaser in treating a failure in the quality of the pigs as rescinding the bargain for the cow. And in a suit for the breach of contract he must make out his case affirmatively and show that his loss of profits is on the pigs: Howard v. Bellows, 49 M. 620.

210. The rule that one cannot rescind a contract in part and affirm it in part does not apply where a purchaser of stock, the items of which are particularly described in the bill of sale, refuses to accept an article which varies from the description, and sues the vendor for failure to fulfill the contract of sale: Lampson v. Cummings, 52 M. 491.

211. Where the vendee, with whatever intent, mortgages goods held by him under a contract of purchase, the vendor may rescind: Winchester v. King, 46 M. 102.

212. Vendors may rescind a sale procured by fraud: White v. Mitchell, 38 M. 390.

213. A seller may rescind where the buyer purchased knowing of his own insolvency and intending to withhold payment: Doyle v. Miener, 40 M. 160.

214. But this doctrine has no application to a case where the controversy is whether a subsequent sale from the vendee to other parties was fraudulent as against his vendor's attaching creditors: Beurmann v. Van Buren, 44 M. 496.

215. Vendor's right to rescind for fraud applies as against purchasers from his vendee who collude with the latter to carry out his schemes: Redpath v. Brown, 71 M. — (July 11, '88).

216. Action for payment by a vendor who has a right to rescind for fraud affirms the contract and precludes him from denying it: Galloway v. Holmes, 1 D. 380; Beurmann v. Van Buren, 44 M. 496.

217. Where a vendee acquiesces in a rescission and seeks to recall what he has paid he cannot claim profits that he would have made had his bargain been carried out: Drydall v. Smith, 44 M. 119.

(c) Resale.

218. It seems that notice of resale is unnecessary where a contract purchaser refuses to receive the goods and the contract is silent on the subject, and the purchaser's liability on the contract is not to be fixed by the price obtained on the resale: Holland v. Rea, 48 M. 218.

219. Where a contract purchaser did not take the goods and the vendor resold them and sued on the contract, held, that a refusal to charge "that plaintiff had no right to sell without notice to defendant" was not error, as it was not clear whether the party requesting the charge meant notice of resale or of the intention to resell: Ibid.

220. A vendor's right of resale must be exercised in good faith and at such time, by such methods and under such circumstances as are most likely to produce the fair value of the property; and he has the burden of showing that it was so exercised: Brownlee v. Bolton, 44 M. 218.

221. A purchaser's liability for any part of the purchase price is cancelled by the vendor's wrongful resale of the goods: Bowser v. Birdsell, 49 M. 5.

222. Where a contract of sale is broken by the purchaser, the obligation resting on the seller to reduce the damages as far as possible by a prudent disposition of the merchandise leaves him at liberty to choose any proper mode of disposing of it in his own judgment, provided he uses proper diligence; and he is not obliged to advance money or go to any expense that would not be necessary under any method that he might adopt. And the question whether he has done his duty as to disposing of it is for the jury: Wonderly v. Holmes Lumber Co., 56 M. 412.

223. A. sold a chattel to B., who paid part of the agreed price. A., without right, resold the chattel to another, and offered to return to B. the amount that he had paid, which amount B. refused to receive. B. sued A., and failed to show greater damages than the amount paid. Held, that he was entitled to judgment for that amount without costs: Bowser v. Birdsell, 49 M. 5.

As to measure of vendor's damages where merchandise has to be resold on vendee's failure to take it, see DAMAGES, § 231.

(d) Stoppage in transitu.

224. The vendor's right of stoppage in transitu is based on the vendee's insolvency unknown at the time of sale or arising afterwards: Gustine v. Phillips, 38 M. 674.

225. Goods are in transitu when in the hands of a carrier for local delivery: White v. Mitchell, 38 M. 390.

226. One who sells goods to be delivered for cash may reclaim them before delivery, although, supposing them to have been delivered, he has acted on that assumption — has, for example, made an affidavit as a creditor under his vendee's assignment, believing that the vendee had received and appropriated the goods, which was not so in fact: Lentz v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 58 M. 444.

227. Where the vendors of logs offer possession to the vendees, who accept such offer, and virtually take possession by having the logs taken into custody at their expense and on their account as owners by a booming company, the power of stoppage in transitu is cut off: Muskegon Booming Co. v. Underhill, 43 M. 629.

228. Logs were to be driven by the sellers to a certain point, but before reaching it their agent in charge of driving the logs turned them over to a booming company by the purchaser's order. Held that, as the facts concerning the agent's authority, and what took place concerning delivery were not submitted to the jury, the supreme court could not find that delivery in law had actually been made so as to take away the right of stoppage in transitu: Underhill v. Muskegon Booming Co., 40 M. 660.

229. The lien on property retained by the vendor covers all its natural incidents and accessories, unless circumstances show a different intent: Kellogg v. Lovely, 46 M. 131.

230. The lien of a vendor is cut off by delivery of the property: Muskegon Booming Co. v. Underhill, 43 M. 629.

231. Whether a wholesaler who sells to a retailer can establish a lien upon the proceeds of the latter's sales by stipulating that they shall be held in trust for him, quere: Adriance v. Rutherford, 57 M. 170.

232. Where a partner sold to his copartner his interest in the firm's store, business, goods and accounts, the vendor to have a lien on said goods, etc., such lien was construed to give security on the whole interest in the goods, etc., on hand at the time, and not merely in an undivided half: Northrup v. McGill, 27 M. 234.

(f) Action for price.

1. When lies; defences.

As to suit on the common count for goods sold, etc., see PLEADINGS, §§ 142-152.

233. An action for the price of goods sold does not lie until title so passes as to deprive plaintiff of his right to sell them: Scotten v. Sutter, 37 M. 528.

234. If goods are sold upon credit the vendor cannot sue for the price before the credit expires, though he can prove that the vendee induced him to sell by fraudulent misrepresentations: Galloway v. Holmes, 1 D. 330.

235. One who receives credit for goods in consideration of his agreement to do certain things which he fails to do may be sued for the price of the goods, as though no credit had been given: Wineman v. Walters, 58 M. 470.

236. Where, in an action on a contract of sale, it was shown that, after complete present delivery of the goods and performance in full by the vendor, the vendee had neglected or refused on demand to give the securities he had promised, it was held that the objection to the vendor's right of action that the vendee was entitled to a reasonable time within which to perform his part of the agreement, and which had not been given him, was untenable: Cook v. Stevenson, 30 M. 242.

237. Where two vendees of a machine are to give approved notes for its price, a demand for the notes must precede suit for the price, and must be made upon both vendees if they are not partners or joint owners: Osborne v. Bell, 62 M. 214.

238. Where, in an action for the price, the capacity of a machine is to be tested in establishing a condition precedent to payment, such test must comply with the conditions of the contract of sale: Locke v. Priestly, etc. Co., 71 M. — (July 11, '88).

239. A vendee of personal property who retains it in his possession or converts it to his own use cannot, as a general rule, resist a suit for the purchase price on the ground of want of title in his vendor: Estelle v. Peacock, 48 M. 469.

240. But he may do so if the party claiming title assumes, to save a multiplicity of suits, the defence under an arrangement that the vendee shall pay him for the property if the defence fails: Ibid.

241. It is proper to show, in defence to an action for the price of a machine which has been ordered under the terms of a written instrument by which defendant agreed to pay a specified consideration and which provided for a test, that it was understood when the order was given, and was part of the consideration, that plaintiff should furnish a man to set up the machine, and that it was his usage to do so: Wood Mowing, etc. Machine Co. v. Gartner, 55 M. 453.

2. Evidence; recovery.

242. In an action to recover the price of goods sold by parol agreement there was a dispute as to whether certain articles were included in the sale, and the plaintiff offered to prove that those which he claimed were not sold were alone worth as much as the defendant claimed he had bought the whole for. Held, in the absence of reasons for such a sacrifice, that testimony as to their value was admissible, not to vary the contract actually entered into, but to aid the jury in determining what it covered: Sager v. Tupper, 38 M. 258.

243. In an action for the value of goods sold, evidence that a third person had taken away part of them and that defendant had therefore never received them was properly excluded in the absence of further evidence connecting the plaintiff with the failure to deliver them: Cool v. Snover, 38 M. 562.

244. An action for the value of merchandise was defended on the ground that by plaintiff's authority the sale had been made by his clerk on the latter's own account, and payment had been made to the clerk in wood. Defendant called the plaintiff as his witness, and the latter's testimony showed that the sale had been in part on credit and in his presence, but that he had not authorized the clerk to sell on his own account. The bill of exceptions states that it did not appear that plaintiff knew of any other arrangement between defendant and his clerk, and there was no evidence that any part of the negotiation took place at any other time. Held, that the court did not err to defendant's prejudice in refusing to allow him to swear that on the occasion of the sale he had made a private arrangement with the clerk to pay him in wood: Burger v. Limbach, 42 M. 162.

245. In suing for the price of a quantity of timber shipped to defendants at a distance and received subject to inspection, it is proper for plaintiff to show, as an element in the case, how much was loaded for shipment, if it appears that some of it was taken by defendants before inspection and that they used some which did not pass: McLennan v. McDermid, 52 M. 468.

246. In an action for the price of a machine sold, evidence is admissible, where defendant claims that the sale was conditioned on plaintiff's making the machine run, that persons sent by plaintiff's agent to make it work did not succeed: Wheeler & W. Manuf. Co. v. Walker, 41 M. 289.

247. In an action for the purchase price of a machine, defendant may show under the general issue that the article delivered was not the one he purchased; so held where defendant's offer was to show that the machine delivered was a second-hand one, and his order, in connection with the circumstances under which it was made, called for a new machine: Grieb v. Cole, 60 M. 397.

248. In an action for the value of a quantity of timber sold under a contract, there was no error in requiring the jury to ascertain whether it was of the quality specified in the contract as understood by the parties. Their understanding was material: McKay v. Evans, 48 M. 597.

249. In an action for the price of goods sold, evidence as to the kind and character of goods sold to other parties than defendant, and as to the previous custom and manner of doing business between the parties previous to the making of the contract sued on, is inadmissible, the contract being unambiguous: Gage v. Meyers, 59 M. 800.

250. In an action upon a contract of sale which left an option as to acceptance, evidence as to defendant's acts or omissions is not pertinent: Cole v. Homer, 53 M. 438.

251. In an action to recover the price of lumber sold defendant in the pile and unmeasured, a bill having been rendered defendant for 150,000 feet, but an entry in plaintiff's books reciting "that the lumber was charged on estimate only, to be measured, and the balance paid afterwards," held the bill should govern and not the entry, which is a mere ex parte memorandum; and defendant's evidence that the highest estimate when he bought was only 150,000 feet was admissible: Warner v. Feige, 65 M. 92.

252. Testimony that allowances were to have been made for deficiencies to a certain amount is too indefinite to establish a defence to a suit for the price; it is only a conclusion of the witness, who should give the facts from which it is drawn: Overall v. Bezeau, 37 M. 506.

253. In an action for the price of goods delivered to one person on another's promise to pay for them, evidence that the goods were obtained from plaintiff, and that defendant directed them to be charged to him, supports a finding for plaintiff: Montague v. Dougan, 68 M. 98.

254. In an action for the price of a machine, the vendor's statements to a third person, as to the bargain, not in the vendee's presence, and after the contract was completed, were incompetent except to impeach the vendor, and then only after he had been questioned concerning them: Platt v. Broderick, 70 M. 577.

255. Where the vendor of an article sues for the price, which the contract of sale has fixed, evidence as to what it cost plaintiff is irrelevant: Locke v. Priestly, etc. Co., 71 M. — (July 11, '88).

256. In assumpsit on the common counts for the price of an engine sold under contract, evidence is admissible of the value of the engine: Wickes v. Swift Electric Light Co., 70 M. 332.

257. In an action to recover for goods sold, their value must govern in the absence of any agreement as to price: Comstock v. Sanger, 51 M. 497.

And see DAMAGES, §§ 198, 194.

258. Plaintiff in an action for the price of lumber sold and delivered attached the lumber, and, having indemnified the sheriff, sold it for less than the contract price. Held, that what he realized on such sale must be treated as a partial payment upon his claim: Jenkinson v. Monroe, 61 M. 454. See PLEADINGS, § 381.

Further, as to measure of damages, see DAMAGES, §§ 226-231.

As to recovery in cases of partial delivery, etc., see ASSUMPSIT, §§ 151-154; DAMAGES, §§ 188-201.

(g) Buyer's rights and remedies.

259. Where a contract is made for timber on the basis of an estimated quantity, and the quantity falls short, the purchaser is entitled to have a corresponding amount of the purchase price refunded, whether the contract so provides or not. And in an action on the common counts therefor, the contract is admissible in evidence to show defendant's receipt of the money and explain his possession of it, and to prove the extent of plaintiff's claim: Phippen v. Morehouse, 50 M. 587.

260. S. sold D. as much timber as D. should take away before a certain date, but before that time sold the land without reservation to M., and agreed to settle with D., who presented a claim for the amount he had paid and for getting out the timber. S. did not pay, however, and D. sued him. Held, (1) that the action was not based on the contract of sale, but on the later transactions, to which the contract and the deed to M. were mere matters of inducement, and it was for the jury to determine whether D.'s claim was well founded; (2) that it was not material whether or not he had notice of the sale;

(3) that, as D. recalled the price he had paid and claimed payment for his outlays, he could not show what profits he might have made: Drysdall v. Smith, 44 M. 119.

261. Where a vendee has agreed to pay in notes, a later arrangement to the effect that no notes need be given, but only a mortgage, relieves him from personal liability: Russell v. Bondie, 51 M. 76.

262. One who purchases articles specifically described, and pays for them, is entitled to articles corresponding to the description or he may sue in assumpsit; nor is he bound to return those articles which do correspond: Lampson v. Cummings, 52 M. 491.

263. Money paid in advance for goods, which not only do not correspond to the contract but are worthless, may be recovered back by the buyer as paid without consideration, or treated as set-off, with no other notice to the dealer than the goods are held subject to the latter's order than is implied in notice of the facts of the worthlessness of the goods and of his refusal to take them: Petersen v. Door, Sash & Lumber Co., 51 M. 86.

264. Under a contract to cut, during the winter of 1871-72, a quantity of cedar posts and to deliver them at a specified price on the rail of vessels to be furnished by the vendees, it is held the purchasers were bound to furnish vessels within a reasonable time during the season of 1872; and that where vessels were not furnished until 1874 the purchasers were not entitled, in the absence of any new arrangement, in an action brought against them to recover the purchase price of the posts received by them, to deduct the cost of taking the posts from the beach, where the vendors had delivered them for shipping, and placing them on the rail of the vessel: Bolton v. Riddle, 35 M. 13.

265. In declaring for a failure to deliver, a count alleging that defendants are indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $3,000 for damages by reason of their failure to ship certain goods bought of them was held insufficient, as it stated no consideration for the alleged agreement, no promise to pay any amount for which defendants were indebted to plaintiff, no promise by defendants to ship, no tender of payment or performance by plaintiff, and no valid contract of any kind: Thomas v. Greenwood, 69 M. 215.

As to the measure of damages for vendor's failure to deliver, see DAMAGES, §§ 33, 34, 232-242.

Or for partial or varied delivery, see DAMAGES, §§ 188-204.

V. CONDITIONAL SALES.

266. The owner of a chattel has a right to sell it conditionally, and, though delivering possession to the conditional vendee, to retain the absolute title until condition performed; and a bona fide purchaser from the vendee gets no title as against the absolute owner unless the condition has been waived: Couse v. Tregent, 11 M. 65.

267. A. contracted with C. to erect a mill on C.'s land, C. to furnish all lumber and material for the building and machinery, and A. to furnish all the labor and the machinery, and to pay for transportation. A. was to be paid in part at date of contract, balance on completion. J., who had furnished machinery to A. under condition that title should remain in J. and that the machinery should not become a fixture until full payment, sued C. in trover; but it was held that he could not recover, because he knew, when he sold the machinery to A., that he purchased it for the purpose of attaching it to C.'s realty, under a contract with C. that bound him to do so, and with that knowledge obtained part of the money paid by C. to A., and guaranteed shipment of the machinery to be so used without notice to or knowledge by C. that J. still claimed title to the machinery: Jenks v. Colwell, 66 M. 420.

Evidence as to knowledge of purchaser from conditional vendee, see EVIDENCE, § 282.

268. The owner of a sewing-machine delivered it to another, who gave back the following receipt: "Received of G. one certain sewing-machine, which I agree to keep and carefully use, and not remove from Wayne county, and at the expiration of three months from date return the same to him free of charge and unincumbered; provided always, and it is expressly understood, that if, on or before the expiration of the above time, I shall pay to said G. the sum of sixty dollars, then this receipt shall be null and void, and the said G. shall execute to me a bill of sale of the said machine." Held, that this was a bailment, importing a personal trust not transferable; that no title to the machine passed until the money was paid, and that G. might replevy it from one to whom the receiptor, without paying, had sold it: Dunlap v. Gleason, 16 M. 158.

269. Where an agreement to sell a piano provides that it shall remain the property of the vendor until full payment, and that in case of failure to make any payment the vendor shall be entitled to possession and the agreement shall become void, such agreement is one for a conditional sale only, and is terminated by a default in payment: Preston v. Whitney, 23 M. 260.

270. Where one who has contracted to buy a chattel, binding himself to keep it in his possession as the property and subject to the directions of the vendor until paid for, gives it away to a third person, this is a wrongful determination of his contract of bailment, and he is liable to the vendor in trover for the amount still due on his contract: Johnson v. Whittemore, 27 M. 463.

271. A contract for the conditional sale of a piano, providing that it shall remain the property of the vendor until its full price shall be paid, and shall meantime remain at the vendee's residence at a specified place unless the vendor's written assent is given to move it, creates a bailment in the vendee, and the condition against removal is valid: Whitney v. McConnell, 29 M. 12.

272. A lease of a sewing-machine gave the privilege of purchasing the machine by paying the full amount of the rent at any time during the continuance of the lease, but reserved to the lessor all property in the machine, and the right to control it until the purchase money was paid in full, and also gave him the right to seize it on default in payment. Held, that the title continued in the lessor, and that as matter of law he had a right to dispossess the lessee in case of default: Smith v. Loxo, 42 M. 6.

273. A contract allowing a vendor to retain title to property in the vendee's control and possession until the purchase price is paid is not to be extended by implication so as to cover after-acquired goods: Edwards v. Symons, 65 M. 848.

274. Machinery was transferred with a written stipulation that title should not pass until it was paid for, and that when all the terms and conditions were fulfilled the vendor would give a bill of sale that the vendor might resume possession at any time for breach of contract, but that the purchaser might remove the property, and should assure it and assign the insurance policy to the vendor to secure deferred payments. Held, that such transaction was valid, and that, until the property was paid for, creditors of the purchaser could not levy thereon: Marquette Manuf. Co. v. Jeffery, 49 M. 283.

275. Mortgaging goods held under a contract of purchase, before fulfilling the obligations of the contract, is an assumption of ownership; and the intent with which it is done is immaterial so far as concerns the vendor's right to reclaim them: Winchester v. King, 46 M. 102.

276. The transfer of the possession of property by a vendor to a vendee, to be held by him until future measurements and computation shall be made, even though the sale is under circumstances that leave it incomplete, nevertheless gives a right of possession which cannot be revoked by the vendor or any one having no superior rights; if it creates no more than a peculiar bailment it is not a revocable bailment: Colwell v. Keystone Iron Co., 38 M. 51.

277. Retention of title by the seller until full payment is made is not necessarily inconsistent with the buyer's right to the possession of the goods; and, if no time is fixed for completing payment, the buyer is entitled to reasonable time before the seller can demand the return of the goods and replevy them: Adams v. Wood, 51 M. 411.

278. After making payments on property which he holds under an agreement that title shall not pass until the price is wholly paid, the vendee acquires an interest in the property, and may waive a return after the vendor has replevied it without demand, and may take judgment for the value of such interest: New Home Sewing Machine Co. v. Bothane, 70 M. 443.

279. Where a written contract provides that if the vendee fails to make any payment as therein specified the vendor shall be entitled to possession again, and that the agreement to sell shall be void, and contains no provision giving the vendor the right to retain as a forfeiture all the money he has received on the contract, the vendor would be bound to account to the vendee for the moneys already received, deducting a fair compensation for the use of the article while in the vendee's possession, or perhaps, at his option, the interest on the price for that period as well as for any reduction in value beyond that arising from its legitimate use and for any incidental expenses in regaining possession: Preston v. Whitney, 23 M. 260.

280. Whether it would have been competent to provide in such a contract for the forfeiture of all the several instalments which might have been paid before the default, or whether such a provision would be treated as a penalty, according to the principles which distinguish penalties from stipulated damages, quere: Ibid.

281. If a sale—as here, of a span of horses—is merely conditional and by way of security, the vendor retains an interest subject to levy and sale: McMillan v. Larned, 41 M. 521.

VI. SALES ON TEST OR APPROVAL

282. A town contracted for a wind-pump and was to have six months in which to test it, and if at the end of that time the pump should be accepted its proper working for a specified period was guaranteed. The contract further provided that, "if the aforesaid wind-engine shall be erected in the manner and perform the work as set forth in this article," the town should pay a stated sum at a specified time. Held, that the last clause was not independent, and the first did not relate merely to the guaranty, but the town had six months in which to determine whether to accept the pump or not, whatever its merits: Cole v. Homer, 53 M. 438.

283. A village agreed to purchase a steam fire-engine, to be delivered on the cars at the place of manufacture, the first instalment of the purchase price to be paid when the property was accepted, the title being reserved to the vendor until full payment. Held, that the contract contemplated an inspection, examination and trial of the engine before acceptance; that the "delivery on the cars" was not intended to close the sale, and that the village was not to pay for the engine unless it saw fit to accept it: Mansfield Machine Works v. Lowell, 62 M. 546.

284. A man was to give his note for a harvester which he had ordered in writing, and was to pay it if the machine fulfilled the warranty; if not, he was to return the harvester. The warranty clause contemplated an actual trial, which was had with unsatisfactory results. When the machine was delivered the note had not been given nor required. Held, in an action for damages for refusal to deliver the note, that the buyer was not bound to give it if the machine did not correspond to his order: Sherwood v. Hecox, 35 M. 202.

285. A proposal to put up certain machinery contained the clause "no pay until tested and in perfect running order." Held, that this made it merely an agreement for putting the machinery in position to be tested as a preliminary to the liability to retain or pay for it: Bell v. Harvey, 50 M. 59.

286. The proposition to make a conditional sale in order to have a new machine tested is one which the vendees are entitled to regard as continuing unless in some way notified to the contrary: Gurney v. Collins, 64 M. 458.

287. A contract for the purchase of a machine, if it is "satisfactory or does what is claimed for it," is binding if the machine meets the warranty, whether the purchaser is satisfied or not: Clark v. Rice, 46 M. 808.

288. A harvesting machine was sold to a man who exacted a stipulation that the sale should be inoperative if the machine did not work to the buyer's satisfaction. Held, that he had an absolute right to reject the machine, and that his reasons for doing so could not be investigated: Wood Reaping, etc. Machine Co. v. Smith, 50 M. 565.

289. Where a contract of sale stipulates that the article shall do good work and give satisfaction, the vendee is not obliged to keep it if it does not give satisfaction, even though it does good work: Plano Manuf. Co. v. Ellis, 68 M. 101.

290. Goods left on trial under an agreement that if they prove satisfactory they shall be paid for by note due on a certain date, or by cash that day, remain the vendor's and at his risk until such date if not accepted before: Pierce v. Cooley, 56 M. 552.

291. Where a contract for the sale of a machine includes a provision that "the purchaser shall be allowed — days' use to give the machine a fair trial, and if it should not work well immediate notice must be given," etc., the period allowed does not begin to run until the machine is entirely out of the vendor's possession; the purchaser is entitled to the full period named in which to try it, and, if no period is named, to a reasonable time before giving notice: and the requirement of immediate notice must be reasonably construed in view of all the circumstances — such as business engagements, distance and facility of communication: Wood Reaping, etc. Machine Co. v. Smith, 50 M. 565.

292. A machine was sold subject to the vendee's approval, to be set up by the vendor's agent on a certain day. The vendee set it up without waiting for the agent, who came and made some changes in the setting up. It was afterwards returned as unsatisfactory. Held, that the vendee's action did not of itself operate as a breach of the contract and oblige him to take and pay for the machine, it not appearing that such action affected its working or that the vendor or his agent had made complaint of the vendee's setting it up: Platt v. Broderick, 70 M. 577.

293. Where a contract of sale claimed to have been made by correspondence between the parties gave the vendee the option of putting it up and trying it, the vendee not to be bound if it did not do all that was claimed for it, such vendee, when sued for the price, is entitled to go to the jury upon his testimony that the article was finally and seasonably rejected; also upon the question whether the sale was absolute or conditional, if there was any testimony which could be regarded as making it absolute: Gurney v. Collins, 64 M. 458.

VII. BONA FIDE PURCHASERS.

294. The possession of goods, although prima facie evidence of ownership, is not such proof of it as to confer any equities upon third parties against the actual owner's title unless fraud exists: Couse v. Tregent, 11 M. 65.

As to purchase from conditional vendee, see supra, §§ 266, 287.

295. A purchaser's good faith is not conclusively established by his uncontradicted testimony. The question is for the jury: Molitor v. Robinson, 40 M. 200.

296. One who, without notice of any fraud, buys and pays for property in fair dealing with the person holding the legal title, is protected; but the consideration must in all cases be actually passed before notice: Dixon v. Hill, 5 M. 404.

297. A payment in good faith is needed to complete a bona fide purchase: Webster v. Bailey, 40 M. 641.

298. No one but a purchaser for a valuable consideration can claim title to property which has been fraudulently assigned against the action of an attaching creditor: Dixon v. Hill, 5 M. 404.

299. No one can be protected as a bona fide purchaser except to the extent of his payments made before he received such notice as should have prevented him from making further payments: Kohl v. Lynn, 34 M. 360.

300. One who buys securities that are not delivered to him, making only a nominal payment prior to his receiving notice of another's interest therein, is not entitled to protection as a bona fide purchaser: Haescig v. Brown, 34 M. 503.

301. Where a debtor has made an assignment of his property which was void on its face as to creditors, and plaintiff had bought the property of the assignee and orally agreed to pay for it at certain rates in his notes on time, but before making any payments or giving any notes the property was taken on attachment against the fraudulent assignor, it was held that the oral promise to pay was not sufficient to protect the title of the purchaser against the attachment: Dixon v. Hill, 5 M. 404.

302. Where the vendee gives in part payment his negotiable notes payable on time, they may be regarded as payment—seeing that they are enforceable against him—and he may hold as a bona fide purchaser, though his vendor sold with intent to defraud creditors: Beurmann v. Van Buren, 44 M. 496.

303. One who buys goods and gives his non-negotiable notes for the price is not protected as a bona fide purchaser, for the failure of his vendor's title would exonerate him: Dixon v. Hill, 5 M. 404.

Further as to bona fide purchasers, see FRAUD, II; NOTICE, III; RECORDING ACTS, IV, (b), (c).

VIII. BILLS OF SALE.

Construed as mortgage, see CHATTEL MORTGAGES, §§ 8-13; INSTRUCTIONS, § 133.

304. A particular instrument construed as a transfer in trust for the benefit of creditors and not as a chattel mortgage: Iron Cliffs Co. v. Beecher, 50 M. 486.

305. A bill of sale is invalid unless delivered: Doyle v. Mizner, 43 M. 332.

306. Where the vendors in a bill of sale and the vendee's representatives (the vendee being a corporation formed by the vendors) are the same persons, there can be no delivery in the ordinary sense; and the bill cannot become operative against the grantors until, in some way distinct from their signatures to it, they manifest an intent to make it so: Doyle v. Mizner, 40 M. 160, 42 M. 332.

307. Where a bill of sale is given as a security and there is no change of possession, the bill or a copy thereof must be filed to protect the vendee (though he takes in good faith) against the owner's other creditors: Talcott v. Crippen, 52 M. 633.

308. That there is no writing to evidence a sale of personalty is immaterial after proof of sale and delivery: Adams v. Lee, 31 M. 440. That a bill of sale does not embody the essentials of a contract so as to exclude parol evidence, see EVIDENCE, §§ 1154, 1320, 1329, 1359.

As to proof of bill of sale or contents thereof, see EVIDENCE, §§ 1127, 1189, 1959.

I. ORGANIZATION AND CHANGE OF DISTRICTS.

1. The policy of limiting primary school districts to nine sections of land has always been uniform. The only mode permitted by statute of dealing with unorganized territory is to divide it into ordinary primary districts: Simpkins v. Ward, 45 M. 559.

2. Act 858 of 1877, "to incorporate the public schools of the township of Long Rapids," construed, and held to include within the new school district the territory of the unorganized county of Montmorency; and, consequently, school taxes for the district are properly levied on property within that county: Johnston v. Cathro, 51 M. 80.

3. Where certain township boards had created a fractional school district out of old districts, the court held that after a lapse of fifteen months it might fairly be presumed that the district had been organized, officers elected and expenses incurred, and refused to review the action of the boards on certiorari brought at so late a day, neither the district nor its officers being parties to the proceeding. But in such case the legality of the organization may be tried by quo warranto: Owosso Fractional School District v. School Inspectors, 27 M. 8.

4. Where the organization of a school district is undertaken by the proper body of electors or officers under a valid statute, every presumption is made in favor of the regularity of their action; and such organization is regarded as entitled to legal standing unless speedily assailed by some competent authority. Where an appeal is granted it must be lawfully prosecuted; and where there is no appeal the courts will not enlarge their remedies to interfere on formal grounds with existing corporate bodies provided for by law. The same rule that recognizes the rights of officers de facto recognizes corporations de facto: Clement v. Everest, 20 M. 19.

5. Where a school district has assumed to possess and exercise all the rights and franchises of a regularly-organized corporation for thirteen years with entire acquiescence, its organization will be presumed regular; and neither its regularity nor that of the legislation under which the district has acted will be liable to be called in question thereafter in a merely private and collateral suit: Stuart v. Kalamazoo School District, 80 M. 69.

6. Where the organization of a union school district has been claimed, the presumption arising from its user of corporate powers must be that of such an organization as the user indicates: Ibid.

7. Where a school district had enjoyed its franchises for five years, during most of which time proceedings to inquire into the validity of the organization had been pending by quo warranto and writ of error instead of the speedier statutory process of appeal, the supreme court declined to review its organization on technicalities: Lord v. Every, 38 M. 405.

8. Where a school district has exercised franchises and privileges as such for more than two years, it is presumed to have been legally organized (H. S. § 5037), and the organization cannot be questioned at law or in equity: Everett School District v. Wilcox School District, 68 M. 51.

9. The regularity of the action of school inspectors in creating or changing school districts will not be examined collaterally in a proceeding to restrain collection of school taxes: Clement v. Everest, 20 M. 19.

10. The legal organization of a school district actually exercising its corporate powers cannot be collaterally questioned in contesting a title based on a school tax: Stockle v. Silsbee, 41 M. 615.

That certiorari to the assessor is not the proper method for inquiring into organization, etc., see CERTIORARI, § 34.

Certiorari to review proceedings for formation of district will not be sustained if after its issue it has been allowed to sleep until organization has been completed, etc.: See CERTIORARI, § 67.

(b) Alteration.

11. Where a city was incorporated of territory that formed part of a school district, and the charter provided for a board of city school inspectors, it was held that the effect was to sever from the school district the territory included in the city, without in any other respect depriving the district of any legal rights: Saginaw v. Saginaw School District, 9 M. 541.

12. Under the statute of 1840 (see H. S. § 5038) empowering the school inspectors of any township "to divide the township into such number of school districts, and to regulate and alter the boundaries of said school districts, as may from time to time be necessary," they might dissolve one organized district and annex it to another: People v. Davidson, 2 D. 121.

13. The township board of school inspectors has no power to dissolve a school district created by special act of the legislature, and to set back the territory into the districts from which it was taken; and the board will be enjoined from enforcing proceedings for such dissolution: Oshemo School District v. Dean, 17 M. 223.

14. School inspectors have no authority to divide up and destroy a district without the consent of a majority of the resident taxpayers; nor, without such consent, can they destroy it by cutting it up into pieces and attaching all the territory to other districts: Briggs v. Borden, 71 M. — (June 22, '88).

15. At a special school-district meeting to vote upon a proposition to dissolve the district fourteen votes were cast in favor of dissolution and nine against it. Every person present qualified to vote at any school meeting was allowed to vote, whether a tax-payer or not, and without reference to sex. Ten or more persons who were not tax-payers voted, most of them for the proposition. Some of the legal voters of the district were not present, and some of those present did not vote. Held, that the consent of a majority of the resident tax-payers had not been obtained, as required by H. S. § 5041: Ibid.

16. A vote taken to "disband" a school district is supported by a notice of a meeting to vote upon a proposition to "dissolve" it; the words are of similar import: Ibid.

17. A resident tax-payer can file a bill to restrain the board of school inspectors from selling a school-house, etc., under color of a void attempt to dissolve the district: Ibid.

18. The board of school inspectors has power to detach territory from one district and attach it to another, unless such action would practically destroy the district; and it may afterwards, with the consent of the remaining tax-payers, consolidate the whole territory left with another district (if such district also consents through its tax-payers), although by so doing the provisions of H. S. § 5041, forbidding consolidation without consent, etc., are evaded: Dozey v. Martin School Inspectors, 67 M. 601.

19. Township boards of school inspectors cannot detach territory where the lands therein had been taxed for building a school-house within three years without the consent of the tax-payers; nor does it render their action legal that the territory detached was not at the same time attached to another district: Coulter v. School Inspectors, 59 M. 391.

20. The validity of the action of school inspectors in changing the boundaries of school districts is not affected by the fact that the inspectors were interested parties as tax-payers and residents; the disabling doctrine does not apply to those administrative acts which are public and not with or between private parties: Clement v. Everest, 29 M. 19.

21. Township school inspectors cannot enlarge a graded school district by adding unorganized territory, though they may, with the consent of the trustees, transfer to its jurisdiction territory previously organized into primary districts: Simpkins v. Ward, 45 M. 559.

22. Notice of the meeting of inspectors to change the boundaries of districts and of the object of the meeting must be given in strict compliance with the statute, and no business inconsistent with the notice is lawful: Passage v. Williamstown School Inspectors, 19 M. 330.

23. The notice required by H. S. § 5040, amended by act 82 of 1883, to be given of a meeting of township board (or boards) of school inspectors to alter the boundaries of a district, is jurisdictional; and before action is taken proof of the posting, in the time and places specified in the statute, must be filed with the clerk of the board: Coulter v. School Inspectors, 59 M. 391; School District v. Martin School Inspectors, 63 M. 611.

24. The detaching of lands from two separate school districts and attaching them to another district may be included in one notice, and acted upon separately at one meeting of the board of school inspectors: Dozey v. Martin School Inspectors, 67 M. 601 (Nov. 10, '87).

25. Where there has been actual notice of proposed proceedings by joint boards for the formation of a new school district out of several old ones, mere informalities in the issue of such notice are not jurisdictional defects;

nor is the fact that it covers territory not actually taken: Parman v. School Inspectors, 49 M. 63.

26. An abuse of the discretion vested in the township board of school inspectors to divide the township into school districts cannot authorize the courts to interfere: People v. Davidson, 2 D. 121.

27. The discretionary powers of the board of school inspectors in arranging school districts, and of the town board on appeal, cannot be reviewed by the courts: Brody v. Penn Township Board, 32 M. 272.

28. The regularity of the action of school inspectors in creating or changing school districts will not be inquired into in a collateral proceeding. Their action is the exercise of a public discretionary power, which can only be reviewed, if at all, by some direct appellate process authorized by law and operating upon the proceedings themselves to affirm, reverse or change them: Clement v. Everest, 29 M. 19.

(c) Division of property; adjustment of liabilities.

29. Where territory forming part of a school district is incorporated as a city under a charter providing for a city board of school inspectors, the city, without special legislation, has no remedy to recover its proportion of the school district moneys or other property; the statute concerning cases where a school district is divided, or a part of one school district is set off to another by a board of school inspectors, does not apply: Saginaw v. Saginaw School District, 9 M. 541.

30. A valuation and apportionment made at a meeting not preceded by the statutory ten days' notice posted, etc. (as required prior to 1881), held void; and held that the old school district could maintain a bill in its own name to enjoin a tax to satisfy the amount so apportioned as its share: Everett School District v. Wilcox School District, 63 M. 51.

31. Whether a board of school inspectors is competent to fix the amount to be paid by a district for school property which it retains when another district is set off from it, so long as the actual ownership of the property is in doubt, quere: Pine School District v. Wilcox, 48 M. 404.

32. A finding made by the township board of school inspectors, where changes had been made in the school districts, fixing each district's credits with the treasurer, will not be changed on mandamus after acquiescence for four years and a half, there being no proof of illegality, unfairness or clandestine conduct.

The concerns of school districts will not be interfered with except on things of substance: School District v. Riverside, 87 M. 404 (Oct. 27, '87).

33. When a new district is formed by the union of two or more districts, the new district becomes thereby entitled to the credits and property and liable for the debts of the districts so united: Brewer v. Palmer, 13 M. 104; Halbert v. Watertown School Districts, 36 M. 421.

34. The erection of a new township will sever it from a school district of which it was before a part, and it will not be liable for the school district debts under any general provision of the law: People v. Ryan, 19 M. 203.

35. Where a school district is parcelled out among three other existing districts, the latter cannot be held jointly liable for a debt of the former district; whatever they are bound to pay must be a several and not a joint obligation: Halbert v. Watertown School Districts, 36 M. 421.

36. Where a part of the territory of a district is cut off and erected into a new district, or attached to another district, the debts of the divided district cannot be parcelled out by the courts so as to give creditors a remedy against any but the divided district. A debt once existing remains a debt against the corporation that created it, and its obligation is not destroyed by a change in corporate limits. If contribution is required it must be obtained by the corporation and not by its creditors, unless otherwise provided by law: Turnbull v. Alpena School District, 45 M. 496.

37. Where a statute creating two new school districts in territory taken from an old one which was thus left with smaller limits provided that the old district should be primarily liable on its previous orders, and that the others should pay their proportion to it, a holder of such an order cannot enforce by mandamus the collection thereof against a district that refuses to contribute: Maltz v. Wilson Board of Education, 41 M. 547.

38. Where, on the formation of two new districts from part of the territory of an old one, the district boards neglected to perform their statutory duty to adjust the proportion of debts and credits, the old district will nevertheless be compelled by mandamus to pay order issued by it before the division: Turnbull v. Alpena School District, 45 M. 496.

II. POWERS AND DUTIES OF DISTRICTS.

39. School districts are municipal corporations: Marathon School District v. Gage, 89

M. 484; Seeley v. Port Huron Board of Education, 39 M. 486; Everett School District v. Wilcox School District, 63 M. 51. So are the boards of education of Detroit and Port Huron: Board of Education v. Detroit, 80 M. 503; Tibbals v. Port Huron Board of Education, 89 M. 635.

40. In so far as the laws creating union school districts in the cities and larger villages establish special regulations for them, or confer special or enlarged powers, they are removed from the control of the general primary school law; but in all other particulars that law controls them: People v. Detroit Board of Education, 18 M. 400.

41. A school district is competent in its corporate capacity to take and hold money bequests in trust for the maintenance of a public library for the use and benefit of all persons residing within the district: Maynard v. Woodward, 36 M. 423.

42. Where a village is by statute enabled to erect a school-house from moneys bequeathed, it may be authorized to use the aid of the school district in which it lies to carry out such purpose: Hathaway v. New Baltimore, 48 M. 251.

43. Where a statutory limit of the amount of bonds that a district may issue is $3,000, and the district is already bonded for $2,700, a vote to issue bonds to the amount of $780 in settlement of a demand will be sustained up to the legal limit, and the issue of bonds will be restrained for the excess only: Stockdale v. Wayland School District, 47 M. 226.

44. Action by a school district that can only be taken by a two-thirds vote cannot be rescinded by a bare majority: Ibid.

45. A school district in its annual meeting may authorize payment of equitable claims against it, notwithstanding such payment could not legally be enforced. Thus, it may vote to reimburse a contractor who has sustained loss in performing his contract for building a school-house: Ibid.

III. BOARDS AND OFFICERS.

Collection of costs awarded against, see COSTS, § 272.

(a) Election and appointment.

46. One for whose sole benefit an undivided interest is held in fee by another in trust absolute appearing on the conveyance is a freeholder so as to be eligible under act 37 of 1877 to the office of school trustee in Grand Rapids: Godwin v. Grand Rapids Board of Education, 88 M. 95.

47. An annual city election is not a school-district meeting, and the primary school laws are inapplicable to such elections. Hence, H. S. § 5049, prescribing who shall be voters at such meetings, does not enable women to vote for members of the board of education at the annual election of the city of Hastings: Mudge v. Jones, 59 M. 163.

48. There is no legal sanction for taking informal ballots at a regular election of school-district officers: Tallmadge School District v. Root, 61 M. 873.

49. The board of education of Grand Rapids has no power to go behind the statements of election of its members, but must receive those whose election is certified by the board of canvassers: Godwin v. Grand Rapids Board of Education, 38 M. 95.

50. A. and B. claiming to have been elected school-district moderator, judgment by default was entered in A.'s favor, and the next day the assessor and director, assuming that there was a vacancy, appointed C. moderator, who thenceforth acted as such — A. not applying to the other members of the board for recognition, and never assuming the duties of the office. Held that, on an application to compel payment of warrants countersigned by C., the latter must be treated as acting moderator: Tallmadge School District v. Root, 61 M. 873.

Parol proof admissible to show who are officers: See EVIDENCE, § 1168.

(b) Removal.

51. The members of the board of education of Port Huron hold office for specific terms, and are not city officers removable by the common council: Tibbals v. Port Huron Board of Education, 39 M. 635.

52. The provision of C. L. 1871, § 3693, for the removal of school-district officers from office by the township board, applies, as to district officers, only to school districts situated wholly within the limits of a single township; and the power of removal lies only with the township board of that township: Crawford v. Township Boards of Scio and Webster, 24 M. 248.

53. The supreme court cannot supply the omission by the legislature to confer this power upon the joint boards, where the district is organized from two or more adjoining townships: Ibid.

54. Where two township boards sit together as a single joint board for the removal from office of a director of a school district embracing a part of each township, and their proceedings are brought up for review on a writ of certiorari, the return to which purports to be the return of the two boards as a joint board, and discloses that they acted jointly in the hearing and determination of the case, this is sufficient to show that their action was without jurisdiction and void: Ibid.

55. Where a proceeding to remove the moderator of a school district for his persistent refusal to countersign an order drawn by the director upon the assessor was taken before the township board sitting with but three members, of whom the payee in such order was one, it was held that such proceeding was in the nature of a judicial investigation, that the payee was an interested party, and therefore incompetent to act, and that his presence, being essential to a quorum, rendered the proceeding void: Stockwell v. White Lake, 23 M. 841.

56. Proceedings to remove a school director for refusing to recognize the validity of a teaching contract were taken by a township board, one of the members of which was related to a third person who had a contract subject to the same objections. Held, that this did not legally disqualify the member from acting on the case actually before the board: Hamtranck v. Holihan, 46 M. 127.

57. H. S. § 5170 does not authorize the township board to remove the moderator for hiring her husband to teach the district school and agreeing to pay him more than is necessary to secure a better teacher: Hazen v. Akron Town Board, 48 M. 183.

58. Nor does it cover a charge of conspiring with a woman moderator so to hire her husband, etc.: McLaren v. Akron Town Board, 48 M. 189.

59. The wilful refusal of a school director to sign a contract made with a teacher, or to accept and file it, or draw orders for the teacher's pay while it is pending, and his obstinate neglect to furnish necessary school-house supplies, may be taken into account in proceedings for his removal: Geddes v. Thomastown, 46 M. 316.

60. Proceedings by a township board to remove a school director cannot properly be taken until the action of the proper authorities has been invoked by complaint of some definite violation of duty; but where the respondent admits the charges set up against him and expressly desires the board to act on them without further delay, he cannot afterwards complain that they did so: Ibid.

61. Proceedings by a township board to remove a school director are not invalidated by the fact that it did not meet to agree on the notice under which the proceedings were taken: Wenzel v. Dorr, 49 M. 25.

62. In proceedings under the statute to remove a public officer upon charges, evidence of acts performed by the accused as "Moderator of School District No. 1," is not admissible to prove a charge against him as "Moderator of School District No. 2;" and when, on the trial of an information for falsely assuming to act as moderator of school district No. 1, evidence has been produced of the proceedings before the township board to remove him upon charges recorded against him as moderator of school district No. 2, it is not admissible to show that the record was a mistake, and that the charges were actually preferred against him as moderator of No. 1: Hull v. People, 21 M. 456.

63. The action of the township board in removing a school-district officer is in its nature judicial, and must be in writing: Ibid.

64. The action of a town board in removing a school director is final unless speedily brought up for review: Geddes v. Thomas-town, 46 M. 816.

65. The township board is exclusive judge of the facts on which it is authorized by H. S. § 5170 to remove a school director, and its proceedings can only be reviewed by the courts on questions of law: Hamtramck v. Holihan, 46 M. 137.

That removal is reviewable on certiorari from circuit court, see CERTIORARI § 142.

As to costs on review of removal proceedings, see COSTS, § 279.

(c) Meetings, powers, duties, etc.

66. The convening of the board is necessary for the legal transaction of official business: Hazen v. Lerche, 47 M. 626.

67. The statutory notice of meetings by inspectors must be given, stating the object of the meeting. And no business at a meeting inconsistent with the notice is lawful: Passage v. Williamstown School Inspectors, 19 M. 330.

68. Notice of a meeting of the board of school inspectors to change a school-house site is necessary: Andress v. Williamstown School Inspectors, 19 M. 332.

69. The notice required by statute of a meeting of inspectors to alter district boundaries is essential to the validity of their action: Coulter v. School Inspectors, 59 M. 391; School District v. Martin School Inspectors, 63 M. 611.

70. Failure to give the ten days' notice by posting required (prior to 1831, see S. L. 1867, p. 79; S. L. 1873, p. 81) of a meeting of a district board avoided action apportioning the valuation of school property on the formation of a new district: Everett School District v. Wilcox School District, 63 M. 51.

71. Whether any adjournment of a board of school inspectors except from day to day to conclude current business is lawful, quere: Passage v. Williamstown School Inspectors, 19 M. 330.

72. The district board can make no regulations that would exclude any resident of the district from any of its schools because of race, color or religious belief, or personal peculiarities; and H. S. § 5070 in this regard applies to the union school districts of the state except so far as the special legislation creating them is inconsistent: People v. Detroit Board of Education, 18 M. 400.

73. The city of Detroit is not entirely exempted from the operation of the general school laws, but is subject to such of their provisions as are not inconsistent with the special legislation regulating the city schools; and, therefore, H. S. § 5070 precludes the board of education from excluding a child from any public school on the ground of color: Ibid.

Father a competent relator to compel admission in such case, see MANDAMUS, § 288.

74. The right of school authorities in union school districts to levy taxes upon the general public for the support of high schools, and thereby make free the instruction of children in foreign languages, sustained: Stuart v. Kalamazoo School District, 30 M. 69.

75. The educational policy of Michigan from 1817 until after the adoption of the constitution of 1850 reviewed; held, that the primary school districts of the state are not restricted as to the branches of knowledge which their officers may cause to be taught or the grade of the instruction that may be given, nor prevented from giving instruction in classics and the living foreign languages, if their voters consent in regular form to bear the expense and raise the taxes for the purpose: Ibid.

76. The board of trustees of a graded school district may cause music to be taught, and has authority to purchase a piano for the purposes of a high school: Knabe v. West Bay City Board of Education, 67 M. 262.

77. The moderator, director and assessor have no common-law powers or rights, but are strictly confined to such as the statutes confer; and prior to 1859 (see H. S. § 5078, subd. 8) they were not entitled to compensation for their services, there being no statutory authority for payment: Hinman v. School District, 4 M. 168.

78. Where the law gives a district board full control over the schools of a union school district it has power to appoint a superintendent of schools: Stuart v. Kalamazoo School District, 30 M. 69.

79. School boards are not required to keep any particular kind or number of corporate books (see infra, § 150): Holloway v. Ogden School District, 62 M. 153.

80. Charges for tuition of non-resident pupils cannot be collected in the absence of any resolution fixing the rate. Such rate must be fixed by resolution of the district board, which must be duly recorded, and which is provable by the record only: Thompson v. Crockery School District, 25 M. 483.

81. Prior to the enactment of H. S. § 5050, expressly requiring it, it was held competent for the district board to purchase at the expense of the district such record books, blanks and papers as were necessary for the use of the district and the proper keeping of its records, without any previous vote of the district therefor: Easton School District v. Snell, 24 M. 350.

82. The requirement (see H. S. § 5078) that a school director shall provide the necessary appendages for the school-house would not authorize him to purchase charts for use in the school-room without the vote of a district meeting. Such an unauthorized purchase would create no liability against the district; nor would the director's retaining the charts, occasionally placing them in the school-house, operate as a ratification by the district: Gibson v. Vevay School District, 36 M. 404.

83. A line fence was held to be a "necessary appendage" for a school-house within the meaning of H. S. § 5073, subd. 6; and the director had power to contract for the building of it, and the district was liable: Creager v. Wright School District, 63 M. 101.

84. C. L. 1871, § 3618 (see H. S. § 5078), in providing that the school director shall keep the necessary school-house furniture in due order and condition, and that his expenses shall be subsequently audited and paid, does not intend that money must be put into his hands beforehand: Hamtramck v. Holihan, 46 M. 127.

85. A township school director has authority, in the exercise of a sound discretion, to buy new seats for a school-house under a resolution, adopted at the annual meeting of the school district, "that the school board fix the school-house ready for the winter term:" McLaren v. Akron, 48 M. 189.

86. Where, by a school-district officer's wilful act or neglect of duty, the district has been subjected to suit and judgment against it, a private citizen who has been assessed and has paid his share of the tax cannot recover from the officer the amount of the tax so paid; such recovery must be had by the district: Wall v. Eastman, 1 M. 266.

Whether school officers are liable for failure to take bond from contractor, see OFFICERS, § 180.

IV. APPEALS.

87. A township board has jurisdiction of appeals from decisions of the board of school inspectors fixing the amount to be paid by an old school district to a new one where the latter comprises part of the same territory and the former retains the school property: Pine School District v. Wilcox, 48 M. 404.

88. Under C. L. 1871, §§ 3734-5, providing for appeals from the board of school inspectors to the township board, the approval of the appeal bond is essential to complete an appeal; and the fact that the clerk of the board of inspectors refused to approve it because it was not witnessed, even though his objections were frivolous, vexatious, and made in bad faith, will not render the bond sufficient without an approval, as, under the statute, it may be approved also by any justice of the peace of the township: Clement v. Everest, 29 M. 19.

89. Parties appealing to the town board from the action of the inspectors in arranging school districts thereby waive those questions which require judicial review and submit themselves to the discretion of that body; and a certiorari to the town board does not open for review the doings of the inspectors: Brody v. Penn Township Board, 32 M. 272.

90. Where, on such an appeal, the township board acted within its jurisdiction, its discretion is not reviewable by the courts; and if it did not, and its acts were void, then, under the statute, the action of the inspectors, after ten days, is equally intact and beyond disturbance: Ibid.

91. If the town board, acting without authority, reversed the inspectors' action, it might be necessary to neutralize their order; but if they affirmed it, whether properly or not, it is left where it would have been without interference: Ibid.

92. No appeal from action of inspectors ascertaining proportion of valuation, etc., after alteration of districts, is necessary where such action was void for want of the statutory notice: Everett School District v. Wilcox School District, 63 M. 51.

V. ORDERS.

93. A showing of a want of funds is a complete answer to an application for a mandamus to require an assessor of a school district to pay a warrant drawn on him in favor of a school teacher: Allen v. Frink, 82 M. 96.

Further as to mandamus to compel payment, see supra, §§ 87, 83; MANDAMUS, § 212.

94. Where the moderator and assessor of a school district are sued upon an order signed by them, a finding that it was signed on a false and fraudulent statement that the school director approved and would sign it, and on condition that it should be of no force unless he did sign it, and the further finding that there was no purpose to contract except for the district, defeats an action thereon in the absence of any showing of subsequent action creating contract relations, or of any action by defendants taken with a knowledge of the facts and estopping them personally: Kane v. Stowe, 50 M. 817.

95. A sale of genuine school orders implies no warranty of the officers' authority to issue them: White v. Robinson, 50 M. 73.

As to interest on school-district orders, see INTEREST, §§ 41, 42.

Parol proof admissible of payment upon orders, see EVIDENCE, § 1150.

That promise to pay is implied when order wrongfully obtained has been used as money, see ASSUMPSIT, § 25.

VI. FUNDS.

96. Const., art. 18, § 2, which provides that the income of the primary school fund shall be appropriated annually to the specific object for which the fund exists, does not deprive the legislature of the power of regulating, from time to time, the state policy regarding the primary school lands as shall be deemed proper: Jones v. State Land Office Commissioner, 21 M. 236.

That the act of 1857 setting apart seventy-five per cent. of the proceeds of swamp-lands for the primary school fund did not constitute such an appropriation of the lands to educational purposes as to place them, under Const., art. 18, § 2, beyond legislative control, see PUBLIC LANDS, § 176.

As to sale and disposal of school lands, see PUBLIC LANDS, VI.

As to the statute entitling the school fund to escheated lands, see ESTATES OF DECEDENTS, §§ 480-483.

97. Const., art. 14, § 1, provides that certain revenues shall be applied to paying the interest upon educational funds and the interest and principal of the state debt "until the extinguishment of the state debt," when they shall constitute a part of the primary school interest fund. Held that, for the purposes of the requirement, the debt is to be considered "extinguished" when there is money enough in the state treasury not subject to other claims to pay it, even though it has not matured and has not been actually paid: Auditor-General v. State Treasurer, 45 M. 161.

98. Where but one school district in a township is entitled to a share in the primary school interest fund, and the superintendent of public instruction certifies the apportionment accordingly, and the money is paid over to the township treasurer, no apportionment by the clerk is needed or can be made, and the treasurer must pay the money to the district assessor: Moiles v. Watson, 60 M. 415.

99. The treasurer of the board of school inspectors, and not the town treasurer, is the proper custodian of the township library moneys, and mandamus will lie to compel the town treasurer, on proper demand, to pay them over to him; and that, too, whether there is or is not a specific appropriation for which the inspectors require them: McPharlin v. Mahoney, 80 M. 100.

100. Where a majority of the school board has recognized a moderator, the only purpose of their action being to get the school money into the hands of the assessor, whose right is not questioned, the town treasurer should pay over unless doubtful of such moderator's identity: Tallmadge School District v. Root, 61 M. 378.

101. A township treasurer is bound to make payment of school moneys on a proper warrant to the extent of such moneys lawfully in his hands, and cannot refuse on the ground that his right to the custody of the remainder is disputed: Bryant v. Moore, 50 M. 225.

102. The liability of the township treasurer to pay the amount of taxes raised for school purposes to the order of the school-district officers is distinct from his ordinary liability for township moneys, and cannot be released or in any way affected by the action of the township board in any settlement between him and it: Jones v. Wright, 84 M. 371.

103. The assessor of a school district is the lawful treasurer and depositary of school-district funds, and all moneys must pass through his hands and be paid out by him on proper orders: Burns v. Bender, 86 M. 195; Midland School Districts, 40 M. 551.

104. The township treasurer can pay school moneys only to the school-district assessor, and then only on the warrant of the proper district officers: Ibid.

105. Where the township treasurer paid, without a warrant, school money to the assessor, who disbursed it without a warrant to pay a teacher who had a valid claim against the district, it was held that the district was not precluded from holding him liable for the amount: Burns v. Bender, 36 M. 195.

106. One who has occupied the double position of moderator of a school district and town treasurer is not thereby authorized to set up his previous illegal disbursements of the district moneys as treasurer, as an excuse for not doing his duty as moderator; his double functions will not relieve him in one capacity from doing his duty in the other: Ibid.

107. A warrant drawn upon the township treasurer by the director of a school district and countersigned by the moderator is not a negotiable instrument, and no action can be maintained thereon by a transferee: Fox v. Shipman, 19 M. 218.

108. An order drawn by the director upon the township treasurer for school money must be made payable to the district assessor, and is void if drawn payable to "A. or bearer:" Fractional School District v. Mallary, 23 M. 111.

109. The director is charged with the duty of seeing that school moneys are transferred from the township treasurer to the assessor within a reasonable time, and this duty is absolute: Burns v. Bender, 36 M. 195.

110. The moderator is bound, under ordinary circumstances, to countersign all orders of the director for that purpose; and if he refuses in a proper case to do so, mandamus lies to compel him. In such proceeding by mandamus the director is a proper relator; whether the assessor would be, quere: Ibid.

111. The duty of a moderator of a school district to countersign an order drawn by the director upon the assessor is not merely ministerial. He has a right to satisfy himself that the director drew it for a valid claim and in the proper performance of his duty: Stockwell v. White Lake, 22 M. 341.

112. A school-district assessor is chargeable with notice of his successor's election and of the latter's acceptance; and he cannot, on any claim that he is personally entitled to official notice of these facts, withhold the district funds from such successor when the latter has to make proper demands for them after qualifying for office: Mason v. Fractional School District, 34 M. 228.

113. A school district can sue its assessor on an action for money had and received by him, but which at the expiration of his term he has refused, on demand, to pay over to his successor; an action upon the assessor's bond is not the only remedy; the bond is required as additional security, but it does not supersede the assessor's individual responsibility: Ibid.

114. School moneys are distinguishable on the tax-rolls, and when received by the treasurer of a municipal board of education are at once payable to the proper depository without waiting for the comptroller to formally apportion and separate the various taxes paid by the collector to the treasurer: Port Huron Board of Education v. City Treasurer, 57 M. 46.

115. The treasurer of a municipal board of education cannot go back of board records which on their face show valid action for the purpose of avoiding the performance of his duty to deposit the funds paid to him with the custodian who appears by the records to be entitled to them: Ibid.

116. The city charter of Lansing (title 15, § 4) leaves the school funds in the city treasurer's keeping, to be paid out by him to the treasurer of the board of education "on the order of said board;" whether payment without the board's order is valid, quere: Lansing v. Wood, 57 M. 201.

117. And as to the effect of a transfer of such funds by the city treasurer to his successor by means of certificates of deposits, quere; such transfer may be ratified by the city: Ibid.

VII. TAXES.

118. A school district has no power to levy a tax except for the purposes specified by statute: Hinman v. School District, 4 M. 168.

119. A tax sale is void if the taxes include school taxes not authorized by any recorded vote of the school district for which they are levied; and where the record of a district showed the voting by the electors of only $180 for a given year, and there was no record of any increase by the district board, and the sum of $340 was levied by the supervisors upon the property of the district, held, that a tax-title based upon a sale for that year's taxes was void: Burroughs v. Goff, 64 M. 464.

120. Mill-tax for township library and school purposes is not to be blended on the roll with that of state, county and township taxes: Case v. Dean, 16 M. 12.

121. School taxes enrolled upon the wrong roll are void: Folkerts v. Power, 43 M. 283.

122. A township treasurer has no right to receive for school moneys anything which the law has not authorized to be so received; and if he chooses to do so and to receipt for the taxes, he must make good the amount: Jones v. Wright, 34 M. 371.

123. Lands might be sold for delinquent school taxes under the school law of 1843: Tweed v. Metcalf, 4 M. 579.

That school district may file bill to restrain tax based on void apportionment, see supra, § 30.

124. Where an injunction is asked to restrain the collection of a school tax irregularly assessed, the school district is a necessary party; but where it had been omitted, and the tax was found to be absolutely illegal, it was held sufficient to add the district as a formal party before entering the final decree: Folkerts v. Power, 42 M. 283.

125. Injunction lies to restrain the sale, for school taxes, of lands unlawfully included within the taxing district: Simpkins v. Ward, 45 M. 559.

126. For a case where a school district was allowed to maintain a bill against another district for an account of taxes belonging to complainant, see Oshtemo School District v. Dean, 17 M. 223.

As to action by tax-payer to recover from moderator, see supra, § 86.

VIII. SITES AND BUILDINGS.

127. The jurisdiction to condemn lands for a school-house site is invoked by presenting to the proper officer a petition designating the site and showing disagreement with the owner as to compensation for it: Smith v. Milton School District, 40 M. 143.

128. Proceedings to condemn land for a school-house site will be quashed if there is no lawful designation thereof shown by the records: Heck v. Essex School District, 49 M. 551.

129. H. S. ch. 196 permits land to be condemned for school purposes only when a site has been lawfully determined, and it confines the power of the township inspectors to determine the site to cases where the inhabitants themselves cannot do it. And it seems that more than one site cannot be designated except by the inhabitants: Ibid.

130. Where the petition, notice, venire, finding and commissioner's certificate in proceedings to condemn land for a school-house site are regular on their face, and show full compliance with statutory requirements, the proceedings are presumed regular; and if the parties interested were represented, and omit, on filing the proceedings, to make a sworn showing to the circuit court of any other defects — such as an omission to designate the site to the jury — they cannot rely on it thereafter: Smith v. Milton School District, 40 M. 143.

131. Where the owner of land that is sought for a school-house site is represented at the proceedings to condemn it, he is deemed to waive objection to jurors if he does not challenge them at the time: Ibid.

132. The justice to whom a petition for the condemnation of land for a school-house site is presented is not empowered to hear evidence or pass on any of the merits: Heck v. Essex School District, 49 M. 551.

133. In proceedings to condemn land for a school-house site, the circuit judge is not required to act in preference to a circuit court commissioner: Smith v. Milton School District, 40 M. 143.

134. Where proceedings to condemn land for a school-house site are brought before a jury, proof of a legal selection of the site must be made to them, and without it they cannot find it to be necessary to condemn it: Heck v. Essex School District, 49 M. 551.

135. Where the circuit judge, because of irregularities, has refused to enter judgment against the school district for the amount assessed by jury for condemnation of land for a school-house site, such entry will not be compelled by mandamus: Delhi School Dist. v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 49 M. 432.

136. A lease of land to a school district to hold "during the time it is used for school purposes" creates a base fee, and satisfies the statute requiring a title in fee or a lease for ninety-nine years where land is to be secured for building a stone or brick school-house: Delhi School District v. Everett, 52 M. 314.

137. The board of inspectors has no power to change a school-house site on a written request of a majority of qualified voters of the district except in cases where the site has been fixed by it because the inhabitants were unable to agree upon a site: Andress v. Williamstown School Inspectors, 19 M. 332.

138. A district contracting with a builder for the erection of a school-house is bound to provide a site for the same within such reasonable time as will allow the builder to perform his contract: Todd v. Greenwood School District, 40 M. 294.

139. Where the assignment of a builder's contract was recognized by the district and the time for the erection of the school-house extended to the assignee, held, that the sureties of the original contractor for the performance of the work were thereby released: Ibid.

As to contracts for construction of school building, acceptance of work, etc., see CONTRACTS, §§ 496, 489, 525.

As to effect of failure to take bond from contractor, see OFFICERS, § 130.

IX. TEACHERS.

140. Where a majority of a board of school examiners has acted and refused a certificate, such action is not invalidated by the fact that an unauthorized person participated in the examination, it not appearing that he had anything to do with the failure to pass the examination: Lee v. Alcona School District, 71 M. — (July 11, '89).

141. Under H. S. § 5154, the secretary of a board of school examiners has no authority to issue a special certificate to a person four days after the board's refusal to grant her a certificate upon examination: Ibid.

142. Where the employment of an unqualified teacher is a necessity the school district is authorized to employ one who has not the proper certificate, if the board is satisfied that the teacher is otherwise qualified, and to pay such teacher out of moneys belonging to the district. But the primary school money and mill-tax cannot be used for such purpose: Hale v. Risley, 69 M. 596.

143. H. S. § 4969 makes a certificate from the state normal school a legal certificate, when filed, of qualification to teach. Held, that a failure to file such a certificate until after making a contract to teach is no defence to an action for salary earned after filing: Smith v. Pleasant Plains School District, 69 M. 599.

144. The district in its corporate capacity is a necessary party to a contract with a teacher, and in that capacity is bound to perform it, and is liable in damages to the teacher for its non-performance: Wall v. Eastman, 1 M. 268.

145. The trustees of graded public schools can make binding contracts for teaching; and the provisions in the primary school law, whereby the voters and the district board shall have full control of the schools during the entire school year, do not apply to graded schools, and cannot affect any contract for teaching made by the trustees before the year opened: Tappan v. Carrollton School District, 44 M. 500.

146. In an action by a school teacher on a contract of hire it was alleged as error that the contract was allowed in evidence without proof that those who acted for the school district in making it were not authorized, and that the court charged that it was valid.

Held, that this allegation did not sufficiently present the objection that the officers of the district were not competent to bind it by a contract extending beyond the current year, especially as there was evidence that the officers were in possession and presumptively competent, and there was no evidence that they were not authorized to employ teachers: Manistee School District v. Cook, 47 M. 112.

147. The word "approved," subscribed by the moderator as such, and written upon a contract for hiring a teacher, which had already been signed by the school-district director and the teacher, is in legal effect a signature of the contract by the moderator: Everett v. Cannon School District, 30 M. 249.

148. Where a teacher was hired by the director and moderator without convening the board and without consultation with the assessor or to his knowledge, the employment was held invalid: Hazen v. Lerche, 47 M. 626.

149. The moderator and director of a school district signed a teacher's contract without a meeting or resolution of the board; the teacher taught for half a term, none of the officers denying the validity of the contract, and the assessor cashed orders drawn by the other officers for the teacher's pay. Held, that a teacher's contract signed by a majority of the board is presumptively valid, and that the contract in this case was sufficiently ratified and confirmed: Crane v. Bennington School District, 61 M. 299.

150. Plaintiff's contract as teacher was entered in a book kept by the district, signed by the director and assessor, but not by the moderator. The moderator, though knowing that plaintiff was teaching, made no objection, and concurred in paying part of plaintiff's wages. Held, that the book was admissible as, at least presumptively, a corporate transaction; that simultaneous signing was not necessary; that plaintiff had a right to suppose his contract was a valid one when it was signed by a sufficient number of officers, and when he was, with the personal knowledge of the whole board, permitted to proceed; and that the board could not, by abstaining from holding meetings and from doing its duty, set up its own wrong in defence of an honest claim: Holloway v. Ogden School District, 62 M. 153.

151. A contract within the ordinary powers of a corporation is presumed valid when regularly signed, and no stronger proof is required in school matters than in other corporate agreements: Ibid.

152. The provision in H. S. § 5065 that a contract for hiring a school teacher shall require the teacher to keep a correct list of his pupils, etc., imposes on him the duty of keeping the list, and becomes in legal effect a part of his contract, whether this is expressly stipulated therein or not. But the statute is directory, and the requirement may be omitted, leaving the contract valid if otherwise good: Everett v. Cannon School District, 80 M. 249.

153. Suspension of school by direction of the district board on account of the prevalence of small-pox is no defence to the payment of the teacher's wages during the time the school remained closed. Any interposition that will release the district from the obligation of its contract must be such as renders performance impossible: Dewey v. Alpena School District, 43 M. 480.

154. A school teacher whose school is discontinued in March because of the burning of the school-house is not bound to look up any other school—it being out of the season to obtain a situation as a teacher; nor need she seek work not in her vocation, but she may recover wages for the full term ending in June: Smith v. Pleasant Plains School District, 69 M. 589.

155. Teaching contracts for stated periods are subject to the observance of recognized holidays, and there should be no deductions for such occasions from the teacher's wages: Marathon School District v. Gage, 39 M. 484; Holloway v. Ogden School District, 62 M. 153.

156. A teacher's wages cannot be reached by garnishing the district or its officers: Marathon School District v. Gage, 39 M. 484.

A teacher suing for wages need not make proof of his certificate of qualification, but the granting of such certificate may be proved by parol: See PLEADINGS, § 279.

X. SUITS.

157. An action for money had and received is the only proceeding by which to liquidate a demand against a municipal corporation—as here, by one school district against another—for money belonging to plaintiff and wrongfully in defendant's possession. In such case the defendant district cannot require any strict proof of regularity of the proceedings authorizing the collection of the money: Midland School Districts, 40 M. 551.

158. The control of all suits by or against the district is confided to the assessor, unless other directions are given by the voters in district meeting (H. S. § 5077, subd. 5). When he is competent to act the other members of the board cannot interfere with such control. Even a majority of the voters cannot interfere except through the action of a lawful meeting: Rush School District v. Wing, 30 M. 351.

159. Therefore, an appeal taken in the name of the district without the authority of the assessor, he being competent to act, is void; and costs should not be awarded against the district upon the dismissal of an appeal so taken, where the ground of dismissal is that the district itself had not appealed: Ibid.

Further as to costs against district, see COSTS, §§ 278, 279.

160. Sureties upon a building contract made with a school district were designated by the contractors to receive the payments made on the contract. The order designating them was made before the contract and bond were completed and approved by the district board, and when they were approved the order was spread upon the records. Held, in an action by the sureties against the district to recover the amount of a payment made directly to the contractors, that plaintiffs could fully explain their relations with the contractors, in order to show the consideration for and the extent of their rights. Also, that the fact that the order was made before the contract was completed did not render it invalid, and that spreading it upon the records was as distinct a recognition as could be made, and the board could not afterwards lawfully disregard it until it was waived or surrendered: Howard v. Holland Public Schools, 50 M. 94.

School districts cannot be garnished: See GARNISHMENT, § 16.

As to jurisdiction of justices, see JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, §§ 36, 39, 40.

As to interpleader by district, see EQUITY, § 346.

SEDUCTION.

- I. WHO MAY SUE; WHEN.
- II. PLEADING.
- III. EVIDENCE.
- IV. INSTRUCTIONS.
- V. DAMAGES.

As to what constitutes seduction and as to criminal prosecutions therefor, see CRIMES, III, (s), 6.

Seduction of married women, see CRIMINAL CONVERSATION.

I. WHO MAY SUE; WHEN.

1. The woman seduced, if of full age, may sue in her own name and for her own benefit; the statute (H. S. §§ 7779-7781) is an enabling, not a restrictive, provision: Watson v. Watson, 49 M. 540; Weiherr v. Meyersham, 50 M. 602.

2. Where an infant is seduced and nobody sues for her during minority, she may bring suit in her own name at any time within six years after coming of age: Watson v. Watson, 53 M. 168.

3. An action for seduction will lie where the victim's will is overcome by the controlling influence of defendant's, especially if he holds a relation giving him authority over her: Ibid.

II. PLEADING.

4. A declaration for the seduction of plaintiff's daughter, who was of full age, alleged that plaintiff was authorized by her daughter to bring suit, and it made no claim for loss of service. Held, that this must be regarded as the statutory action for the injury to the daughter, and that the pleading would not permit recovery for loss of service: Ryan v. Fralick, 50 M. 483.

5. In a declaration on the case for damages for seduction there is no duplicity in charging in separate counts that defendant had debauched plaintiff and assaulted and got her with child by force and arms, and that he had enticed her away to make her his mistress or concubine; the latter charge explains how plaintiff came within defendant's power, and does not allege a separate cause of action, but merely matter of aggravation: Watson v. Watson, 49 M. 540.

III. EVIDENCE.

6. Where the action is brought by the victim's father or other relation authorized by her, there need be no proof of loss of service or of any suffering or injury except to her: Watson v. Watson, 49 M. 540.

7. Facts, though remote in time, showing the character and degree of intimacy of the parties, are admissible: Threadgool v. Litogot, 22 M. 271.

8. It is discretionary with the court to allow plaintiff, before proving the seduction, to show previous acts of improper familiarity: Watson v. Watson, 53 M. 168.

9. Plaintiff claimed as part of her case that she had been gotten with child at a certain time, and that the illicit intercourse was kept up for some time afterwards. Held, that proof was admissible of acts of previous familiarity as bearing upon a previous seduction, and as giving probability to her subsequent testimony that intercourse had been continuous: Ibid.

10. In an action for the seduction of an adopted daughter, evidence of kissing and similar familiarities between the parties is admissible to aid the jury in understanding their whole family relations: Watson v. Watson, 58 M. 507.

11. A man was sued by his adopted daughter for seduction. Held, that she could not show, as an independent fact, that he had told her he had concealed a sum of money for her, of which he wished her quietly to take possession in case he died before her: Watson v. Watson, 58 M. 168.

12. How far, in an action for seduction, it is proper to introduce evidence to show defendant's social or pecuniary standing as it appears or is reputed, quere: Threadgool v. Litogot, 22 M. 271.

13. One sued civilly for seduction cannot show by way of defence that his general reputation for chastity has always been good: Watson v. Watson, 58 M. 168.

14. In an action by a father for the seduction of his daughter, evidence that she had stated that two or three years before the alleged seduction she was keeping company with and engaged to another person is inadmissible; it is neither relevant to the issue, nor can it be proved for the purpose of impeaching the daughter, who had been examined as a witness for the plaintiff and had denied such statement: Fisher v. Hood, 14 M. 189.

15. A question put to the mother of the alleged victim as to her knowledge of the time her daughter went to see a physician was held unobjectionable, and its answer immaterial and not prejudicial: Dalman v. Koning, 54 M. 320.

16. Where the alleged victim had stated on cross-examination that at a certain time she and other persons named did not go out near the railroad, she cannot be contradicted unless to show improper conduct: Ibid.

IV. INSTRUCTIONS.

17. Where plaintiff, who was defendant's adopted daughter, claimed that she submitted to defendant unwillingly, and under the influence that he had over her by means of the adopted relation, it was held that there was no error in refusing to instruct the jury that her omission to make immediate outcry or complaint cast suspicion upon her claim. Counsel could comment upon the fact, however: Watson v. Watson, 58 M. 168.

18. The court in an action for seduction cannot charge the jury that the victim's reputation for chastity was bad; that is a question for them: Dalman v. Koning, 54 M. 320.

V. DAMAGES.

19. A woman suing her seducer should recover such damages as will fairly compensate her for the wrong she has suffered: Watson v. Watson, 53 M. 168.

20. Where the woman seduced is of age, and authorized her father or other relative to bring suit for her, there can in such action be no damages for loss of service; but the basis of recovery is the suffering, shame, mortification and expense which the person seduced, not the nominal plaintiff, has suffered: Watson v. Watson, 49 M. 540.

And see supra, § 4.

21. Defendant in an action for seduction cannot be held to any less responsibility for forcible wrong than for seduction without force: Dalman v. Koning, 54 M. 320.

22. In an action for seduction it was held no error to refuse to charge the jury that, if the plaintiff is entitled to damages, the jury in estimating them should consider the amount and value of the defendant's property, as to the value of which there had been no testimony except defendant's: Threadgool v. Litogot, 22 M. 271.

23. Damages for seduction cannot be aggravated by evidence of what the defendant had told his victim he was worth; or by any evidence of his wealth, unless, perhaps, such as is inferable from his general standing in the community: Watson v. Watson, 53 M. 168.

24. Court rarely interferes with the damages given by the jury in an action of seduction: Bennett v. Beam, 42 M. 847.

25. An award of $1,200 damages was held not extravagant: Dalman v. Koning, 54 M. 320.

SET-OFF.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

II. IN WHAT ACTIONS ALLOWED.

III. WHAT DAMAGES MAY BE SET OFF.

(a) In general.

(b) Liquidated and unliquidated claims.

(c) Claims in different rights.

(e) In cases of assignment.

IV. EQUITABLE SET-OFF.

V. PLEADING AND EVIDENCE.

VI. PRACTICE.

VII. JUDGMENT; COSTS.

As to setting off judgments and executions, see JUDGMENTS, §§ 254-259; MANDAMUS, § 95.

As to RECOUPMENT, see that title, and DAMAGES, X.

That set-off may be claimed in justice's court in suit against municipality, see JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, § 42.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

1. Set-off is the compensation of one debt or demand for another, by virtue of which damages are recovered of the party in whose favor a balance is found: Ward v. Fellers, 8 M. 281.

2. It is in the nature of a cross-action, and does not deny the validity of any part of plaintiff's claim, but sets up a separate and independent claim against him: M'Hardy v. Wadsworth, 8 M. 349.

3. The right of set-off in courts of law is purely statutory, and cannot be enlarged: Woods v. Ayres, 39 M. 345; Robbins v. Brooks, 42 M. 62.

4. Where a defendant has a claim that is proper subject of set-off, he may use it as such or may sue separately upon it: McEuen v. Bigelow, 40 M. 215; Huntoon v. Russell, 41 M. 316; Morehouse v. Baker, 48 M. 335; Mitchell v. Wells, 54 M. 127.

5. If a counter-claim is not based on payments made, but constitutes proper set-off, the only effect of failing to appear and plead and prove it would be that in an action thereafter brought to recover it costs could not, under the statute, be recovered: Huntoon v. Russell, 41 M. 316.

6. If a defendant in justice's court does not use a claim as set-off when he has an opportunity to do so, H. S. § 6889 denies him costs in a subsequent independent suit: Morehouse v. Baker, 48 M. 335.

II. IN WHAT ACTIONS ALLOWED.

7. Set-off is allowed only where the claim sued on would itself be a proper subject of set-off: Smith v. Warner, 14 M. 152. Not allowed (under the general statute) in suits upon claims for unliquidated damages: Ibid.; Holland v. Rea, 48 M. 218; Morehouse v. Baker, 48 M. 335.

8. A claim can never be said to be liquidated until some specific amount, or some specific data from which such amount can be calculated by an ordinary mathematical process, shall have been arrived at in such a way as to measure the rights of parties. This can never be the case before verdict where the data for calculation depend on values to be es-established by witnesses; so there can be no set-off in an action on breach of contract to deliver goods sold: Smith v. Warner, 14 M. 152. Or in an action brought by a vendor for vendee's breach of special agreement to take and pay for goods sold: Holland v. Rea, 48 M. 218.

9. But if plaintiff joins an unfounded claim for unliquidated damages with claims of a liquidated character, the suit is regarded as based upon the latter, and set-off lies; the right to set-off does not depend upon the form of plaintiff's declaration: Smith v. Warner, 16 M. 390.

10. In trover, where it is found that defendant wrongfully took possession and converted plaintiff's property to his own use, judgment follows for plaintiff for the value and interest; and a debt due from plaintiff to defendant cannot be set off: Dole v. McGraw, 71 M. — June 22, '89.

11. In summary proceedings for possession of land there can be no deduction of offsets: McSloy v. Ryan, 27 M. 110.

III. WHAT DEMANDS MAY BE SET OFF.

(a) In general.

12. Nothing can be set off unless it could be sued upon; and, on the other hand, any claim coming within the statute can be set off if it could be sued: Wallace v. Finnegan, 14 M. 170.

13. The statutory right of set-off is meant to save the expense of litigation by cross-actions; it does not exist where defendant could not sue at law for the demand he seeks to set off; and it cannot therefore extend to the settlement of accounts between partners: Gardiner v. Fargo, 58 M. 72.

14. Where a partnership contained more than two members and one has died, and there is nothing to show that all the rest together stood as one partner only, a balance in the partnership affairs in favor of the decedent cannot in an action at law be set off against a claim against his estate brought by the survivors: Elder's Appeal, 89 M. 474.

15. One who has sold stock and leased a store to a firm, and has then taken a partnership interest in the business, can offset the amount due him on such sale and lease in an action brought against him by the firm, and need not leave it to a partnership accounting already pending: Kinney v. Robinson, 59 M. 389.

16. One partner paid firm debts from his private funds at the other's request on the latter's promise to repay half the amount, with interest. Held that, after the dissolution of the firm, he could offset so much against an independent claim for which his former partner sued him at law; and he could do this though a suit in chancery was pending for a partnership accounting: Cilley v. Van Patten, 58 M. 404.

17. A claim secured by collaterals may be offset as well as any other, if there are no stipulations to the contrary: Willard v. Fralick, 81 M. 481. Nor can defendant be required to deliver up the collateral securities as a condition to his demand being received as set-off: Wallace v. Finnegan, 14 M. 170.

18. Logs were sold to be taken in the stream, but the vendor insisted that the purchasers gather them in their boom for scaling and the latter assented. Held, that the purchasers could not, on so doing, claim a set-off as for services rendered; such a claim is not one arising on contract: Woods v. Ayres, 89 M. 845.

19. Money voluntarily paid upon a debt is not a ground of set-off in an action by the creditor — such payments should be shown under the general issue: Brennan v. Tietzort, 49 M. 897. So, where one allowed judgment to go by default for the full amount of a debt whereon he had made payments, he could not set off such payments in a subsequent action brought by an assignee of the judgment: Huntoon v. Russell, 41 M. 816.

20. Plaintiffs' due-bills payable in lumber at their yard are not admissible, either as set-off or as payment, in an action for the purchase price of lumber bought by defendant on the terms of a cash purchase, and including something additional for delivery at a distance from the yard, where the purchase was made without reference to such bills, and without notice to plaintiffs that defendant held them, and before any demand had been made for lumber on them: Williams v. Jackson, 81 M. 485.

21. Where the plaintiff in assumpsit had received certain merchandise from the defendant under a stipulation that if he sold any of it he should allow the defendant certain rates of commission, it was held that the defendant was entitled to set off against the plaintiff at these rates whatever sums the latter had received under this arrangement: Josselyn v. Bishop, 25 M. 897.

22. Money paid in advance for goods which not only do not correspond with the contract but are worthless may be recovered back or treated as set-off, with no other notice to the dealer that the goods are held subject to the latter's order than is implied in notice of the facts: Petersen v. Door, Sash, etc. Co., 51 M. 86.

23. A claim for personalty received by plaintiff while acting as defendant's guardian, but not accounted for by him, is proper set-off in an action on a note, being for goods sold or for money had and received: Powell v. Powell, 52 M. 432.

24. Where part of the consideration for a transfer of land was the settlement of claims outstanding against the grantor, the transferee could not, in an action against him for the money consideration, set off the amount of such claims settled by him before the transfer: Stanley v. Nye, 54 M. 278.

25. In an action by a pension agent to recover further extra pay the pensioner may set off and recover judgment for an amount already paid under an agreement void as contrary to public policy: Hall v. Kimmer, 61 M. 269.

That money paid for liquor sold in violation of the prohibitory law may be set off against a valid debt to the vendors, see INTOXICATING LIQUORS, § 80.

26. An attorney sued for his client's share of a judgment that he had agreed to collect for a certain compensation if he collected it without any compromise, but which it appears was compromised by another person who had an assignment of it, may prove as set-off the value of his services and disbursements in attempting to collect the judgment: Dustin v. Radford, 57 M. 163.

27. A pound-master sued by a city for fees which under the ordinance he should have paid over to the city treasurer for the general fund may set off a claim for highway labor audited in his favor and payable out of the highway fund, it appearing that there is money in the latter fund: Eaton Rapids v. Houpt, 63 M. 371. (This case cites McBrien v. Grand Rapids, 56 M. 95, as deciding that where plaintiff sues on a contract with a city for building a sewer, and is to be paid out of a special fund created for the purpose, the city can set off against him a claim for water used, which claim, when collected, is payable into the general fund; but only two of the four justices passed upon this point in the case in 56 M.)

As to set-off of rent of house occupied by mining superintendent, see CUSTOM AND USAGE, § 29.

As to compensation for improvements by way of set-off, see EJECTMENT, § 234.

(b) Liquidated and unliquidated claims.

28. Damages for failure to collect a note are not liquidated, and therefore cannot be set off under the general statute: Mitchell v. Shuert, 16 M. 444.

29. The same is true of the damages for a bailee's misuse or neglect of property: Brazee v. Bryant, 50 M. 136. And of an unliquidated claim for breach of covenant: Hunt v. Middlesworth, 44 M. 448.

30. A claim for rent and for pasturing a horse cannot be set off where the amount has not been agreed upon or fixed in any way by the parties: Carter v. Joseph, 48 M. 615.

31. A claim based upon an unliquidated liability to a third party arising from plaintiff's failure to keep the river clear of logs cannot be set off in an action for services in driving logs: Shaw v. Bradley, 59 M. 199.

32. A claim for money had and received is not one for unliquidated damages, as its amount is always ascertainable; such a claim may therefore be set off: Powell v. Powell, 52 M. 432.

33. Money had and received is a proper basis of set-off. So held where plaintiff was to collect royalty on manufactures, the profits of which both parties were to share, and returned an item of royalty actually collected, so that defendant was compelled to advance the amount to the patentee: Harrison Wire Co. v. Moore, 55 M. 610.

34. An unliquidated claim may be set off against a creditor's claim against an estate; the general statute of set-off (H. S. §§ 7365-7370) applies to actions only, and does not limit H. S. § 5896 in regard to allowance by commissioners on decedents' estates of off-sets against claims: Willard v. Fralick, 31 M. 481.

35. Claims must be mutual or there can be no set-off; so held where an independent claim of one copartner against the firm was sought to be applied on the amount due from him to the firm in a suit in equity for an accounting: Kinney v. Tabor, 62 M. 517.

36. Where one held several negotiable notes as agent of another, and the debtor in paying one made an overpayment, which was paid over to the principal, and the agent afterwards in good faith purchased another of the notes before it came due, held, that the debtor was not entitled to set off such overpayment against this note: Granger v. Hathaway, 17 M. 500.

37. In an action by a foreign executor in his individual name upon a claim belonging to his decedent's estate, defendant may set off a claim due him from such estate: Knapp v. Lee, 42 M. 41.

That offsets allowable against claims against estate are confined to claims that belong to decedent, see ESTATES OF DECEDENTS, § 177.

38. There can be no set-off between claims where the debtor on one side is not the real or nominal creditor on the other. So held where a married woman is defendant with her husband to a foreclosure upon a mortgage given by them upon his individual debt; a debt of suretyship by which the complainant with others was liable to her cannot be set off against the mortgage: Hendricks v. Toole, 29 M. 340.

39. A debt due a person individually cannot be set off against a debt due from him as trustee; so, where money was placed by a corporation in the hands of its general manager, as trustee, for safe-keeping, and to be paid out in the ordinary course of its business, such trustee cannot offset a debt due to him by the corporation against the moneys in his hands after a voluntary assignment by the corporation for the benefit of its creditors: First National Bank v. Barnum Wire Works, 58 M. 124.

40. Land was conveyed to a railroad company by deed containing a covenant against encumbrances. The railroad afterwards passed into the hands of trustees. A mortgage which was upon the lands so purchased by the railroad company was foreclosed, and the trustees bid in the land, not as trustees, but in their own right. It was held that this could not be regarded as a payment, so as to authorize the trustees to set off the amount of their bid against a mortgage given by the railroad company for the purchase price of the land when they bought: Griggs v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 10 M. 117.

41. A claim of one partner in a suit against the other upon a contract, where the amount due is agreed upon, and which is in no way connected with the partnership affairs, cannot be subjected to a set-off in favor of the other partner arising out of the partnership dealings before there has been an accounting and a balance found due to the other after the liquidation of all the indebtedness of the firm: Randall v. Baird, 66 M. 312.

(d) Joint and separate debts.

42. Joint defendants can set off only such demands as are due to all of them jointly. So, under H. S. § 7365, subd. 6; as to justices' courts, see H. S. § 6384, subd. 11: Van Middleworth v. Van Middleworth, 33 M. 183; Robbins v. Brooks, 42 M. 62.

43. In a suit against partners they cannot set off claims due to them individually: Sager v. Tupper, 38 M. 258.

44. A claim against only one of several plaintiffs cannot be set off against a demand sued on by all: Fyfield v. Edwards, 39 M. 264.

45. A joint indebtedness cannot be set off in a suit brought by only one of the debtors: Detroit, H. & S. W. R. R. Co. v. Smith, 50 M. 112.

A joint judgment and a sole one cannot be offset, see JUDGMENTS, § 258.

46. Where one of two joint defendants dies and the suit is continued against the other, he may set off against the plaintiff's demand a debt due to himself individually: Newberry v. Trowbridge, 13 M. 263.

47. A joint and several note may be set off against a claim by one of the makers: Ferguson v. Millikin, 42 M. 441.

(e) In cases of assignment.

48. Where the assignees of a bank brought suit upon a promissory note, but sold it pending the suit, and the suit was afterwards continued for the benefit of the purchaser, it was held that the note was subject to any offset which could have been made to it in an action by the bank itself: Newberry v. Trowbridge, 13 M. 263.

49. A purchaser of a judgment takes it subject to any set-offs existing in favor of the judgment debtor up to the time he has notice of the assignment: Finn v. Corbitt, 36 M. 318.

50. A defendant is entitled to offset any demands purchased by him before notice of the assignment by plaintiff of his demand, and it is immaterial that they are purchased for very much less than the sums due upon them: Smith v. Warner, 16 M. 390.

51. An assigned claim cannot be offset by a demand that had not matured at the time the assignment was made: Kull v. Thompson, 38 M. 685.

52. Damages for the failure to complete performance under a contract cannot be set off against a recovery by an assignee of the contractor's right of action for the work actually done, but must be sued for in an action against the contractor himself. And if the assignee sues upon two contracts, an excess of damages on one cannot be set off against his recovery on the other: Howell v. Medler, 41 M. 641.

53. The legal title to an assigned claim vests in the assignee, and the assignor cannot, without a reconveyance, use it as a set-off in a suit brought against him by the debtor: Lunge v. Perley, 47 M. 852.

54. To authorize a set-off as against an assignee's rights the debt must have existed as a mutual credit at the time of the assignment thereof: Lockwood v. Beckwith, 6 M. 168; Kinney v. Tabor, 62 M. 517.

55. If a claim belonged, when suit was commenced, to the party seeking to set it off, a subsequent assignment or sale will not bar the right of set-off: Kinney v. Tabor, 62 M. 517.

IV. EQUITABLE SET-OFF.

As to set-off in chancery of judgments and executions, see JUDGMENTS, §§ 254, 258, 259.

56. Upon ordinary debts the rules of set-off at law and in equity are alike: Hendricks v. Toole, 29 M. 340. And set-off may be allowed in equity where it would be allowed at law: First National Bank v. Barnum Wire Works, 58 M. 124.

57. A party seeking to make a set-off in equity beyond that given by the statute must show affirmatively the existence of all the facts necessary to raise the equity: Lockwood v. Beckwith, 6 M. 168.

58. Equity will not allow a set-off where the law would not, unless there be special equities growing out of the transaction itself requiring it: Ibid.

59. The mere existence of cross-demands is no ground for awarding an equitable set-off: Ibid.; Kinney v. Tabor, 62 M. 517.

60. Where a partnership became insolvent and made a general assignment for the benefit of creditors, including therein a note past due, and the maker of the note held the acceptance of the partnership not then due, it was held that the insolvency of the acceptors was not, of itself, sufficient to authorize a set-off in equity of the acceptance against the note in the hands of the assignee, in the absence of evidence that the acceptance was based upon the note, or that the maker of the note trusted to it at the time as a means of discharging his obligation: Lockwood v. Beckwith, 6 M. 168.

61. The insolvency of one party, in the case of mutual credits, is not of itself sufficient to authorize an equitable set-off: Hale v. Holmes, 8 M. 87; Kinney v. Tabor, 62 M. 517.

62. Equity cannot compel a vendor to receive his own paper on the contract of sale when he has not agreed to do so, and the purchaser has not bound himself to take and pay for the property. It is not a case of set-off, inasmuch as there is no contract on the part of the purchaser against which to allow the paper: Hale v. Holmes, 8 M. 87.

63. A bill to have a set-off allowed against a decree in equity cannot be sustained unless the party seeking to obtain the set-off is the real owner and has the control of the counter-claim, so that the creditor who sues him is his debtor as to the claim offered in reduction. So held where stockholders in an insolvent plank-road company, against whom decree had been rendered for debts of the company, sought to set off against the decree demands in favor of the company: McGraw v. Pettibone, 10 M. 580.

64. On foreclosure of a mortgage given to secure indorsements not connected with partnership dealings, an accounting as to partnership matters between the parties cannot be had to raise a counter-claim when no special equities are set up entitling defendants to the benefit of an equitable set-off: Hess v. Final, 53 M. 515.

65. A mortgage was given by an attorney to a partnership to secure a balance on mutual advances and accommodation indorsements. The attorney, while the dealings continued, performed professional services for the firm and also for individual members thereof. Held, that his charges for the former were equitable set-off to the mortgage, while those for the latter were not: Brackett v. Sears, 15 M. 244.

66. Three persons who had held land in partnership sold it, and gave separate conveyances to the purchaser, who, in pursuance of an arrangement to that effect, gave back a mortgage for the purchase price to one of them. The purchaser afterwards bought up a mortgage given by one of them on an undivided one-third of the land, and sought to make a set-off of this in a suit to foreclose his own mortgage. But the set-off was refused, the court holding that claims under that mortgage could be better litigated in a separate suit; and the decree was so framed as to leave that mortgage untouched: Adams v. Bradley, 12 M. 846.

67. Where land which was under lease for a term was sold, and a mortgage taken back for the purchase price, and it was agreed between the parties that during the leasehold term the mortgagee should pay to the mortgagers the interest on the purchase price, held, that on a foreclosure of the mortgage the amount of this interest should be deducted from the amount due on the mortgage, and a sale be decreed for the balance only: Jones v. Disbrow, H. 102.

68. One who receives a conveyance of lands with covenant against encumbrances and gives back a mortgage for the purchase price is not confined to his remedy upon the covenant, but may set off the amount of a prior mortgage which he has paid against his own mortgage when suit is brought to foreclose the latter: Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Griggs, 12 M. 45.

69. But he cannot, in such suit, set off the amount of prior encumbrances which he has neither paid nor shows that he has been or is in danger of being damnified by: Griggs v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 10 M. 117.

70. He does not show that he is damnified by setting up the foreclosure in chancery of an encumbrance and the sale of the mortgaged premises, but without alleging that he was a party to the suit or in any way bound thereby: Ibid.

71. In the foreclosure of a mortgage given for the purchase price of land, the defendant sought to set off certain encumbrances which were a lien on the land when he bought, and the relief was denied because he had not paid off the encumbrances, and he paid them off after decree; it was held that he might then file a bill to have the set-off allowed: Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Griggs, 12 M. 45.

72. Where a grantee with warranty who has given a purchase-money mortgage claims, on foreclosure, deduction of the amount of a valid subsisting prior mortgage, such equitable set-off must be clearly proved and the amount to be deducted must be certain: Smith v. Fitts, 37 M. 148.

73. Where a mortgage is assigned reserving to the mortgagee a residuary interest, and dealings continue between the mortgager and mortgagee afterwards, and the nature of the dealings and the state of the accounts were such as to show that the dealings were dependent on the mortgage, held, that the accounts of the mortgager subsequent to the assignment might be set off against the mortgagee's residuary interest: Brackett v. Sears, 15 M. 244.

74. A mortgage debt which has fully matured was offset by a claim which the mortgager had against the mortgagee. The latter assigned his mortgage and went into bankruptcy, and the mortgager proved his claim and drew his dividends from the bankrupt's estate. Held, that he was not thereby precluded from offsetting so much of his claim as was not met by the dividends against the mortgage held by the assignee, and that he could maintain a bill against the assignee to compel him to apply the amount in cancellation of the mortgage: McKenna v. Kirkwood, 50 M. 544.

75. Upon a bill to redeem chattels mortgaged by the complainant to the defendant, and under evidence tending to show an understanding that a claim of the complainant against the defendant should be turned in on the mortgage debt, and this claim was submitted to arbitration, the award thereon in complainant's favor constitutes a valid equitable offset to the mortgage: Flanders v. Chamberlain, 24 M. 305.

76. A set-off against a judgment cannot be made in equity of demands which might have been proved in reduction of plaintiff's claim in the former suit: McGraw v. Pettibone, 10 M. 530.

77. Where advances made by parties who have no equities are counterbalanced by profits received they will not be considered: Austin v. Dean, 40 M. 886.

78. An undetermined suit to establish an equitable set-off cannot affect the right to set off an execution; nor does the refusal of a motion to compel sheriff to set off an execution bar relief in equity: Lyon v. Smith, 66 M. 676.

V. PLEADING AND EVIDENCE.

79. The object of a plea or notice of set-off is to enable defendant to set up any independent cause of action which he has against plaintiff and might otherwise sue upon as a counter-claim, and obtain its allowance in the case in which it is pleaded: Brennan v. Tietz, 49 M. 397.

80. A notice of set-off in terms as broad as the common money counts in assumpsit will, if no bill of particulars is called for, cover anything that could be proved as a demand under such counts; such as a joint and several note signed by the plaintiff: Ferguson v. Milikin, 42 M. 441.

81. In an action on a promissory note given for the balance on a struck account, a counter-claim that has not been settled cannot be proved under notice of set-off without being set out in a bill of particulars: Graham v. Chubb, 39 M. 417.

82. Where a plea to a declaration for items of an account is accompanied by a sworn statement of set-off it cannot be objected that there is no notice of set-off: Kinney v. Robison, 52 M. 389.

83. It seems that an affidavit verifying an account pleaded in set-off which states that the "annexed account is just, due and unpaid" is a substantial compliance with H. S.

§ 7525, which requires such affidavit to show that the account "is justly owing and due:" Lamb v. McGowan, 66 M. 615.

84. Whether service of copy of such account and affidavit was not waived where plaintiff in justice's court was present, making no objection, when the account and affidavit were filed, and where he moved an adjournment, quere; court equally divided: Ibid.

85. Plea and notice of set-off superseded by subsequent plea puis darrein: Whittemore v. Stephens, 48 M. 578.

86. Where notice of set-off was withdrawn it was not error to exclude the testimony it would have covered: Donovan v. Halsey Fire-Engine Co., 58 M. 38.

87. The burden of proving set-offs is always on defendant, and does not fall on plaintiff even where the suit is on an obligation that has been received in consideration of the renewal of the set-offs: Mitchell v. Wells, 54 M. 127.

88. Declaration upon special contract and on common counts; evidence tending to establish both; error in rejecting defendant's offer to show set-off held not cured by plaintiff's withdrawing all evidence under common counts: Kelly v. McKenna, 18 M. 381.

89. A. bought out B.'s interest as partner in a brewery, and gave his notes in payment, agreeing to assume and pay B.'s share of the debts of the firm and to indemnify him against all liability. It was further agreed that if A. paid the debts beyond what appeared on a certain schedule that he should be entitled to a corresponding deduction on the notes. B. brought an action against A. upon one of the notes, to which he pleaded the general issue with notice of set-off. Held that, under this plea of set-off, A. might introduce parol evidence to show that he paid claims in excess of the schedule list, and that such payment was a legitimate ground of set-off: Bowker v. Johnson, 17 M. 42.

90. Where a claim was brought against an estate for the value of services rendered to decedent, the estate could give evidence, in offset, of contributions by decedent to the support not only of himself but of claimant; and such proofs could not be excluded on the ground that they were not specific as to particulars: Ludlow v. Pearl's Estate, 55 M. 312.

VI. PRACTICE.

91. Act 123 of 1885 provides that when defendant has given notice of set-off plaintiff shall not be allowed to discontinue his suit or submit to a nonsuit without defendant's consent. Whether before the statute he could be allowed to do so, quere; court equally divided: Merchants' Bank v. Schulenberg, 54 M. 49.

92. In an employee's action for salary an act of misconduct should be proved by itself by way of set-off, instead of being brought out on cross-examination: Bolt v. Friederick, 56 M. 20.

93. Set-offs to claims against a decedent's estate should be presented on the hearing before the commissioners, and cannot be withdrawn: Green v. Eaton Probate Judge, 40 M. 244.

VII. JUDGMENT; COSTS.

94. The judgment is statutory: Ward v. Fellers, 8 M. 281.

95. Defendant (in suits brought in the circuit court) is entitled to judgment upon any surplus of his claims beyond plaintiff's: M'Hardy v. Wadsworth, 8 M. 349.

96. Where a case has been tried before a justice and judgment rendered for defendant for the excess of his set-off above plaintiff's demand, and plaintiff, having appealed, fails to appear and bring the cause to trial in the circuit court, defendant cannot have the cause tried in the circuit, and can take in the circuit a judgment only of nonsuit or of discontinuance; he cannot have a judgment for his set-off: Stange v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 22 M. 408.

97. On appeal from a justice's judgment rendered under H. S. § 6887 (where balance of set-off exceeds $300), the circuit court can render no other or different form of judgment than the justice could have done; nor can the supreme court: Cross v. Eaton, 48 M. 184.

98. If set-off reduces plaintiff's recovery in suit brought in the circuit below $100 he should still have costs: Wheeler v. Harrison, 28 M. 264; Davis v. Freeman, 10 M. 188.

99. But a payment made before suit and applied in reduction of a demand is not a set-off so as to give costs to plaintiff who in consequence recovers less than $100: Mandigo v. Mandigo, 26 M. 349.

100. So held even though the amount to be applied in payment is disputed; as where a debtor delivered a horse to his creditor to sell and apply proceeds on debt, and where the creditor exchanges the horse for other property, the transaction amounted to a payment, not a basis of set-off: Strong v. Kennedy, 40 M. 327.

101. Where an understanding between the parties that articles furnished in mutual dealings should be applied reciprocally in part payment, etc., but where no account had been rendered or balance struck, the court was held justified in treating the case, so far as costs were concerned, as one of set-off rather than of payment: Wheeler v. Harrison, 28 M. 264.

102. Held, in a particular case, that there was no basis in the record for plaintiff's claim that he had established a demand above $100 which had been reduced below that sum by set-off: Carter v. Snyder, 27 M. 484.

(a) In general; jurisdiction.

(c) Appeals.

As to admiralty jurisdiction, see ADMIRALTY.

As to insurance of vessel and abandonment to underwriters, see INSURANCE, §§ 248-252, 297, 362.

Taxation of vessels, see TAXES, §§ 107, 108.

I. PUBLIC REGULATIONS.

1. It is negligence to disregard the positive regulation that vessels moving at night shall exhibit lights, even though the practice may have been otherwise: Billings v. Breinig, 45 M. 65.

2. A general custom of navigation — as, for example, for vessels to pass each other to the left — may be proved by the testimony of persons skilled in navigation. Such custom is a part of the law of the land; and a departure from it occasioning collision will render the party liable, unless the other party, by reasonable effort, might have prevented it; and each party should act upon the presumption that the other party will adhere to the custom: Drew v. The Chesapeake, 2 D. 83.

3. The rights and duties of navigators cannot be made by legislation or ordinance to depend on the will or discretion of any officer. The regulations of navigation to be enforced by a harbor-master must be such as are valid and binding on all persons, and if he interferes forcibly he must justify his action by the facts. He cannot interfere with navigators unless they are in fact violating their duty: Horn v. People, 26 M. 231.

4. A complaint is not valid which merely shows that a party has refused to obey the orders of a harbor-master; it must show such conduct as is a violation of the rights of navigation and aver such facts as would justify the orders and render disobedience wrongful: Ibid.

5. The harbor-master of Detroit is, like the other police officers, a purely ministerial officer, and he is confined to the exercise of such duties as may be imposed by valid ordinances for the purpose of "preserving and regulating the navigation of said river." Ibid.

II. OWNERS AND MORTGAGEES.

6. Joint owners of a vessel are bound to pay each his own share of the expense of repairs; and, without clear evidence of a special agreement to the contrary, the law will imply a promise to pay accordingly: Sheehan v. Dalrymple, 19 M. 239.

7. Where one part owner of a vessel had incurred expense for repairs and equipments which involved the procurement of Canada money, the premium necessarily paid in American money to obtain the Canadian funds was a proper charge against the other part owner: Ibid.

8. The interest of the managing owner of a vessel entitles him to act for himself in obtaining bail for its release from detention, and the bail cannot hold co-owners personally liable for the security without showing that they were parties to the transaction: Mitchell v. Chambers, 43 M. 150.

9. The several part owners of a vessel are usually co-tenants, not partners, and will not be regarded as partners unless it distinctly appears that they are so: Ibid.

10. Co-owners of a vessel are not personally liable on claims incurred by it before they acquire their interest: Ibid.

11. Where paper payable to the order of a firm engaged in running a vessel is received in the ordinary course of the business, indorsement thereof in the firm name by one partner binds the rest, and inquiries as to the powers and duties of the vessel's managing owner, etc., are immaterial: First National Bank v. Freeman, 47 M. 408.

12. The owners of a vessel deeded it to certain persons as security, with authority to sell it if a good opportunity offered. Held, that the grantees had a right to pay any outstanding claims for supplies which had been properly allowed against the vessel, and the grantors could not complain of their paying any bills for repairs which they had themselves contracted to pay; the grantees could also pay from the earnings of the boat for such repairs as were reasonably necessary for keeping the vessel in good condition while in their hands or for putting it in good condition to sell, or for such as the grantors directed; but they could not be allowed for such expenses as had been made necessary by their own neglect or mismanagement: Fick v. Runnels, 48 M. 302.

13. One who enters a vessel on a ship-broker's books as for sale is responsible for the correctness of the data of description there appearing if they were meant to be relied on and were relied on: Gilchrist v. Manning, 54 M. 210.

14. The federal statute requiring transfers of United States vessels to be recorded in the custom-houses excludes state legislation on the subject, and therefore renders inoperative, as to enrolled vessels, H. S. § 6193, avoiding chattel mortgages not filed: Robinson v. Rice, 8 M. 235.

15. The assignee of a mortgage of a vessel is not deprived of the usual remedies by equities existing between the mortgagors: Dalrymple v. Sheehan, 20 M. 224.

16. Where the whole of a vessel is mortgaged a foreclosure sale should be of the whole; the interests of the mortgagors should not be sold separately: Ibid.

17. The holder of a mortgage on a vessel who had for seven years treated it as worthless, and who permitted a sale to innocent purchasers, was held estopped from asserting his lien: Harkness v. Toulmin, 25 M. 80.

As to priority of record of mortgage of vessel, see RECORDING ACTS, § 59.

III. THE MASTER.

18. The master of a vessel sailing the lakes has no power as such to bind the owner by a subscription for the use of lights on St. Clair flats for the season, when the owner resides at Detroit and has not been consulted: Strong v. Saunders, 15 M. 339.

19. It seems that a ship's husband is not warranted in assuming extraordinary powers without obtaining authority from the owners if they can be readily communicated with, as by telegraph: Mitchell v. Chambers, 48 M. 150.

20. Where a barge laden with lumber lies water-logged at her point of lading, but is not in immediate danger and can be unloaded, her master, the owner being within easy reach of mail or telegraph, has no general authority to contract for towage to the point of destination; and where he did so contract, at a rate eight times the usual one, the owner was held not liable: Botsford v. Plummer, 67 M. 264 (Oct. 20, '87).

21. A ship's husband being also part owner cannot, by mere virtue of such relation, bind the co-owners by obtaining bail for the release of the vessel from seizure under civil process for collection and for repair: Mitchell v. Chambers, 48 M. 150.

22. The assent of vessel-owners to the acts of the ship's husband cannot be implied from their silence except as to such acts as are fairly appropriate to occasions with which he is usually allowed to deal: Ibid.

23. The master of a vessel cannot relieve himself of responsibility for its safe management by surrendering its control to a charterer: Cuddy v. Horn, 46 M. 596.

24. One placed in charge of a vessel laid up in winter under promise of employment as captain should she be placed in commission the coming season, and who employs a person as mate, cannot render the owner liable by inviting such person on board who is then injured because of an open hatchway: Caniff v. Blanchard Nav. Co., 66 M. 638.

25. A master who has been peremptorily discharged by the owner before the expiration of the term for which he was hired can sue as for breach of contract and need not offer to resume command before leaving and suing. He owes no duty to the owner beyond using reasonable diligence to obtain other employment: Jones v. Graham, etc. Transp. Co., 51 M. 539.

26. Common-law courts have cognizance of such action: Ibid.

IV. CHARTER-PARTY; TOWAGE.

27. A charter-party, under which the charterer mans and equips the vessel and assumes the entire control of and responsibility for it during the voyage, is a hiring of the vessel, and the charterer thus assumes pro hac vice all the rights and obligations of owner. And where a vessel so hired was wrecked, the owner was not liable for money borrowed by the vessel-master for paying off the men, saving goods, etc., said loan being made in the interest of the charterer: First National Bank v. Stewart, 26 M. 88.

28. A contract of partnership for the use of a vessel put into a line for carrying passengers and freight, which contract arranges the contribution each party is to make and the share of profits to be received, is not a charter-party, though one of the party furnishes the vessel: Ward v. Thompson, 22 How. (U. S.) 330.

29. Where defendants, being charterers of a vessel, had agreed to tow it in port on its arrival, and the master of the vessel, on arriving, gave notice to their agent in charge of the loading and towing of vessels, and gave no other notice, defendants' office being distant and it being after office hours, and the weather and situation of the vessel requiring the master's presence on board, it was decided that, in the absence of any proof that either of the defendants was at or near the shipping port, such notice was sufficient to put them in default on their agreement, a tug not being furnished: Loud v. Campbell, 26 M. 289.

As to the measure of damages in such cases, see DAMAGES, § 88.

30. In an action to recover the price of towing under an agreement to tow logs and deliver them at a named mill, where the defence is set up that through plaintiff's negligence in fastening a raft outside of the mill boom, instead of delivering the same safely within the mill boom, a storm which arose broke up the raft and carried away some of the logs, a charge to the jury that if, when the plaintiff arrived with the tug and raft, the boom was not in a condition to be entered, and it was apparent that in five or six hours, or some other reasonable time, an entrance would be practicable, it was his duty to remain there for such time, unless, on consultation with those in charge of the boom, his earlier departure was assented to, held, under the circumstances, to be erroneous, in that it attributed to the plaintiff a distinct, separate and imperative duty, and wholly ignored the existence of any concurrent duty of the defendant or those who were to receive for him: Mitchell v. Hosmer, 30 M. 227.

31. An agreement never to tow vessels "in competition with" the other parties to the agreement was held too indefinite to be enforced: Caswell v. Gibbs, 33 M. 381.

V. SEAMEN.

32. The captain of a vessel, supposing that he had a right (under an oral contract with the owner) to buy the vessel on indefinite time payments, employed his son as seaman, telling him to look to the owner and to the vessel itself for payment, and all the seamen but the son were paid from the vessel's earnings. The owner, having sold the vessel to third parties without paying the son's wages, was held liable to him as upon a distinct employment: Bonnah v. McMorran, 64 M. 145.

VI. FREIGHT.

And see CARRIERS, IV, (b).

33. Freight pro rata itineris is due when the ship, by inevitable necessity, is forced into a port short of her destination, and is unable to prosecute her voyage, and the goods are there voluntarily accepted by the owner: Rossiter v. Chester, 1 D. 154.

34. The owner of goods was deemed to have voluntarily accepted them at the intermediate port when, knowing that the voyage had been abandoned, its further prosecution having become impossible or extremely hazardous, he there demanded his goods of the agent of the forwarders, with whom they were stored, tendering payment of their charges for storage, and brought replevin to recover possession on the refusal of such agent to deliver them: Ibid.

VII. GENERAL AVERAGE.

35. The doctrine of general average is known only to the maritime law, and cannot be enforced in a court of common-law jurisdiction; so held in 1848: Rossiter v. Chester, 1 D. 154.

36. But in 1876 it was held that, where a loss occurs which gives rise to the principles of general average, and the goods which have been saved by the sacrifice of other property have been delivered to the owner, a promise is implied on his part to contribute to the loss sustained by others for his benefit, and such promise is enforceable in a common-law court: Backus v. Coyne, 35 M. 5.

37. Though there may be cases where, on account of the number of parties interested, difficulty might arise that would render chancery the more convenient tribunal: Ibid.

38. The steamer Missouri, being a new and seaworthy boat, and having on board passengers and a cargo of goods, on a voyage from Buffalo to Chicago encountered a very severe gale on Lake Huron. She was in great danger of perishing from the violence of the winds and the roughness of the waves. After long struggling with the tempest the master and crew agreed that it was necessary to lighten her in order to save her with the freight and passengers. Accordingly a quantity of goods were, for that purpose, thrown overboard by the crew. The boat was saved, though much injured, and returned to Detroit with the residue of her cargo. Held, that these facts would constitute a proper case, under the maritime law, for general average: Rossiter v. Chester, 1 D. 154.

39. Goods lightered away from a grounded vessel in order to save the rest of the cargo are not liable to contribute to the expense incurred in doing so: Backus v. Coyne, 45 M. 584.

40. The sum for which a vessel is sold on execution must be accepted as its true value in a suit for contribution on a claim for general average, unless the claimant had caused it to be sold for less than its value: Ibid.

41. An adjustment consented to by one partner was held not to present a case of apportionment only, from items agreed upon, according to the usual law and custom of general average, but one rather of arbitration and award, and beyond a partner's power: Backus v. Coyne, 35 M. 5.

VIII. LIABILITY FOR TORTS; JURISDICTION; LIMITED LIABILITY.

Passenger justified in following officers' directions in embarking, see CARRIERS, § 132.

42. In cases of collision of vessels the burden of proof is on plaintiff not only to show negligence on defendant's part but ordinary care on his own: Drew v. The Chesapeake, 2 D. 33.

As to custom of passing to left, see supra, § 2.

43. Passengers on a steam-yacht chartered for their use, but not under their control in matters of navigation, have a right of action against its owners for injuries caused them by the negligent management of those in charge of it: Cuddy v. Horn, 46 M. 596.

44. If a passenger upon one vessel is injured by its collision with another in consequence of the negligence of the officers of both, he has a right of action against them jointly, and it is for the jury to fix the liability where it belongs: Ibid.

45. An injury caused by a vessel's running into a boom that pertains to the adjacent land is not a maritime tort and is not cognizable in admiralty, but may be sued for in the state courts: City of Erie v. Canfield, 27 M. 479.

46. A wire rope was stretched across a river for ferrying purposes, and defendant, knowing the character and position of the ferry, ran his vessel after dark across the ferry track without warning by light or whistle, and thereby caused the death of the ferryman. Held, that the state courts had jurisdiction of an action for such death. Held, also, that defendant was negligent; that the connection of his negligence with the death was for the jury; and that it was for plaintiff to show that decedent was in the exercise of due care, and was not, in part, the producer of what happened: Billings v. Breintig, 45 M. 65.

47. A ship-owner owes no duty to keep the hatchways covered and safe when his vessel is laid up in winter: Caniff v. Blanchard Nav. Co., 66 M. 688.

48. Where a person invited on board by one in charge was familiar with vessels of this class, knew that they had hatchways and that such ways were liable to be open when the vessel was in port, was injured by falling through an open hatchway, he was contributorily negligent and could not recover: Ibid.

49. The act of congress of March 3, 1851, which exempts ship-owners from liability for loss by fire, provides that the act "shall not apply to the owner or owners of any canal-boat, barge or lighter, or to any vessel of any description whatsoever used in rivers or inland navigation." Held, that a steamboat used in navigating the waters of the great lakes from Buffalo to Detroit was not within the exception of the proviso, as she was not used in inland navigation, and that the owner of such steamboat was not liable for goods entrusted to him as a common carrier and burnt with such steamboat without his fault: American Transp. Co. v. Moore, 5 M. 868, 24 How. 1.

50. The limited liability act of congress exempting ship-owners from personal liability for injuries caused by the negligence of those in charge of their vessels does not apply to boats navigating streams connecting the great lakes: Cuddy v. Horn, 46 M. 596; The Mamie, 5 Fed. Rep. 818.

IX. MARITIME LIENS.

51. The nature and incidents of the lien given by the maritime law to the material-man considered and explained: Wight v. Maxwell, 4 M. 45.

52. A lien once acquired by virtue of the maritime law clings to the ship wherever she may go, and is thus distinguished from the common-law lien, which presupposes possession of the thing and which is gone when the possession is relinquished: Ibid.

53. For means or supplies furnished or money advanced in the building, fitting and furnishing a vessel, R. S. 1846, ch. 122, gave no lien. The lien was restricted to work done and materials furnished: Lawson v. Higgins, 1 M. 225.

54. The lien created by R. S. 1846, ch. 122 (C. L. 1857, ch. 149) was confined to contracts made or injuries arising in Michigan: Bidwell v. Whitaker, 1 M. 469; Turner v. Lewis, 2 M. 350.

55. But no distinction was made between citizens of this state and those of other states in the enforcement of claims: Bidwell v. Whitaker, 1 M. 469.

56. If the contract was made in another state, though to be performed in this state, no lien attached under the law of 1846: Turner v. Lewis, 2 M. 350.

57. A specific lien was given by R. S. 1846, ch. 122, on the boat or vessel for all such demands as were mentioned in the first section: Bidwell v. Whitaker, 1 M. 469.

58. Under the act of 1839 for the collection of demands against boats and vessels (S. L. p. 70), a portion of which was incorporated into said R. S. 1846, ch. 122, it was held that no specific lien was given upon the vessel until the actual levy of attachment, and that the remedy by the act was general, and not restricted to causes of action arising within the state: Moses v. The Missouri, 1 M. 507.

59. The act of 1839, p. 70, to provide for the collection of demands against boats and vessels, gave a new and cumulative remedy, but did not give a lien on the vessel itself until taken on the attachment; and the remedy given by that act was not reserved by R. S. 1846, ch. 173, § 2 (which chapter repealed the act), to a party whose proceedings were not instituted under the act before its repeal—such remedy not being a right accrued within the meaning of these words as used in that section: Robinson v. The Red Jacket, 1 M. 171.

X. COLLECTION OF DEMANDS AGAINST VESSELS.

(a) In general; jurisdiction.

60. The boat and vessel law of 1846—C. L. 1857, ch. 149—(repealed in 1864) held unconstitutional as depriving persons of property without due process of law: Parsons v. Russell, 11 M. 113.

61. The nature and incidents of a proceeding in rem, in the sense in which the term is used in the maritime law, explained: Wight v. Maxwell, 4 M. 45.

62. Proceedings under the boat and vessel law of Ohio, which provides for no notice of the proceedings to non-residents, held to have no extra-territorial force, and not to displace the previous lien of creditors in this state: Ibid.

63. To be subject to the water-craft law the res must be a vessel in use or capable of use at the time of seizure, not a wreck incapable of service: Baker v. Casey, 19 M. 220.

64. Where a brig bound for Chicago from a port outside of Michigan broke a boom in passing out of Manistee river, and was proceeded against under the water-craft law, it was held that while that law was meant to give relief where the vessel was at the time navigating the waters of the state, and where no remedy could be had in admiralty, it was not confined to water-craft intended for use only in the waters of this state: City of Erie v. Canfield, 27 M. 479.

65. Under the water-craft law a sheriff can go beyond his bailiwick to serve process on the water, but not away from the water; and he cannot seize or sell property on land not within his county: Baker v. Casey, 19 M. 220.

66. The wilful destruction of an ice-field by running a vessel so near it as to break it up gives a cause of action for damages within the water-craft law: People's Ice Co. v. The Excelsior, 43 M. 386, 44 M. 229.

67. H. S. § 8236 gives a lien on water-craft of over five tons' burden. Held, that proceedings wherein it does not appear that the boat libelled was of more than five tons' burden fail to show a want of jurisdiction, and therefore are no bar to a replevin suit brought by the mortgagees of the boat: Gould v. Jacobson, 58 M. 288.

68. And where it appeared, on appeal, that there was no evidence showing that the vessel had the tonnage essential to a lien, the defect was held jurisdictional and the proceeding was dismissed: Ganoes v. The Jack Robinson, 18 M. 456.

(b) Pleading and practice.

69. The complaint, under the act of 1839, should contain every substantial averment which would be necessary in a declaration at common law for the same cause of action, and it was governed by the rules which apply to declarations in respect to joinder and misjoinder of counts: The Milwaukee v. Hale, 1 D. 806.

70. In this case the complaint contained four counts; two of which were, in substance, that plaintiff shipped on board the vessel, which was employed by the owners as common carriers, a certain quantity of wheat, and, in consideration that the plaintiff promised to pay a certain price for the transportation, the owners of the vessel received the wheat on board, and agreed to proceed directly from the place of shipment to the port of destination, and deliver the same in good order, but, on the contrary the vessel was so carelessly managed, etc., that the wheat was lost, and not delivered. The other two counts set forth a like shipment and undertaking to deliver, etc., pursuing the ordinary route, without unnecessary deviation, etc., and alleged a deviation, during which the ship was assailed by a great storm and wrecked, etc., and the wheat was wet, damaged and spoiled, and wholly lost, etc., and not delivered. Held, that all these counts were in assumpsit, and properly joined: Ibid.

71. In a complaint under R. S. 1846, ch. 122, before an officer authorized to perform the duties of a judge of the supreme court at chambers, it was not necessary to aver that at the time of the application the vessel was in the county where the application was made. But it was otherwise where the application was made to a judge of a court of record: Ward v. Wilson, 8 M. 1.

72. It was not necessary, in order to confer jurisdiction, to set forth that the services, etc., for which the claim was made were rendered in this state: Ibid.

73. A description of the vessel as "a vessel navigating the waters of this state" is equivalent to the averment that such vessel is used in navigating, etc.: Ibid.

74. In proceedings under H. S. §§ 8235-8238 an allegation of the tonnage of the vessel proceeded against is essential to the jurisdiction: Gano v. The Jack Robinson, 18 M. 456. See Gould v. Jacobson, 58 M. 288.

75. Where, under the provisions of ch. 122, R. S. 1846, a vessel was attached at the instance of a creditor, and the notice to creditors to produce their claims was published three months, and at the end of the three months, and before any order of sale, the owner of the vessel procured her discharge by giving the bond required by said chapter, it was held that creditors who had failed to file their demands with the proper officers within the three months lost the benefit of the lien given them by section 1 of said chapter: Watkins v. Atkinson, 2 M. 151.

76. In declaring on a bond executed under § 13 of said chapter, it was not necessary to aver that the plaintiff made the application in writing in manner and form required by §§ 2 and 3: Truesdale v. Hazzard, 2 M. 844.

77. Nor was it necessary to aver that the vessel released upon the execution of the bond was, at the time of its seizure, within the jurisdiction of the court issuing the warrant: Ibid.

78. It was only necessary for the plaintiff to prove the execution of the bond, and his claim or demand as set out in the declaration, to entitle him prima facie to a recovery: Ibid.

79. Under the terms of the present water-craft law the county clerk's approval of the bonds offered on obtaining restitution of a vessel seized for debt is not reviewable by the circuit judge upon affidavits contradicting the evidence on which the bonds were approved: Horn v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 89 M. 15.

(c) Appeals.

80. The jurisdiction of the supreme court under the water-craft law is properly regarded as appellate and not original, although, by H. S. §§ 8272, 8273, a new hearing, upon new testimony if denied, is contemplated: Gano v. The Jack Robinson, 18 M. 456.

81. The filing of an appeal bond within the time prescribed by the statute (see H. S. § 8270) is necessary to give jurisdiction on an appeal under the water-craft law: Canfield v. The City of Erie, 21 M. 160.

82. On an appeal under the water-craft law, the case must be certified by the trial judge, and the supreme court cannot act on a mere transcript of the stenographer's notes of the testimony taken on the trial below: People's Ice Co. v. The Excelsior, 43 M. 836.

83. Proceedings under the water-craft law are special, and differ from proceedings in either law or equity. Such causes are tried like cases at common law, but on appeal are to be tried over again, and the appellate court is not confined to the evidence taken below: Ibid.

84. The practice as to taking testimony in appeal cases explained; and where the appeal was brought under a misapprehension as to the requirements regarding the taking of testimony, additional time for taking testimony was granted: Ibid.

85. The supreme court can modify a decree in these proceedings by including the parties to the bonds: Ibid.

SLANDER.

I. WHAT CONSTITUTES.

- (a) What words actionable.
- (b) Malice.
- (c) Repetition.

II. PROCEDURE.

- (a) Parties.
- (b) Pleadings.
- (c) Evidence.
 - 1. Generally.
 - 2. Evidence in aggravation; repetitions; malice.
 - 3. Evidence in mitigation.
- (d) Instructions.

I. WHAT CONSTITUTES.

1. To say of another "he has sworn to a damned lie, and I will put him through for it if it costs me all I am worth," is actionable per se, as the words imply that the party has forsworn himself under circumstances rendering him punishable: Crone v. Angell, 14 M. 840.

2. But if the proceeding is mentioned in which the false swearing is alleged to have taken place, and it is one in which there is no authority to administer an oath, the bystanders must be supposed cognizant of that fact; and to say of another he swore to a lie in such a proceeding would not be actionable per se: Ibid.

3. To charge one with false swearing and with having been indicted before the grand jury therefor is charging him with the criminal offence of perjury, and is actionable as slander: Brace v. Brink, 38 M. 91.

4. The following words were held actionable per se and presumptively malicious: "For some months back I have missed things from my laundry — gentlemen's wear. Jennie [the plaintiff] has stolen them, and I have come to search your house:" Bell v. Fernald, 71 M. — (July 11, '88).

5. Imputing want of chastity to a woman is actionable per se: Burt v. McBain, 29 M. 260.

6. A charge of burning one's property to defraud insurers is actionable per se whether one is actually insured or not: Fowler v. Gilbert, 38 M. 292.

7. Whether or not an oral slander in words that would be actionable as a libel would be actionable without proof of special damage, quere: Weiss v. Whittemore, 28 M. 866.

(b) Malice.

8. Some degree of malice in defendant is necessary to sustain an action for slander.

This malice is sometimes said to be either express or implied, but in both cases it is actual malice or malice in fact, the difference being only in the mode of proof; and in both cases the burden of making this proof rests upon plaintiff: Huson v. Dale, 19 M. 17.

9. Express malice is shown by some affirmative proof beyond that of the false and slanderous words, while implied malice is that which is naturally inferred as a presumption of fact from the proof of the publication of the false and injurious charge: Ibid.

10. An action for slander to title must be grounded on malice: Walkley v. Bostwick, 49 M. 374.

11. Where the evidence in an action for slander was sufficient to warrant a finding that the defendant had not observed due caution, and had assisted considerably in spreading the injurious report, it was held not error to submit to the jury the question whether there was actual malice in the utterance, even though no actual design to injure was shown: Burt v. McBain, 29 M. 260.

Further as to malice, see infra, II, (c), 2.

12. No one can be justified in repeating a slander unless on such evidence as legitimately tends to establish its truth: Proctor v. Houghtaling, 37 M. 41.

13. The circulation of vile, defamatory or slanderous language concerning another, and especially concerning a woman's chastity, is not excused by a protest at the time of disbelief, or by a showing that those who had heard the slander did not believe it to be true; it is actionable, and the question of the extent of the responsibility is for the jury, and not to be solved by any presumption of harmlessness: Burt v. McBain, 29 M. 260.

As to evidence of repetition, see infra, II, (c), 2.

II. PROCEDURE.

As to costs, see COSTS, § 40.

(a) Parties.

14. A married woman may bring a sole action for slander: Leonard v. Pope, 27 M. 145.

15. A husband may be joined as defendant with his wife in an action for slander committed by her: Burt v. McBain, 29 M. 260.

16. A declaration in slander contained the usual inducement, without the averment of any extrinsic facts or circumstances showing the actionable quality of the words spoken, except that the plaintiff was postmaster at F., and one count charged the defendant with having spoken and published of and concerning the plaintiff as postmaster, etc., that "he did not think Marlatt's resignation or his petition had gone to Washington; he had no doubt they were embezzled at F.;" adding by innuendo ("at the postoffice at F., of which the plaintiff was postmaster, meaning and intending thereby that the plaintiff had delayed and prevented the transmission of the said resignation and petition to the postmaster-general at Washington)," etc. Held, that the count was fatally defective, the words charged to have been spoken and published appearing not to be actionable: Taylor v. Kneeland, 1 D. 67.

17. The words would have become actionable had the inducement of the declaration further averred that the letters or papers referred to were placed in the postoffice at F., or entrusted to the care of the defendant as postmaster at F., or were passed through said postoffice to their place of destination; since the embezzlement by defendant of papers which so came into his possession is made criminal: Ibid.

18. Extrinsic facts or circumstances showing the actionable quality of words not actionable per se must be directly averred in the inducement of the declaration: Ibid.

19. The office of an innuendo is merely to apply the different parts of the charge contained in the words to the different facts before averred in the inducement. Its truth must always appear from precedent averments, and it must be supported by the inducement and colloquium: Ibid.

20. The omission of any averment in a count in slander that the defendant maliciously published the matter alleged is cured by verdict, though it would be fatal on special demurrer: Ibid.

21. Where, in an action for slander, the declaration set forth the slanderous words, averring that they were uttered "of and to the plaintiff," no colloquium was held to be necessary that they were uttered "of and concerning the plaintiff:" Osborn v. Forshee, 22 M. 209.

22. No averment of special damages to show a cause of action is needed where want of chastity has been imputed to a woman. The plaintiff may, without claiming special damages, show that in consequence of the slander she has been excluded from the society in which she had moved, and was affected in mind and health: Burt v. McBain, 29 M. 280.

23. A declaration for slander in charging plaintiff with burning his property to defraud insurers need not aver actual insurance, nor need such insurance be proved: Fowler v. Gilbert, 38 M. 292.

24. A declaration for slander should be demurred to if the averments of the declaration are not formal enough; and if the language, set forth plainly, shows an intention to slander in the way complained of, it will be held sufficient if not demurred to: Ibid.

Where the constitution of an incorporated society makes slander against the society an offence, something analogous to slander at law is meant; and in proceedings against a member by the society therefor the words should be set forth: See CORPORATIONS, § 169.

25. Formerly the notice of special matters to be given in evidence was required to contain all the requisites of a special plea in bar; and where, therefore, to a declaration in slander alleging that defendant charged plaintiff with having sworn falsely, defendant pleaded the general issue, and gave notice that he would prove on the trial "that the plaintiff was guilty of the acts charged on and imputed to him by the defendant in the several conversations in the declaration mentioned, and that if the words were uttered and published as charged in the declaration the defendant had good reason for uttering and publishing, and did it from good motives and for justifiable ends," held, that the notice was fatally defective, especially in omitting any averment that the plaintiff wilfully and deliberately swore falsely: Thompson v. Bowers, 1 D. 321.

26. But under the present system of pleading (see H. S. § 7863, which applies to actions for slander as well as to others) a notice of justification need not contain the substance of a special plea or be good on general demurrer; but it is enough if it briefly states the precise nature of the matter of defence: Cresinger v. Reed, 25 M. 450.

1. Generally.

27. It is not proper, in an action for slander, to prove the utterance of slanderous words by reading to the witness the words as laid in the declaration and by then interrogating him with regard to them; nor is it within the circuit judge's discretion to permit such mode of examination: Osborn v. Forshee, 22 M. 209.

28. The testimony of a witness that he had uttered certain words alleged to be slanderous is so far privileged that it cannot be used as an admission of the slander in an action therefor against himself: Ibid.

29. In an action of slander for words in a letter which contains nothing on its face to show that it is privileged, the burden of proof is on defendant to show that it is so; and where it was a reply to one written to defendant which defendant had not introduced, raising no objection, meanwhile, to plaintiff's failure to call for it, defendant cannot, on the basis of any presumption that his letter was strictly responsive to the other, raise the question of its admissibility unaccompanied by the other by a request to charge that if it was thus strictly responsive and without malice, and written in the ordinary course of business, he is entitled to a verdict: Day v. Backus, 81 M. 241.

30. A count in slander alleging that the defendant uttered and published that the plaintiff, who was postmaster at F., embezzled certain papers, is not supported by proof that he said he had no doubt that the papers were embezzled at F., or he thought that the papers were embezzled at the postoffice at F.: Taylor v. Kneeland, 1 D. 67.

31. Slanderous words, uttered in a conditional or hypothetical statement, will not support an averment of slanderous words laid as a positive and direct assertion: Evarts v. Smith, 19 M. 55.

32. The rule that the use of slanderous words must be proved as alleged in the declaration does not exclude proof of other words not changing their effect: Brown v. Barnes, 39 M. 211.

33. The pecuniary standing of defendant in an action for slander may be shown to prove the influence his word would have in the community; but the jury must be cautioned against allowing such evidence to carry too much weight or in itself to swell the amount of damages: Ibid.

34. In an action for slander it is not competent to ask a witness who has testified to a conversation held with defendant since the suit began what he understood defendant to mean by his remarks. That is a question for the jury: Cresinger v. Reed, 25 M. 450.

35. In an action for slander there is no error in refusing to admit a neighbor's testimony that he never heard it: Brown v. Barnes, 39 M. 211.

36. A witness called to prove the speaking of slanderous words upon which suit was brought was required on cross-examination to state the following remark of the plaintiff's: "God knows if H. [the defendant] beats me in this trial I am going to carry it up higher.

I am going to beat him and I hope I will; then he will have to move out and I take possession of the premises." Held error, for irrelevancy, though it might perhaps have been proper cross-examination of the plaintiff if on the witness stand: Proctor v. Houghtaling, 87 M. 41.

37. In an action for slander in charging plaintiff with being a woman of gross unchastity her character for chastity can only be assailed by testimony of general reputation, and not by proof of particular acts or particular suspicions: Ibid.

38. The plaintiff in an action for slander cannot introduce evidence of his general good character and reputation unless it has been attacked; and this is so even though on cross-examination inquiries have been made of him as to specific facts that may tend to affect his good character: Hitchcock v. Moore, 70 M. 112 (April 27, '88).

39. A slander is admitted to be false if there is no plea of justification, and evidence of its truth is inadmissible. But where such proof was inadvertently admitted, it was held proper to let it be answered: Fowler v. Gilbert, 88 M. 292.

40. In an action for slander in accusing plaintiff of burning defendant's barn, the plea of the general issue does not raise the question whether plaintiff burnt it or not; and evidence of threats by plaintiff that the barn would be burned are not admissible, except to show the bias of plaintiff, or in mitigation of damages, if communicated to defendant before the alleged slanderous words were spoken; nor was it proper for defendant's counsel in arguing the case to the jury to state that such threats showed that plaintiff burned the barn: Hitchcock v. Moore, 70 M. 112.

41. Irrelevant slanders are not admissible in evidence by way of colorable justification: Proctor v. Houghtaling, 87 M. 41.

42. Suit was brought for slander upon a charge that plaintiff had burned his property to defraud insurers. Held, that proof of alleged frauds by him against third persons concerning agreements regarding insurance was inadmissible: Fowler v. Gilbert, 88 M. 292.

2. Evidence in aggravation; repetitions; malice.

43. The plea or notice of justification is not, though unsustained by proof, evidence of malice and an aggravation of the damages: Huson v. Dale, 19 M. 17; Proctor v. Houghtaling, 87 M. 41.

44. In an action for slander, plaintiff, after having proved the words alleged, may give in evidence other slanderous words of like import, with a view to show defendant's malice: Thompson v. Bowers, 1 D. 321.

45. In an action of slander, evidence may be given of repetitions of the same slander to enhance the damages. Such repetitions constitute practically one slander, aggravated by the enlarged circulation; and a judgment in such a case is a bar against any further action for any such repetition open to proof on the trial: Leonard v. Pope, 27 M. 145.

46. In an action for slander it is proper to prove the defendant's admission that she "supposed she had repeated the story:" Burt v. McBain, 29 M. 280.

47. Evidence of the repetition of a slander is admissible in aggravation of damages; so is any evidence of actual malice: Fowler v. Gilbert, 33 M. 292.

48. The rule that repetitions of a slander may be proved to show malice does not limit the evidence to verbatim repetitions, but allows proof of substantially similar slanders likely to make the same impression on the community: Brown v. Barnes, 39 M. 211.

49. Evidence is admissible of charges of the same slanderous nature as those relied on and made to the plaintiff himself, whether alone or in the presence of others: Fowler v. Gilbert, 38 M. 292.

50. A witness to the uttering of slanderous words cannot testify that he had heard the same and similar remarks extending over a period not limited to the time before the slander, and not shown to have led to the defendant's belief in the truth of what he had said: Proctor v. Houghtaling, 37 M. 41.

51. Words spoken by defendant after the commencement of the suit are not admissible in evidence to show malice, unless they expressly refer to those which are the subject-matter of the action, and do not constitute a distinct calumny for which the plaintiff would have a separate right of action: Taylor v. Kneeland, 1 D. 67.

52. In an action of slander it is admissible in proof of malice to show that the defendant had admitted that the charge complained of would not have been started if plaintiff had dealt with him differently: Fowler v. Gilbert, 38 M. 292.

3. Evidence in mitigation.

53. Where there is no justification for slander there may be matters in mitigation, but as these form no absolute defence they are not put in issue; the only issues are publication and justification: Proctor v. Houghtaling, 37 M. 41.

54. Evidence of the truth or tending to prove the truth of the slanderous words is inadmissible under the general issue in mitigation of damages. So also is evidence that the specific facts in which the slander consisted were communicated to defendant by third persons: Thompson v. Bowers, 1 D. 321.

55. To rebut malice and thus to mitigate damages, though not to establish a defence, it is competent to show under the general issue that at the time the words were spoken defendant reasonably believed them to be true. Facts which may tend to establish the truth of the words are not for that reason inadmissible under the general issue. If they tend to rebut malice and are offered for that purpose only, and are not such as might be pleaded in justification, they are admissible. (Disapproving, so far, supra, § 54): Huson v. Dale, 19 M. 17.

56. Evidence offered in mitigation under the general issue must be treated as involving a conclusive admission that the words are not in fact true; but the defendant may show that he believed them to be true, and introduce facts to show the grounds of such belief: Ibid.

57. Defendant may show, under the general issue in mitigation of damages, that previous to the publication of the slanderous words by himself reports to the same effect were in common circulation in the vicinity of plaintiff's residence, and were communicated to defendant: Farr v. Rasco, 9 M. 353.

58. Where a witness for plaintiff in slander had testified to the speaking of the words by defendant, and on cross-examination had stated that she had previously heard the story from others, it is proper, on re-examination, to ask from whom she heard it. If the object was to mitigate damages by showing that defendant had only repeated a common rumor, its prevalence became a proper subject of inquiry, and plaintiff had a right, if possible, to trace it back to defendant: Burt v. McBain, 29 M. 280.

59. In an action of slander, in which plaintiff was an infant suing by her next friend, it was held not error to exclude evidence that, on the trial of a former cause between the same parties on the same subject-matter, the parties came to and executed an understanding that the two defendants should under oath disclaim all belief in the reports, and that this should be considered a satisfaction of the plaintiff's cause of action and the suit should be discontinued; it was not admissible in mitigation of damages, as a retraction or apology, or as proving an accord and satisfaction: Ibid.

60. Where the words are actionable in themselves, and general damages only are claimed, defendant is not entitled to show in mitigation of damages under the general issue that, "during the six years prior to the suit, inveterate feelings of hostility had existed between the plaintiff and the defendant, and that the plaintiff had taken every opportunity to irritate the defendant:" Porter v. Henderson, 11 M. 20.

61. Where the action is for charging plaintiff with perjury, evidence cannot be given by defendant that, on an occasion not appearing to have any connection with the matter in controversy, the plaintiff called him a liar and a perjured wretch: Ibid.

62. Nor, where general damages only are claimed, is evidence admissible in mitigation of damages that plaintiff has stated the slander did him no damage: Ibid.

63. Defendant cannot give evidence under the general issue of a threat by the plaintiff "that he would ruin and drive him out of town;" which threat came to the knowledge of the defendant previous to the speaking of the words alleged to be slanderous: Moyer v. Pine, 4 M. 409.

64. Common reports in circulation in regard to the plaintiff's being suspected, previous to the speaking of slanderous words, of having committed the crime imputed to him, cannot be given for the purpose of contradicting the statement in the declaration that he had not been suspected, until the speaking of the words, of being guilty of the offence charged: Ibid.

65. A slanderous remark that is not proved must be held false, and the party guilty of it cannot rely in mitigation upon facts that had nothing to do with his belief when he uttered it: Proctor v. Houghtaling, 37 M. 41.

66. Where the words were "he stole my horse," held, that defendant might give evidence in mitigation of his belief in the charge, though the horse referred to belonged not to defendant but to his wife: Huson v. Dale, 19 M. 17.

67. In an action for slander, in stating that plaintiff stole defendant's horse, it is inadmissible to introduce the record of a criminal complaint made against plaintiff and others by defendant's wife for stealing the horse which was described in the complaint as her property, and the proceedings under the same, showing that plaintiff, with the other parties charged with the offence, was discharged on the evidence given for the people. Such record could have no tendency to rebut malice or to mitigate damages: Ibid.

68. In an action for slander in imputing want of chastity to plaintiff (a young woman), instructions were held not objectionable as assuming facts not proved, in speaking of plaintiff as a sensitive girl, who had suffered in consequence of the slander, and in calling attention to the relative situation of the parties, etc.: Burt v. McBain, 29 M. 260.

69. It is not error to submit to the jury the question whether there was actual malice in the utterance of slander, where the evidence is sufficient to warrant a finding that due caution has not been observed by defendant, and that she has assisted considerably in spreading the injurious report, even though no actual design to injure is shown: Ibid.

II. PLEADING AND PRACTICE.

(b) Pleadings.

(c) Decrees.

I. WHEN GRANTED OR REFUSED.

(a) In general.

1. Courts of equity do not as a matter of course decree specific performance of contracts, but exercise a sound discretion in view of all the facts of the case, which discretion is judicial, not arbitrary: McMurtrie v. Bennette, H. 124; Weed v. Terry, 2 D. 344; Smith

v. Lawrence, 15 M. 499; Rust v. Conrad, 47 M. 449.

2. Specific performance, even of a binding contract, is not a matter of right: Chambers v. Livermore, 15 M. 381.

3. Specific performance is not always a matter of absolute right, and he who insists on it must make out a complete equity: Chapman v. Morgan, 55 M. 124.

4. On a contract for the construction of a vessel and the conveyance of one-half thereof, a specific unvalued chattel was paid in advance, and the peculiar provisions of the contract were such that specific performance would remedy a breach more adequately than damages. Held, that performance might be decreed: Peer v. Kean, 14 M. 354.

5. B. contracted to buy lands of H. and to sell the same to M., whom he put in possession. While there was still something due B. from M., H., instead of conveying the land to b., conveyed it to M., who was irresponsible. Held, that B., who was thus deprived of his security for ultimate payment from M., had an equitable right to require of M. a conveyance to himself (B.) in specific performance of the contract made with him (B.) by H.; such conveyance would simply place the parties where, by their contracts, they had agreed to place themselves; and as B. had a right to insist that he be allowed to retain the specific security he contracted for, and that he be not turned over to the contingencies of successive suits at law after his demand had matured, the remedy in equity was alone adequate: Bird v. Hall, 80 M. 374.

6. That the contract fixes a penalty for non-performance is no objection to specific performance: Daily v. Litchfield, 10 M. 29.

7. Specific performance cannot be granted where a son who had orally agreed to support his parents in consideration of his being entitled to a conveyance from them of whatever estate he might acquire out of the farm profits beyond what they owned at the time, had all such property as he purchased from time to time, and so had under his control, conveyed to his mother, who would not reconvey to him when he asked her to: Bumpus v. Bumpus, 53 M. 346.

8. Where both parties to a bill for specific performance proceeded without objection upon a hypothesis that would make a subsequent deed given by the vendor to his co-defendants a cloud upon the title, the supreme court, though holding such deed of no force, and that complainants' remedy at law was ample, affirmed a decree requiring defendants to release to complainants, but without costs to either party: Raymond v. Shawboose, 34 M. 142.

9. A mere agreement to arbitrate cannot be enforced specifically: McGunn v. Hanlin, 29 M. 476.

10. Where defendant in a bill for specific performance has a claim for managing the property, this may be compensated by proper allowance; and this course should be followed rather than to defeat the bill, especially in a case where the compensation is to be retained, and not to be paid over by complainant: Hunt v. Thorn, 2 M. 213.

11. The vendee in a land contract cannot be compelled, by a bill for specific performance, to accept a doubtful title, and no agreement can be enforced that would require such acceptance unless specially bargained for: Powell v. Conant, 33 M. 396.

12. If the vendor can make title to an undivided interest only in lands agreed to be conveyed, the purchaser may pay a proportionate part and have specific performance to that extent, unless there are peculiar equitable reasons to the contrary: Covell v. Cole, 16 M. 223.

(b) Matters relating to the contract.

1. Illegality or impracticability.

13. A court of equity will not decree a specific performance of an illegal contract: Quirk v. Thomas, 6 M. 76, 93, 109.

14. A contract of purchase by a bank in violation of its charter will not be enforced in its favor: Bank of Michigan v. Niles, W. 99, 1 D. 401.

15. Equity will not decree the specific execution of a written contract for the sale of land made by a special agent who has exceeded his authority: Chamberlin v. Darragh, W. 149.

16. And where the agent acted for his trustee in selling the land, and the bill charged that the contract was made by him as agent for the trustee, it was held that he could not be required to convey his equitable interest as cestui que trust, notwithstanding the contract did not on its face disclose the agency: Ibid.

17. If a case is one in which either the provisions of the contract or the law would permit to a party the option to nullify a decree for specific performance, should one be granted, the court will not do a vain thing by granting one: Rust v. Conrad, 47 M. 449.

18. Where, therefore, a contract for a lease contained a provision that the lease, when given, might at any time be terminated by the lessees, either as to the whole of the land or a part thereof, on giving thirty days' notice, held, that this option is a conclusive answer to a bill by those who would be lessees for the specific performance of the contract: Ibid.

19. Specific performance of an expired lease may be granted where the parties may have rights requiring its determination: Switzer v. Gardner, 41 M. 164.

20. Where an agreement to enter into a partnership is silent as to the duration thereof, it will not be specifically enforced, since such a partnership might be dissolved at the will of either partner as soon as formed: Buck v. Smith, 29 M. 166.

21. Courts of equity cannot assume to specifically enforce an agreement to enter into a copartnership, and, as a member of the firm, to exercise for it personal skill and judgment in the control and management according to the shifting needs of property and business; they will not, therefore, enforce the other side of such a contract: Ibid.

22. A decree for specific performance is impracticable where the contract is for the support of a parent in consideration of his devising his land to the child, and involves continuous duties that a court of equity cannot regulate, and a conveyance by will, which no court can compel: Bourget v. Monroe, 58 M. 563.

23. A condition that a railroad company shall build and maintain a station-house on land conveyed, suitable for the convenience of the public, and that trains shall stop, freight and passengers be taken, etc., is not specifically enforceable; courts cannot manage railroad-ing details: Blanchard v. Detroit, L. & L. M. R. Co., 31 M. 43.

24. Specific performance will seldom be granted where there is not a mutual liability to the jurisdiction, or where the court has not the means of seeing that its decree shall be carried out: Voorhies v. Frisbie, 25 M. 476.

2. Unconscionable agreements; want of equity; inequality; inadequate consideration.

25. Specific performance of unconscionable contracts will not be enforced: Chambers v. Livermore, 15 M. 381; Myer v. Hart, 40 M. 517.

26. Specific performance will be refused where it is clearly inequitable to grant it: Munch v. Shabel, 37 M. 166.

27. Although equity has power to correct a clerical mistake in an award and to decree specific performance, such performance will not be enforced where there are equitable objections: Buys v. Eberhardt, 3 M. 524.

28. Complainant purchased an interest in certain patents at auction, with full notice of certain claims and encumbrances. The encumbrancer's title was, under the patent laws, invalid. On a bill for specific performance, claiming an absolute assignment of entire interest, held, the complainant could not thus demand unconscientious advantages beyond those he had a right to expect when the sale was made: Eames v. Eames, 16 M. 348.

29. If the contract is unequal, if its consideration is inadequate, if it contains unreasonable provisions, or if there are indications of overreaching or unfairness, a court of equity will refuse to interfere for specific performance and leave the party to his remedy at law: Rust v. Conrad, 47 M. 449.

30. A. and B., having mutual claims derived from distinct sources to land the title of which depended upon a release or confirmation to be obtained from the United States, entered into a sealed agreement, reciting their respective claims and agreeing to share equally in the land if the title should be confirmed, or in the money or compensation which might be awarded in lieu of it. The claim having been subsequently confirmed, and A. having obtained a patent in his own name, B.'s heirs filed a bill for specific performance. Held, that as the agreement recited fully the respective interests of the parties in the estate, A. could not excuse himself from a specific performance on the ground of A.'s inequality of interest at the time of making the agreement: Hunt v. Thorn, 2 M. 213.

31. A farm was purchased at $10,000, of which $1,000 was to be paid down and a mortgage given for the balance payable in ten years. The purchaser was to be at liberty to make sales from the land, and to have the parcel sold released from the mortgage on paying a sum proportionate to the quantity sold. It appeared, however, that some parts of the farm were greatly more valuable than others, and that the purchaser was not bound personally to make payment. Held, that the contract was unequal and unreasonable, and equity would not enforce it: Chambers v. Livermore, 15 M. 381.

32. Suit for specific performance was brought against one who had agreed to convey, but refused to execute a deed on the ground that his title was subject to a reservation of mineral rights of which complainant knew, but he himself did not, at the time of making the agreement, and that complainant had told him that it was not necessary to expressly except a certain easement that was appurtenant to his homestead. It was not shown that complainant had acted fraudulently. Complainant consented to accept performance in precise accordance with defendant's maximum claims, and to take a deed reserving the easement and excepting the right to minerals, and a decree was made accordingly, without costs to either party. Held, that defendant could not complain: Anderson v. Kennedy, 51 M. 467.

33. As a general rule, inadequacy of consideration is no defence to specific performance: Chambers v. Livermore, 15 M. 381.

34. But where the price agreed for in the contract greatly differs from the value, it is an ingredient which, associated with others, will contribute to prevent the interference of a court of equity: Wallace v. Pidge, 4 M. 570.

35. Inadequacy of price, when it is so gross and palpable as of itself to appear evidence of actual fraud, may be sufficient to induce the court to stay the exercise of its discretionary power to enforce a specific performance and leave the party to his remedy at law; but inadequacy of price merely, without being such as to prove fraud conclusively, is not a good objection to specific performance: Burtch v. Hogge, H. 81.

36. The question of enforcing specific performance of a voluntary contract considered by a divided court: Quirk v. Thomas, 6 M. 76.

3. Mutuality; completeness.

37. The contract sought to be enforced must be mutual, and the tie reciprocal, or equity will not enforce performance: McMurtree v. Bennette, H. 124.

38. As a general rule a court of equity will not decree a specific performance where the remedy is not mutual, and one party only is bound by the agreement: Hawley v. Sheldon, H. 420.

39. A bill will not lie to enforce specifically the giving of a loan where there was no complete agreement, but only a misleading representation that means would be furnished to enable complainant to redeem from a mortgage: Wilson v. Eggleston, 27 M. 257.

40. C. paid M. ten dollars for the refusal until February 1 of certain land at $1,000 or such other sum as should then be agreed on. If M. should have another offer of the same sum, C. was to make up his mind in ten days, and in ten days more pay for the land or lose it. Afterward C. tried to induce M.'s agent to persuade M. to sell for less. On January 29 he wrote the agent that he was ready to pay over the money as he had talked as soon as he should get the deed. The agent received this letter February 1, and on February 5 replied that he did not regard it as an offer to carry out the contract and that M. would not take less than $1,000. Next day the agent was offered that sum by another man and accepted it. The agent had also notified C. on January 30 that M. would not take less, and on February 2 M. had answered in a somewhat ambiguous letter that might perhaps indicate a purpose to accept. Held, that there were no equities which would enable C. to maintain against M. a bill for specific performance: Chapman v. Morgan, 55 M. 124.

41. Equity will not enforce specific performance of a contract upon one side where the duties to be performed on the other side are such as to be incapable of being specifically enforced: Buck v. Smith, 29 M. 166.

42. Courts cannot perfect or enforce contracts from which essential details are omitted: Gates v. Gamble, 53 M. 181.

43. A court of equity cannot enforce a contract specifically unless it can be done mutually and completely and so as to secure substantially beyond question all that the parties contemplate: Bourget v. Monroe, 58 M. 563.

44. In suit for specific performance of a parol contract to convey lands an objection on the ground of want of mutuality is of no force if the part of the contract difficult of enforcement has actually been fulfilled: Welch v. Whelpley, 62 M. 15.

45. Specific performance cannot be compelled except of a completed agreement; it cannot be had upon a memorandum that merely states terms which, if accepted, would be the foundation of further treaty between the parties with reference to essential particulars: Wardell v. Williams, 62 M. 50.

46. There is no absolute equity to enforce a contract not mutually complete; so held where two parties contracted to exchange lands, which agreement was reduced to writing, but where the writing omitted the condition that one of the parties was to receive $500 as a further consideration for the exchange: Hall v. Loomis, 63 M. 709.

47. Specific performance of a land contract may be refused for want of mutuality where it is so drawn as to leave it optional with the grantor to retain or convey the property: Maynard v. Brown, 41 M. 298.

48. A contract to exchange a parcel of land for two parcels separately owned by two persons is entire, and if one of the two has sold to a bona fide purchaser so that the contract cannot be enforced as to him, neither can it as to the other: Youell v. Allen, 18 M. 107.

49. A bill will not lie for the specific performance of particular stipulations to be separated and dealt with apart from the rest of the contract, if they do not distinctly appear by the contract to stand by themselves wholly unaffected by any others; a party to a contract who insists upon parts of it must abide by it in its entirety: Baldwin v. Fletcher, 48 M. 604.

4. Certainty; proof.

50. The jurisdiction of equity in specific performance proceeds on the supposition that the parties have not only agreed as between themselves upon every material matter, but that the matters are such, and the subjects of enforcement are so indicated, either directly or by reference to something else, or by legitimate implication, that the court may place in their proper relations all the essential elements and proceed intelligently and practically in carrying into execution the very things to be performed. But if they are in their nature incapable of execution by the court, or if needful specifications are omitted or material matters left so obscure or undefined or bare of detail, or if the subjects of the agreement are so conflicting or incongruous, that the court cannot say whether or not the minds of the parties met on all the essential particulars, or if they did, upon what substantial terms, the case is not one for specific performance: Blanchard v. Detroit, L. & L. M. R. Co., 81 M. 43.

51. A bill in equity to enforce an oral agreement for a lien upon real estate will not be sustained if the terms of the agreement are not sufficiently clear and specific to enable the court to give effect to the understanding of the parties: McClintock v. Laing, 22 M. 212.

52. A parol contract will not be enforced unless it is certain in all its essential particulars: McMurtrie v. Bennette, H. 124; Millerd v. Ramsdell, H. 373; Bomier v. Caldwell, 8 M. 463.

53. Equity will refuse to enforce even a binding contract, and will leave a party to his remedy at law, if not clearly satisfied that the contract embodies the real understanding of the parties: Chambers v. Livermore, 15 M. 381.

54. If an agreement for the purchase of lands be vague and uncertain or the evidence in support of the same unsatisfactory, a court of equity will not enforce it, but will leave the party to his remedy at law: Millerd v. Ramsdell, H. 373.

55. A vague intention on a father's part to give certain lands at some time or other to a son, in fulfilment of one of those family arrangements that are understood to rest simply on the will of the parties, gives no basis for a bill to enforce specific performance of a contract: Wright v. Wright, 31 M. 880.

56. Contracts that are so vague in their terms that no one but the parties can say how great an expenditure they contemplate cannot be specifically enforced by the courts, but must rest on the honor or good faith of the parties: Bumpus v. Bumpus, 58 M. 846.

57. On a bill for specific performance a stipulation in the contract that the vendee shall "improve the premises" will be treated as immaterial, being too indefinite to be enforced: Morris v. Hoyt, 11 M. 9.

58. A bill in equity alleged that a patentee who had sold out his remaining rights to complainant had previously assigned to another person, with whom he is joined as defendant; he had obtained a re-issue of the patent to this assignee in consideration that the latter would manufacture enough of the patented machines to supply the market, license others to manufacture them, increase and report sales, pay a certain royalty, and prosecute infringers. The bill alleged that the assignee had neglected to do so; and waiving sworn answer prayed that he account for sales and settlements; that the assignment and re-issue be declared void as to the interests of the patentee and complainant, and that the assignee be ordered to re-assign or assign to complainant, or authorize complainant to prosecute or compromise or settle with infringers. A demurrer to this bill was sustained on the ground that it alleged a vague and contradictory agreement of which specific performance could not be granted, and that the grievances were susceptible of legal remedy: Torrent v. Rodgers, 39 M. 85.

59. A son agreed with his father to remove with his family to the latter's house, take care of the father and turn over to him annually a certain proportion of the crops, in consideration of all which the father was to deed to the son a certain parcel of land, which he promised to do, but did not. The only uncertainty related to the time at which the deed was to be given. Held, that the case was sufficient to sustain a bill for specific performance against the administrator and heirs at law of the father: Lamb v. Hinman, 46 M. 112.

60. A father's agreement with his daughter and her husband to give them land and help them improve it if they would settle upon it and live there, the husband to give up other engagements, though somewhat vague as not fixing any time for the continuance of the residence or any extent for the improvements to be made, is not altogether indefinite when considered in the light of ordinary conduct; and it must be considered as fulfilled by the wife and husband when they in good faith fix their home upon the land: Welch v. Whelpley, 63 M. 15.

61. Courts will not, unless in clear cases, establish and protect a way for passage over private property on the ground of enforcing specific performance of a partly executed oral agreement, or of declaring and protecting a prescriptive right resulting from a use which originally sprang from such an agreement: Fox v. Pierce, 50 M. 500.

62. Where the consideration of a contract for the sale of pine land consisted not only of a money payment but of a joint arrangement between the parties for lumbering the land, its specific performance could not be enforced in the absence of any agreement or usage as to the time to be allowed for the lumbering; and, as the contract is not severable, no portion of it could be specifically enforced: Gates v. Gamble, 58 M. 181.

63. Specific performance will be refused if the description of the land is imperfect: Munsell v. Loree, 21 M. 491.

64. Specific performance was asked of a contract to convey a strip of land described as "four rods wide along the St. Coasme line road, or if necessary to cover a certain ditch or water-course the said strip of land is to be five rods, . . . or any other width not to exceed five rods." The bill stated the amount of land as "five rods wide . . . and of sufficient width to cover a ditch or water-course, . . . said strip being about five rods wide and being two and twenty-hundredths acres of land." The answer denied the statement of acreage. The decree required a conveyance of four rods "containing two acres and twenty-hundredths of an acre." Held, that the contract was too uncertain to be enforced without extrinsic evidence, and that the decree, which followed neither contract nor bill, was unwarranted: Wiegert v. Franck, 56 M. 200.

65. To warrant relief the contract must be clearly and satisfactorily established: Ritson v. Dodge, 33 M. 463.

66. The enforcement of an alleged agreement to execute a mortgage upon land which complainant, defendant's father, had bought in defendant's name and paid for, requires clear and satisfactory proof: Babcock v. Twist, 19 M. 516.

67. A bill filed by one member of a firm to enforce an alleged express agreement under which the firm was to own certain lands bought by another partner in his own name with money advanced by the firm cannot be maintained unless such express agreement is proved: Russell v. Miller, 26 M. 1.

68. Specific performance of a parol contract will not be granted unless it is substantially the contract set forth in the bill and is clearly proved: Wilson v. Wilson, 6 M. 9; Brown v. Brown, 47 M. 378; Dragoo v. Dragoo, 50 M. 573.

69. When specific performance is sought of a contract for the conveyance of lands, and it appears that the terms of the agreement were embodied in formal papers which are in proof though not delivered, there will be less hesitation in giving relief than if the terms were all oral and to be made out on the recollection of witnesses: Murphy v. Stever, 47 M. 523.

70. Where husband and wife filed a bill on behalf of the wife, alleging a parol agreement on the part of the deviser of defendant to convey certain lands to the wife, and asking its specific performance, but from the evidence it appeared that the agreement was to convey to the husband, the bill was dismissed, notwithstanding there was evidence in the case that the husband afterwards directed the conveyance to be made to the wife, and the other party assented to its being so made: Wilson v. Wilson, 6 M. 9.

71. A man and his wife filed a bill against his wife's father and sister for the specific performance of an alleged oral agreement by the father to convey to them the premises whereon they lived when the dwelling-house should be ready for occupancy. The father claimed that complainants held as tenants merely. Held, that the fact that the taxes were assessed against the father was not conclusive evidence against complainants; that the payment of such taxes by the son-in-law was a significant fact in their favor; and that the presence of the other daughter at the time of the making of the agreement charged her with notice of the nature of complainant's possession and claim: Fairfield v. Barbour, 51 M. 57.

72. A widow sued her deceased husband's father for specific performance of an alleged contract under which land was conveyed to defendant to be afterwards conveyed to complainant. Defendant's answer averred that the lands were in fact conveyed to him in trust for his son's infant children. The testimony was conflicting, but it appeared that deceased had in a measure provided for his wife by a life insurance, and had conveyed to her the homestead. Held, that it was probable that he would have made some provision for his children, and the bill was dismissed: Green v. Begole, 70 M. 602.

Strong proof required where performance of gift is sought: See GIFTS, § 17.

5. Fraud and mistake.

73. It requires very strong equities to induce a court to refuse to enforce a written contract, even where a mistake is alleged to have been made in drawing it up: Rogers v. Odell, 36 M. 411.

74. Whether a complainant in a bill for specific performance can have a mistake in the contract corrected, quere: Cliner v. Hovey, 15 M. 18.

75. Whether a complainant can be allowed to show by parol a mistake in a contract with a view to having it reformed and then enforced, quere: Chambers v. Livermore, 15 M. 381.

76. If a material error in a written contract for the conveyance of lands can be corrected on parol evidence in a suit for the specific performance of the contract, and performance decreed according to the understanding as found upon such evidence, it should only be done where the mistake is made out beyond cavil: Youell v. Allen, 18 M. 107.

77. An intentional omission in a deed founded upon an oral land contract may be corrected by a decree of specific performance; and if the grantee takes possession he will be regarded as in possession of the whole, whether the actual possession extends to the whole or not: Goodenow v. Curtis, 18 M. 298.

78. A parol agreement was made for the sale to complainant of certain premises by a well-known name, such premises being an enclosed piece of land containing several lots. In the conveyance one of the lots was intentionally omitted by the vendor, unknown to the vendee, who went into possession of the whole. A conveyance of the omitted parcel was decreed: Ibid.

79. If one contracts to convey land, but by mistake the land is not described in the contract, a bona fide purchaser from him, who bought without knowledge of the mistake, cannot be compelled to perform the contract: Youell v. Allen, 18 M. 107.

80. A parol contract was made for the sale of land, and was carried out by giving a deed which was ineffectual for misdescription. The land was afterwards levied upon and sold on execution, and the contract purchaser filed a bill to enjoin an action of ejectment by the execution purchaser to correct the mistake in the deed, and to have the deed on execution set aside as clouding his title. Held that, to entitle complainant to enforce the parol contract as against the owner of the legal title, he must show (1) a contract the terms of which are clear and complete, so that no reasonable doubt can exist respecting its enforcement according to the understanding of the parties, if enforcement seems equitable; (2) such acts of part performance as, according to equitable principles, will justify its enforcement notwithstanding the failure to comply with the statute of frauds in making it; (3) the payment of the purchase price: Kinyon v. Young, 44 M. 339.

81. If a contract by fraud or mistake includes more than the vendor agreed to sell, it will not be enforced in equity, though the average estimate of witnesses makes the value of the property no more than was to be paid: Chambers v. Livermore, 15 M. 381.

82. A mistake may be shown by parol as a defence to the specific performance of a written instrument: Ibid.; Berry v. Whitney, 40 M. 65.

6. Changed conditions; waiver; abandonment.

83. A man agreed to let his married daughter and her family live on a lot he owned if she would support him during his life, and also promised that the land should be hers after his death. She and her children died in his life-time, however, and the old man thereupon turned her husband off the premises. The husband as sole heir to his wife and children professed his readiness to fulfil the agreement to support him, and demanded specific performance or compensation. Held, that his bill therefor would not lie: Bourget v. Monroe, 58 M. 563.

84. A., an omnibus proprietor, and B., C., D. and E., each the proprietor of a hotel in a certain city, entered into a written agreement whereby A. engaged to run impartially for five years an omnibus line to convey guests to and from the depot and hotels at a specified rate, the hotel keepers agreeing to sell to him their omnibuses and teams, and to refrain from running such lines in opposition to his business. A. bought their omnibuses, etc., and set up his line. Afterwards B.'s hotel changed hands, a new hotel was opened, and C., the only one of the hotel keepers who owned his hotel or whose tenure would necessarily extend through the five years, assigned his business to his sons; and they, claiming that A. had discriminated against their hotel, started a free line. Held, in a suit by A., that equity would not enjoin them from running such line; nor could a specific performance of the contract be decreed: Pingle v. Conner, 66 M. 187.

85. Specific performance will not be refused as inequitable because of the fluctuation of values, where the court has no means of knowing what bearing the terms of the contract had on the negotiations of the parties: Nims v. Vaughn, 40 M. 356.

86. A logging contract between A. on one side and a firm composed of A. and B. on the other cannot be specifically enforced after the death of A. in behalf of his personal representatives, because a court of equity has no means of seeing to the execution of such a contract, and the judgment and business faculty of the deceased partner cannot be supplied: Roberts v. Kelsey, 38 M. 602.

87. A defendant cannot resist the specific performance of a contract on a plea that his expectations of aid in money, etc., from the other party formed the sole inducement and consideration to him of entering into the contract, where it appears that these expectations were merely the operations of his own mind, and not raised by any promise or suggestion of the other party: Hunt v. Thorn, 2 M. 213.

88. Specific performance of an oral agreement to renew a lease for three years will not be allowed where it appears that, on the expiration of the first holding, the tenant accepted a written lease for one year only: Stuebben v. Granger, 63 M. 306.

89. A woman was indebted upon a promissory note signed by herself and another person jointly. Her creditor began suit upon it, but she secured its payment by giving him a contract whereby he was to have the use of certain farm property, in which she had a life interest, until the reasonable rents thereof should pay the debt. He however went on with his suit without the knowledge of the defendants, and took judgment. He leased the farm on shares, but his tenant finally left, selling to the woman his interest in the crops then growing. The creditor then levied execution on the property of the joint maker, but the latter obtained a decree forever staying collection. In this proceeding the woman was not made a party, and was therefore not bound by it. The creditor in answering it stated that he had abandoned all his rights under the contract to the woman, and that she had continued to occupy the farm; but he afterward filed a bill against her for the enforcement of the contract. Held that, having abandoned his rights therein, his bill would not lie: Kimmerle v. Hass, 53 M. 341.

7. Dower or homestead rights.

90. Equity will not compel the specific performance by a husband of his agreement to procure his wife to join him in the conveyance of real estate: Weed v. Terry, 2 D. 344 (Disaffirming, on this point, W. 501.)

91. A husband's contract that his wife shall release her dower cannot be enforced in equity: Buchoz v. Walker, 19 M. 224.

92. A contract to convey one's homestead, not signed by the wife, will not be enforced; and where the contract included other lands which would be subject to the wife's contingent right of dower held, that the adjustment of compensation with decree for partial performance would be so difficult that it ought not to be attempted: Phillips v. Stauch, 20 M. 369.

93. A contract, not signed by the wife, to convey land occupied as a homestead will not be specifically enforced; nor, though the value of the property is greater than the maximum allowed as a homestead, can a partial performance as to the excess be decreed, the adjustment of compensation being too difficult: Hall v. Loomis, 63 M. 709.

94. Where the husband causes lands to be conveyed to the wife, which he holds under a contract of purchase and which he has agreed to convey to complainant, and she was aware of his contract and paid no consideration, specific performance may be decreed against her: Daily v. Litchfield, 10 M. 29.

95. A man made a land contract covering eighty acres on which he lived, but not signed by his wife. Husband and wife afterward joined in conveying the same property to another person. The homestead had never been set apart. The whole land was subject to mortgages, in which the wife had joined. A suit for specific performance was brought by the party to whom the contract was given, and the party to whom conveyance had been made defended, but did not ask that any homestead right should be set off to him or protected. Held, therefore, that the court would not interpose or protect any; and as the homestead right had been lost by the grantors, and as the defence actually set up was insufficient, specific performance was decreed in favor of the complainant: Stevenson v. Jackson, 40 M. 702.

8. Parol contracts; part performance.¹

96. The ground of the interference of equity to enforce a specific performance of a parol contract to convey land is not simply that there is proof of the existence of the agreement, but that there is fraud in refusing the completion of an agreement partly performed: McMurtrie v. Bennette, H. 124.

97. An oral agreement to advance money to purchase lands and to remove incumbrances on them, and ultimately to transfer them to another on repayment where the latter was in possession, and did no act to his own prejudice, will not be specifically enforced: Moote v. Scriven, 38 M. 500.

98. Part performance takes out of the statute an oral contract for the sale of land, and authorizes specific performance: Scott v. Bush, 26 M. 418.

99. Redress is not granted on a parol contract for a part performance capable of full pecuniary measurement; e. g., the selection of swamp-lands under a parol contract that the party making the selection shall have an interest in them: Webster v. Gray, 37 M. 37.

100. Nor, in such case, does the fact that such party has allowed his legal remedy to become outlawed entitle him to relief in equity: Ibid.

101. If a party sets up part performance to take a case out of the statute, he must show acts unequivocally referring to and resulting from that agreement, such as the party would not have done unless on account of that very agreement and with a view to its performance; and the agreement set up must appear to be the same with the one partly performed; there must be no uncertainty or equivocation in the case: McMurtrie v. Bennette, H. 124; Millerd v. Ramsdell, H. 373.

102. Under an oral contract to convey a parcel of land to a wife in consideration of her joining her husband in a conveyance of a homestead, the execution of such conveyance is an act of part performance sufficient to take the case out of the statute of frauds: Farwell v. Johnston, 34 M. 242.

103. An arrangement between a step-son just come of age, and about to leave home and set up for himself, and his step-father that if the former would stay with the latter and work the farm and take care of the family he should have in consideration thereof a deed of one-half the farm, which is shown by the evidence to have been a distinct and definite agreement as to the land and the consideration and not a vague expectation, will be sustained and specifically enforced after a substantial performance of the consideration: Twiss v. George, 38 M. 253.

104. An oral agreement to convey land, being void under the statute of frauds, a bill against a wife to compel a conveyance, even though her husband made the agreement and received the consideration with her full knowledge and consent, cannot be maintained where there is no such part performance as will take the case out of the statute: Peckham v. Balch, 49 M. 179.

105. Specific performance cannot be granted on the basis of a parol contract, unless there have been important acts of part performance raising a strong equity in complainant's favor: Dragoo v. Dragoo, 50 M. 573.

106. Where the vendee remains in possession under an oral contract of purchase, equity will enforce the contract against him by compelling payment of the purchase price: Curran v. Rogers, 35 M. 221.

107. The delivery of possession under parol agreement relating to lands is an act of part performance: Weed v. Terry, W. 501, 2 D. 344; Miner v. O'Harrow, 60 M. 91.

108. Where one goes into possession of land under an oral contract of purchase, makes payments on the contract and removes buildings or timber, there has been such a possession and part performance as entitles the contract to be enforced in equity: Cilley v. Burkholder, 41 M. 749.

109. It seems that the acts of a vendee in taking possession and cutting timber under the assumed authority of an invalid contract is a sufficient part performance to justify a decree that he should pay the purchase price; especially as the cutting renders it impossible to place the vendors in statu quo: Dickinson v. Wright, 56 M. 42.

110. Where, under a parol agreement to convey land, the purchase money had been paid, possession taken and valuable improvements made, these acts of part performance were held to be sufficient to take the case out of the statute of frauds, and to entitle the purchaser to a decree for specific performance: Burtch v. Hogge, H. 31.

111. Where, under a parol contract for the purchase and conveyance of lands, the vendor had caused the land to be surveyed, received upwards of one-half the purchase price, put the vendee in possession and had permitted him to retain that possession for several years in reliance upon the contract, and without taking any steps to put an end to it, held, that these acts of the vendor constituted such acts of part performance as to take the case out of the operation of the statute of frauds, and entitle the vendee to a specific performance of the contract: Bomier v. Caldwell, H. 67, 8 M. 463.

112. Where a wife bargains for the purchase of the undivided half of lands of which the husband is owner of the undivided half and in the occupancy, and from the time of the bargain occupies and claims the land with him, she may be deemed in possession under the contract: Murphy v. Stever, 47 M. 522.

113. Where the husband under such circumstances goes on and makes valuable improvements, relying on the wife's purchase, the wife in a suit by her for specific performance should have the benefit of those improvements as she would have had if they had been paid for in part by herself: Ibid.

114. Where the parties claimed the same land under conflicting titles and made a parol agreement for a division, and each took possession of the part set off to him, a specific performance was decreed: Weed v. Terry, W. 501, 2 D. 344.

115. A woman of small business experience bought land and gave back a purchase-money mortgage for part of the price. An adverse claim arose, and the vendor did not protect her. She did not pay her mortgage when it was due and the vendor foreclosed, agreeing, however, by parol that she might make payment afterwards. She was left in possession, cultivating and improving the land. Held that, on her bill for specific performance of the parol agreement, she was entitled to a decree which would be the same in effect as permitting her to redeem: Potter v. Brown, 50 M. 436.

116. Work done in raising crops on wild land partially brought under imperfect cultivation is not very conclusive as evidence of possession under a contract of purchase—especially not where it is shown that the party was at once dispossessed of his occupation, and a part of his crop appropriated by the alleged vendor: Ritson v. Dodge, 33 M. 463.

117. Possession of land subsequent to an alleged parol gift cannot avail a party who seeks specific performance if it is sufficiently explained by the fact that the donee is the donor's son: Jones v. Tyler, 6 M. 364.

118. Specific performance will be refused if the evidence of possession relied upon as part performance is uncertain as to location or equivocal or unsatisfactory in quality: Munsell v. Loree, 21 M. 491.

119. The reason why taking possession of land under an oral contract is such part performance of the contract as will sustain a bill for its specific performance, when payment of the purchase price is not, is that in the former case there is no certain basis for estimating damages for the breach: Lamb v. Hinman, 46 M. 112.

120. Payment of consideration for land sold under an oral agreement will not always take the case out of the statute; nor will possession where the purchaser, as a tenant in common, merely remains in possession. Acts done as an owner and in reliance upon an ownership, and for which damages will not be adequate compensation, are also necessary to entitle a party to the enforcement of such an agreement: Peckham v. Balch, 49 M. 179.

121. Part payment of the purchase price is not of itself sufficient to warrant a decree for the specific performance of a parol contract for the purchase of lands: McMurtrie v. Bennette, H. 124; Murphy v. Stever, 47 M. 523.

9. Forfeiture; default; when time essential.

122. Where specific performance of a contract for land that is valuable for its timber is resisted on the ground that the vendees have forfeited it by taking timber off in violation of it, and the fact is admitted, the justification that a parol agreement was made under which the timber could be removed if the time of payment was hastened must be very clearly shown: Stickney v. Parmenter, 35 M. 237.

123. The vendor will not be allowed to forfeit the contract for non-payment when, not having the title to convey, he is not in a position to perform on his own part: Converse v. Blumrich, 14 M. 109.

124. G. made a contract with H. for two parcels of pine lands, and at the same time contracted with F. & A. to sell them lumber from one of the parcels if they would advance him money to make payment. The first contract was not to be assigned without H.'s consent on pain of forfeiture, but with such consent it was assigned to F. & A. as security, so far as related to the parcel from which their lumber was to be taken. The lumber contract was extended, and G. sought to sell the lumber from the other parcel, first to F. & A., and afterwards to Y. & Z.; but an arrangement with Y. & Z. was prevented by F. & A., who claimed that their assignment covered both parcels. Shortly afterwards H.'s agent notified G. that the land contract was forfeited, and having done so conveyed one parcel to F. and contracted to sell him the other for the amount remaining unpaid on F.'s contract. G. then filed a bill for specific performance, impleading F. & A. with H., and obtained a decree from which only F. & A. appealed. Held, that the rights of F. & A. were confined to the first parcel; that, as the forfeiture was evidently declared for the purpose of enabling F. to get the land, and as F. & A. were bound to use their security for G.'s benefit, subject only to their own claim against him, and could not obtain a complete title without leaving him a right of redemption, the decree would not be disturbed: Gamble v. Folsom, 49 M. 141.

125. Where the vendee had agreed to pay all taxes it was held, on a bill for specific performance, that the purchase price having been paid the vendor had no concern with the payment of taxes, as he could not be compelled to warrant against them, and he did not aver or pretend that he had been made personally liable for them: Richmond v. Robinson, 12 M. 193.

126. Where the vendee in a land contract has been in default in his payments, specific performance is not necessarily compelled if the other party has not also been in fault: Richards v. White, 44 M. 622.

127. A party to a contract after being grossly in default has no absolute right to its enforcement: Russell v. Nester, 46 M. 290.

128. The vendor of land, after warning the purchaser, who was grossly in default, sold the premises to others who knew the facts but purchased in good faith, paying a sum which would not exceed the amount remaining due from the former purchaser, and which was all that could have been obtained if they had been sold on foreclosure. The former purchaser did not warn the later ones against proceeding to use the lands. Held, that a decree for specific performance of the first contract, on a bill against the vendor and the later purchaser, was not equitable: Ibid.

129. Time is not usually so far of the essence of a contract that failure to perform within the time fixed will necessarily forfeit it; but when a vendee fails to perform his obligations relief is not a matter of right and will not be granted if, under all the circumstances including the conduct of the parties, it does not seem just and reasonable: Gram v. Wasey, 45 M. 223.

130. Time is not considered in equity as of the essence of a contract unless the parties have expressly stipulated that it shall be, or unless there has been culpable negligence or wilful delay on complainant's part: Wallace v. Pidge, 4 M. 570.

131. Time, place and mode of payment are not considered matters of substance, unless by express stipulation of the parties they are declared to be so, or unless from the special nature of the case and the necessary intention and understanding between the parties they must be deemed material. Therefore, though the contract varies in these particulars from that set out in the bill, if it corresponds in other respects the court may enforce it: Bomier v. Caldwell, 8 M. 463.

132. Where the time fixed in a land contract for the delivery of the deed was uncertain — "being on or before Aug. 31, 1849" — and was in August, 1849, extended two years, after the expiration of which extension the vendee received partial payments from the purchaser, who subsequently asked for further time, which request the vendor would neither expressly grant nor refuse. Held that, after the parties had so dealt together, one of them would not be allowed to obtain an advantage of the other by suddenly considering time material without proper notice of such an intention: Wallace v. Pidge, 4 M. 570.

133. Time cannot be made essential in a contract merely by so declaring, if it would be unconscionable to allow it. Parties may stipulate to make it so, where the stipulation is reasonable, but if the stipulation is not reasonable, courts will not regard it: Richmond v. Robinson, 12 M. 193.

134. A provision that, on the failure of the vendee to fulfil the agreements on his part at the times specified, the vendor may re-enter and take possession of the land, all rights of the vendee under the contract shall be null and void, and all payments and improvements made be forfeited, does not make time so far of the essence of the contract as that all rights of the vendee become, ipso facto, forfeited merely by a failure to pay at the times agreed upon without any act on the part of vendor indicating an intention to insist upon the forfeiture: Morris v. Hoyt, 11 M. 9.

135. Under such a provision, the only mode by which the vendor can forfeit the rights of the vendee is by re-entering and taking possession of the land, or some act equivalent thereto: Ibid.

136. A contract that empowers the vendor, on default being made in payment to terminate it, is not forfeited by mere lapse of time until the vendor has signified his intention to put an end to it. Until such election the vendee is liable for the purchase money, and entitled to specific performance on making payment: Converse v. Blumrich, 14 M. 109.

137. It seems that, even where time is made of the essence of a land contract, a short delay in fulfilment after the time fixed will not necessarily defeat the right to specific performance: Voltz v. Grummett, 49 M. 453.

138. Where a land contract provides for the payment of part of the consideration by conveying other described land within a year, or in lieu thereof $800 with interest, the time limited is not so far of the essence of the contract that it may not be waived; and, if waived, the right to pay by conveying the land within a reasonable time is within the protection of a court of equity, though not renewed by a written agreement. And defendants, having expressly consented to delay in the performance of such a stipulation, and received money in consideration thereof, were held not warranted in resisting performance; which was tendered after a brief delay, and where there had been no change injurious to them: Kimball v. Goodburn, 32 M. 10.

139. Where one buys at a statutory foreclosure under an arrangement with the owner of the equity of redemption to give him further time to redeem or to purchase back, time is not so far of the essence of the contract as to prevent its enforcement upon equitable terms within a reasonable time after the lapse of the period specified: Moot v. Scriven, 33 M. 500.

140. A contract will not be enforced in favor of the purchaser where he has been in default on his own part, and has waited until there has been such a change in the value of the property sold as to render the contract unequal if made now: Smith v. Lawrence, 15 M. 499.

141. Where, owing to a proposed public action to be decided within a few days, a piece of land was in great demand, and its owner agreed to take a certain amount for it "if sold immediately," and the offer was not accepted until next day, the proposed purchaser sending his agent still later to obtain an abstract of the title for examination, at which time the owner, not understanding that any contract existed, declined to sell for the price named, but offered to do so for a specified advance if taken up at once, and the agent asserted no claim, but promised to inform his principal of the increase demanded, and nothing more was heard from the latter for several days, in the course of which the owner had sold the land for a still greater sum, the court declined to decree specific performance of the agreement first above referred to, as for a contract, and dismissed the bill therefor, holding that the circumstances made time an essential element in the conduct of the parties: Hawley v. Jelly, 25 M. 94.

(c) Laches.

As to laches generally, see EQUITY, III.

142. As time destroys evidence, great delay in filing a bill for specific performance of a parol agreement to convey land necessitates a close scrutiny of the proofs even if the delay is excused: Dragoo v. Dragoo, 50 M. 573.

143. A bill for the specific performance of a parol agreement to convey land can hardly be maintained where it is not filed for twenty-five years after the alleged agreement was made, unless the complainant was unable to assert his claim before; and the neglect of near relations to aid a minor in the assertion of such claims is a circumstance entitled to consideration where there is no pretence that they were in collusion with the other party: Ibid.

144. A. contracted to buy pine lands, paying down a small part of the price. The land becoming unsalable, he did not pay the subsequent instalments. Six years afterward B. notified him that the contract had long been forfeited, and that he was only hesitating as to what he would do on his part. A. took no steps to enforce the sale until three years later, when the land had become valuable, although in the meantime B. had paid taxes on the land and sold it again. Held, that A. was not entitled to specific performance: Smith v. Lawrence, 15 M. 499.

145. Where a bill is brought against heirs of an estate for the specific performance of an oral contract made with their ancestor thirty years before, the delay must be excused by a very satisfactory showing of facts: Ritson v. Dodge, 83 M. 463.

146. One whose claims as purchaser have been distinctly denied by actual possession must move promptly in the assertion of any rights he claims thereafter: Ibid.

147. An alleged vendor's admissions of an agreement to convey, coupled with his asserted intention not to convey because of an act of waste committed by the vendee, are not very satisfactory evidence of the contract and such an announcement of his intention not to fulfil the contract makes more culpable the vendee's long delay in bringing suit: Ibid.

148. A man bought a place, and put his sister and her family in possession of it. After he died her husband, who was one of the commissioners upon the estate, appraised the land as decedent's property, and the family took a long lease of it. Seven years later, when notice to quit was given for non-performance of its conditions, the sister filed a bill to compel her brother's son and heir to convey the land to her, alleging that her brother had promised her the land in the first place as an inducement to remain in the neighborhood; that it had always been his expressed intention to give her a deed of it, and that he had in fact had a deed prepared, which in his last illness he asked his wife to get, but which was not then or afterwards produced. Held, that upon the facts the bill would not lie: Defer v. Lockwood, 58 M. 117.

149. Where the owner permitted another person to occupy and improve lands for a number of years, under an oral contract of purchase, and under the impression that he might pay for it when demanded, and the purchaser offered to pay when notified to do so, it was held that there was no such laches imputable to the purchaser as should debar him from specific performance: Ingersoll v. Horton, 7 M. 405.

150. A notice served by the owner in such a case, requiring the purchaser to pay for the land in a specified time and take a deed therefor, estops him from taking advantage of laches of the purchaser prior to such notice: Ibid.

151. A party who has enjoyed the use of the estate, and of the moneys arising from sales which he had covenanted to share jointly with another, cannot object the lapse of time where the complainant filed his bill for specific performance thirteen years after his rights accrued — there being no fraud or unfairness imputed to complainant: Hunt v. Thorn, 2 M. 218.

152. A man promised to convey certain land to his daughter and her husband if the latter would give up other engagements and both would settle on the land and live there. Held that, when they had in good faith taken up their residence accordingly, they were entitled to the specific performance of this agreement; and that, so long as there was continued acquiescence in their claim to the land, there was no such laches as would bar their right to this belief: Welch v. Whelpley, 62 M. 15.

153. One who asks specific performance as soon as he is able to do so — e. g., where he awaits discharge in bankruptcy — is not guilty of laches: Gamble v. Folsom, 49 M. 141.

154. The failure of the vendee to tender performance and demand a deed before filing his bill only affects the question of costs: Morris v. Hoyt, 11 M. 9.

155. Complainants notified the other party to the contract for the exchange of lands to meet them at the office where the contract was drawn and exchange deeds — that place having been agreed upon for the purpose at the time the contract was entered into. Complainants went to the office at the time specified, executed a deed of the lands to be conveyed by them, and left it there for delivery — the other party not having appeared. They afterwards notified him of what they had done. Held, equivalent to a tender of their deed, and a sufficient request for a deed from the other party. It is not necessary in such a case for the party claiming specific performance to prepare and tender a deed to be executed by the other party: Daily v. Litchfield, 10 M. 29.

156. One of the defendants held the land agreed to be conveyed by him under a contract of purchase. Instead of taking a deed to himself he had it made to his wife, who had notice of his agreement to convey to complainant, and paid no consideration. Held, that it was not necessary to demand a deed of the wife before filing a bill against both for specific performance: Ibid.

157. Where a demand for specific performance has once been made and refused, it is not necessary to repeat it under similar circumstances before suing to compel it: Nims v. Vaughn, 40 M. 356.

158. Specific performance of a land contract cannot be enforced by the seller unless he puts or offers to put the purchaser in possession: McHugh v. Wells, 89 M. 175.

159. A vendor seeking specific performance may be allowed relief if he is able to make a good title before final decree, though unable to do so when he files his bill: Ligare v. Semple, 32 M. 438, 460.

(e) For and against whom granted.

160. Courts of equity recognize and protect the rights of assignees, and enforce the performance of contracts in their favor: Street v. Dow, H. 427.

161. Third persons who have obtained contracts for a part of the land are still entitled, when the original contract is surrendered to the vendor, to a specific performance so far as their lands are concerned: Woodward v. Clark, 15 M. 104.

162. For a case where the right to file a bill to enforce an agreement by the lessee of a mining location to convey an interest in the title when perfected, was upheld in favor of an assignee of the heir of the party with whom the agreement was made, see Compo v. Jackson Iron Co., 49 M. 39.

163. A wife may have specific performance of her husband's contract to buy land if a homestead right has attached, and he seeks to relinquish the contract: McKee v. Wilcox, 11 M. 358.

164. Where the facts would preclude an original contracting party from claiming specific performance because it would operate as a fraud on the defendant, no person claiming through him can assert a better right without showing that he is a bona fide purchaser: Berry v. Whitney, 40 M. 65.

165. Where specific performance cannot be enforced against a person who has orally agreed to convey lands, the case will not be aided by showing that the land has been fraudulently granted to a third person: Peckham v. Balch, 49 M. 179.

166. Specific performance of an oral promise to convey land by way of gift will not be decreed as against a bona fide mortgagee of the premises: Jones v. Tyler, 6 M. 364.

167. Where an infant purchaser has assigned an agreement for the conveyance of land, specific performance will not be decreed in favor of the assignee, upon a bill filed within five months after the infant had reached his majority, without proof of some act by the infant affirming the agreement and assignment since his majority. Suit by the purchaser after reaching majority to enforce the agreement would have been an act of affirmation, but suit by the assignee would not; nor would the retention of the consideration for the assignment and his quiescence for five months after coming of age be alone sufficient to raise an inference of ratification: Carrell v. Potter, 23 M. 377.

168. A decree compelling a release by executors was sustained by a divided court where one of two joint owners acting with the other's oral authority had made a contract of sale the terms of which, after various transfers, had been fulfilled, but where the executors and legal representatives of the other joint owner, who had died meanwhile, claimed to retain their decedent's original interest: Gardner v. Warren, 52 M. 309.

169. Specific performance of a decedent's contract of support cannot be maintained against distributees of the estate after it has been closed: Shannon v. Shannon, 48 M. 182.

170. A father orally gave his son a tract of land and put him in possession, and the son made improvements on it and grew a crop of wheat. A person seeking to buy the land bargained with the son, whose rights he knew, but failing to agree with him closed a contract with the father, which it was agreed should be kept from the son's knowledge. The father afterwards refused to give a deed except subject to his son's claim for the wheat crop, and the purchaser filed a bill against him for specific performance. Held, that the bill was properly dismissed. The son was not a party, and could not be bound by a decree. Complainant knew the father could not sell such interests as the son owned, and having no equities could not ask a court of equity to create complications in the title, but should be left to seek a remedy at law: Dowling v. Bergin, 47 M. 183.

171. A parol agreement that has once been executed may be afterwards enforced in behalf of those for whose benefit it was meant: Watrous v. Allen, 57 M. 362.

Specific performance of covenant to indemnify bank is not enforceable against the state: See CONSTITUTIONS, § 420.

II. PLEADING AND PRACTICE.

(a) Parties.

172. Where the contract has been assigned in trust, the beneficiaries under it are not necessary parties to a bill by the vendor for its specific performance: Hanchett v. McQueen, 32 M. 22.

173. The heir at law of a deceased vendee, and not the administrator, is the proper complainant in a bill for specific performance by the vendor of a contract for the conveyance of lands: House v. Dexter, 9 M. 246.

174. To a bill for specific performance of a land contract, both the vendor and third persons to whom he has conveyed are necessary parties: Daily v. Litchfield, 10 M. 29.

175. Persons who, after a contract has been made for the conveyance of lands, acquire interests in the lands derived from the vendor are necessary parties to a bill for the specific performance of the contract: Morris v. Hoyt, 11 M. 9; Chapman v. Morgan, 55 M. 124.

176. A vendor who has assigned his interest need not be made a party if the vendee has accepted the assignee in his stead: Lovejoy v. Potter, 60 M. 95.

177. Where B. held a land contract given by A., and C. was entitled to a portion of the land when the contract was performed, and B. surrendered it up to A., whereupon C. filed his bill against A. for specific performance, so far as his portion was concerned, held that, as C. must claim under B., the latter was a necessary party to the suit: Woodward v. Clark, 15 M. 104.

178. Where a compromise contract is so drawn that what is to be done by one party is the consideration for that which is to be done by the other, specific performance of any portion of it cannot be had without bringing all the parties in interest before the court, so as to give opportunity for disposing of the whole controversy. And where that was not done the bill was dismissed, but without prejudice: Baldwin v. Fletcher, 48 M. 604.

179. Where the wife has not joined with her husband in a contract to convey his land, she is not a proper party to a bill by the purchaser for specific performance: Richmond v. Robinson, 12 M. 193.

180. A bill for specific performance should be dismissed if complainant parts with his interest: Brewer v. Dodge, 28 M. 359.

(b) Pleadings.

181. A bill for specific performance must set out a contract that is clear and definite: Wright v. Wright, 31 M. 380.

182. A bill for the specific performance of a contract made by an agent need not set forth the manner of its execution, or anything more than the fact of its execution; and the contract must then be proved as a valid one: Hanchett v. McQueen, 32 M. 22.

183. Where the rights of various defendants in a suit for specific performance must be settled among themselves before performance can be granted, the complainant can ask to have such rights disposed of in the same suit, and without a cross-bill or other analogous pleading: Ibid.

184. Bill for the specific performance of a contract to exchange certain lands of defendants for other lands of complainants. The bill alleged complainants to be owners in fee-simple of the lands to be exchanged by them. Held, a sufficient statement of what the title was: Daily v. Litchfield, 10 M. 29.

185. In a bill for the specific performance of a parol contract for the conveyance of land, the general facts relied upon, showing a part performance as a ground for taking the case out of the statute of frauds and for enforcing the agreement, must be specifically set forth:

Bomier v. Caldwell, 8 M. 468; Peckham v. Balch, 49 M. 179.

186. In a bill for the specific performance of a contract for the conveyance of land, a part of the consideration for which consisted in clearing and fencing, a general allegation that the same had been performed, was held sufficient: Daily Litchfield, 10 M. 29.

187. A bill for the specific performance of a parol agreement to convey land sufficiently avers payment to the defendant if it avers payment to a third person under the arrangement, and the proofs show that it was so made by defendant's direction and for his benefit: Bigbee v. Bigbee, 50 M. 467.

188. A failure of the vendee to pay taxes as stipulated in the contract stands upon the same basis, as respects specific performance, as a default in the payment of instalments of the purchase money; and his offer in his bill of full payment and performance covers the taxes as well as the purchase money: Morris v. Hoyt, 11 M. 9.

189. Where a wife's bill for specific performance of a contract to convey lands to her impleads a third person, to whom the principal defendant has conveyed, and avers that complainant is in possession, and indirectly that such third person knew her equities, it is not demurrable generally for failure to allege that he was not a bona fide purchaser: Farwell v. Johnston, 34 M. 342.

190. A bill which prays for specific performance as the primary remedy, and for compensation as alternative relief merely, is not subject to the objection that it is filed for compensation only: Ibid.

191. A bill to establish a right of way and to enjoin encroachments upon it cannot be sustained where it does not furnish the means for declaring exactly what the right is and the precise locality which it occupies, with the shape and dimensions thereof, and where the proofs show nothing but an oral agreement for its establishment, and such occasional variations in the bounds of the locality as to make it impossible to determine where it originally existed: Fox v. Pierce, 50 M. 500.

As to description of premises, see EQUITY, § 823.

192. A bill to compel payment of the purchase price on a contract of sale is in the nature of a foreclosure bill, and not demurrable as praying a forfeiture, since the court has power to protect all equities when the rights under the contract are determined, and to order a sale, if necessary, for the satisfaction of moneys due: Day v. Cole, 56 M. 294.

193. A bill to obtain payment for land contracted to be sold is not demurrable generally on the ground that complainant does not own the title to all the lands, but that part of it is in one of the defendants; if all parties are in court it is enough, and a demurrer admits them to be if so alleged: Ibid.

194. The objection that a bill for specific performance fails to aver the value of the lands as exceeding $100 is not sustained where it shows that complainants paid more than that sum: Raymond v. Shawboose, 34 M. 142.

195. Where evidence had been taken in the case showing valuable improvements made by complainant on the land in controversy, but there was no allegation in the bill with respect to such improvements, held, that such evidence could not be considered in the decision of the case: Bomier v. Caldwell, 8 M. 463.

196. If the vendee denies that the title is good, or insists upon encumbrances as an objection to performance, he should put the title or incumbrances in issue by his pleadings: Daily v. Litchfield, 10 M. 29.

(c) Decree.

When bill retained for other relief where specific performance is denied, see EQUITY, §§ 98-100.

197. Every decree for the specific performance of an oral contract involving a continuous right necessarily involves the execution of such a document or voucher as will secure it, and specific time fixed within which a release should be made: Nichols v. Marsh, 62 M. 439.

198. A decree for specific performance of an accepted offer to sell lands should not require the vendor to warrant against tax claims or tax deeds: Wilcox v. Cline, 70 M. 517 (June 8, '88).

199. In a suit for the specific performance of a contract for the purchase of the north half of a certain lot bounded on the west by a meandering stream which runs so that the north line of the lot is longer than the south line, if the evidence leaves the dividing line between the halves doubtful the lot will be so divided by an east and west line as to make the two parts equal in quantity; under a bill demanding the north half of the lot, an equal division of the river front is erroneous: Au Grés Boom Co. v. Whitney, 26 M. 42.

200. When specific performance is decreed in favor of one who is still owing something on the contract, he should be ordered to bring the amount into court for the party entitled to it: Stevenson v. Jackson, 40 M. 702.

201. In granting specific performance upon a bill filed by a wife where a homestead right had attached in land held by her husband under a contract of purchase, which contract he had relinquished without her consent, the decree should require conveyance to the husband, subject to a lien in the wife's favor for the amount paid by her in fulfilling the contract: McKee v. Wilcox, 11 M. 358.

202. Where the decree upon a bill for specific performance of a contract to sell land made the purchase money a lien upon the land in defendant's favor, and ordered complainant to assume certain unascertained debts owing jointly by her and by defendant, held, that such debts should be ascertained and excluded in the purchase money due defendant: Johnson v. Fowler, 68 M. 1.

203. Where one bought at a statutory foreclosure sale under an arrangement with the owner of the equity of redemption to give him further time to redeem or to purchase back, and where the arrangement was to pay twelve and one-half per cent. interest to cover original expenses and trouble, and the extra two and one-half per cent. did not exceed $30, payment in accordance with this arrangement was imposed as terms of granting the relief sought: Moote v. Scriven, 33 M. 500.

Further as to interest in decreeing specific performance, see INTEREST, §§ 27, 63, 68.

204. A defendant who has been ordered to execute, etc., a deed with special covenant is not bound to prepare it, and cannot be held as for contempt in disobeying the decree until the deed is presented to him and he has refused to execute it: Berry v. Innes, 35 M. 189.

As to relation back of decree, see EQUITY, § 1340.

Ex parte alteration of decree, see EQUITY, §§ 1382, 1383.

That costs are discretionary, see COSTS, § 168.

No costs against defendant who disclaims, see COSTS, § 183.

STAMPS.

1. The provisions of the act of congress which precluded unstamped instruments being received in evidence had no application to state courts: Clemens v. Conrad, 19 M. 170.

2. And in those courts the want of a stamp does not affect the force of a document as evidence: Sammons v. Holloway, 21 M. 162.

3. The stamp act cannot be applied to the process of state courts. Congress has no power to levy taxes on such process: Fifield v. Close, 15 M. 505.

4. A stamp is not essential to the validity of a promissory note, and the want of a stamp does not put an indorsee upon inquiry: Burson v. Huntington, 21 M. 415.

5. A person being the holder of a draft drawn in August, 1863, made a gift of it causa mortis to her mother; and after her death her administrator, treating the draft as void for want of a sufficient stamp, brought suit against the drawer upon the original consideration. The drawer, defending in the interest of the donee, produced the draft on the trial and placed the requisite stamp upon it, in pursuance of the act of congress of June 30, 1864. It was held that the draft was thereby made valid from its inception, rendering the gift valid, and defeating the plaintiff's right of recovery: Gibson v. Hibbard, 13 M. 214.

6. An instrument not stamped at the time of execution was stamped afterwards by the collector of internal revenue, who appended a certificate as required by the act of congress of 1866. Held, that the instrument was properly stamped, and no inquiry could be gone into of the propriety of the collector's action: Peoria Ins. Co. v. Perkins, 16 M. 380.

7. Where an assignment of a policy of insurance is properly stamped as such, the fact that it purports to authorize the assignee to collect the insurance money in case of loss does not make it necessary to stamp it as a power of attorney also: Ibid.

8. Where a case appealed from a justice had been dismissed in the circuit court because the appeal papers had not been stamped the dismissal was reversed, as the appeal was taken before any act of congress requiring such stamping: Fowler v. Kellum, 14 M. 300.

9. Where the grantee in a deed seeks to recover in ejectment under it, it is competent for defendant, although no party to the deed, to show that a third person caused it to be made to the grantee without consideration; as, in such case, the stamps required would depend upon the value of the land: Groesbeck v. Seeley, 13 M. 329.

10. A stamp upon a mortgage given while the laws requiring securities to be stamped in proportion to their amount were in force raises a strong presumption that the mortgage was not understood to be operative as a security beyond the amount covered by the stamp: Lashbrooks v. Hatheway, 52 M. 124.

STARE DECISIS.

See COURTS, §§ 248-251; TREATIES, § 5.

VOL. II—85

STATE.

That the state of Michigan came into existence when constitution was ratified and state government was organized, see CONSTITUTIONS, §§ 417, 418. And see COURTS, § 156.

As to state's relations with the Michigan State Bank, see BANKS, §§ 82-86; CONSTITUTIONS, §§ 174, 420-423; CONVEYANCES, §§ 211, 216-218.

That state did not become responsible for debts of government stock bank, see BANKS, § 87.

1. The state may sue: Michigan State Bank v. Hastings, W. 9.

2. And when it sues it is limited in its recovery by any defences that might be set up against individuals: Ambler v. Auditor-General, 38 M. 746.

3. When the state brings suit, it no less than other prosecutors must appear on the face of the record to be entitled to prosecute or the proceeding must fail because of plaintiff's irrelatation to the subject of the action: Attorney-General v. Soule, 28 M. 153.

4. The claim of a coroner under H. S. §§ 9593-9597, for fees and expenses incident to an inquest upon the view of the dead body of a stranger, is against the state, which cannot be sued for it; and it is only after an order of allowance has been made by the circuit court (which order may be compelled in a proper case, see MANDAMUS, § 110) that the state treasurer is permitted to pay the claim: Locke v. Speed, 62 M. 408.

That the state cannot be sued against its consent, see CONSTITUTIONS, §§ 419, 420; EQUITY, § 701; PUBLIC LANDS, § 191.

5. The state can be recognized by the courts as a suitor in legal proceedings only through the agents or legal representatives appointed by law, and the appearance of the proper representative can only be attested by the record: People v. Navarre, 22 M. 1.

6. In the absence of statute no action can be brought on behalf of the public except by the proper public agent: Benalleck v. People, 31 M. 200.

And further as to suits and proceedings in behalf of state, see ATTORNEY-GENERAL, QUO WARRANTO.

Costs against state, see COSTS, §§ 267-271, 239.

7. The state loses nothing by laches, even as against one of its municipal subdivisions: Attorney-General v. St. Clair Supervisors, 30 M. 388.

As to estoppels against the state, see ESTOPPEL, §§ 222, 223, 313-315; TOWNSHIPS, §§ 15, 17.

As to when and for what purposes mandamus issues to state boards and officers, see MANDAMUS, §§ 124-154.

That official discretion of executive department of state government is not reviewable, see CERTIORARI, § 83; MANDAMUS, §§ 124-128, 133-135, 137.

8. If the auditor-general issues a warrant excessive in amount, a new one should be taken out; the state treasurer cannot pay the proper amount on the original: Houghton v. State Treasurer, 40 M. 320.

9. In advertising for bids for printing and publishing the state reports, it is not lawful to impose the condition that the work shall be done at the capital: Ayres v. State Board of Auditors, 42 M. 422.

10. The published notice for bids for printing and publishing the supreme court reports should inform bidders at what time the bids will be opened, so that the latter may be present and see that the contract is awarded to the lowest bidder as the law provides: Ibid.

11. A public contract not made as the constitution requires is not protected by the constitution from alteration: Ibid.

12. In receiving proposals for public printing, the board of state auditors is required by law to take from each bidder a bond with sureties conditioned that if the contract is awarded to him he will enter into it or pay damages. Such a bond should be approved before the biddings, and it is improper for the board to leave it for consideration afterwards. But the board having left the bonds without examination until after opening the bids, and the bond of the lowest bidder being defective, held, that it was not the right of other bidders to insist that the board should not suffer the successful competitor to perfect his bond at that time: Detroit Free Press Co. v. State Board of Auditors, 47 M. 135.

13. Where the law requires the public printing to be let to the lowest bidder, an advertisement inviting proposals for doing fifty or more kinds of work at rates to be specified for each, but all the proposals of a bidder to be taken together as a single bid, and which gives no basis on which it is to be determined which bid in the aggregate is the lowest, does not accomplish the purpose of the law, and therefore is not in compliance with it: Ibid.

14. Where different kinds of public work have no necessary connection with each other, quære whether bids therefor should not be entirely separate. But the board of auditors has undoubtedly considerable discretionary authority in determining how bids for state printing shall be invited; and as there are some conveniences in having all the work done by the same person, it cannot be said, as matter of law, that they have no right to combine the proposals: Ibid.

Further as to state and state officers, see these headings in the INDEX.

As to pleading statutes, see PLEADINGS, §§ 261-276.

I. IN GENERAL.

- (a) What are; what forms part of.

1. The enactments of the legislature are the only instruments that, under the constitution, can properly be called laws; a city charter is a state law, and confers statutory authority: Fennell v. Bay City, 36 M. 186.

2. Publication with the statutes does not give the effect of law to a bill which, though signed by the governor, was not constitutionally passed by the legislature: Attorney-General v. Joy, 55 M. 94.

3. A claim that a clause in a bill as drafted was in fact left out by amendment and was inadvertently retained in the statute as passed cannot be accepted where the legislative journals do not conclusively make out the fact: Smith v. Eaton Supervisors, 56 M. 217.

4. Where there is a discrepancy between an original law on file and the printed copy thereof the former will govern: Hulburt v. Merriam, 8 M. 144.

5. So held where two codifications made by legislative authority had followed the printed copy: Ibid. (Contra, Pease v. Peck, 18 How. 595.)

6. H. S. § 1696 permits petitions for laying out drains to be presented to any drain commissioner by any five or more freeholders "residing in [any one or more] townships in which such drains [drain] or the lands to be drained thereby may be [situated]." Held, that the bracketed words, which were not in the law as approved by the governor, have no proper place in the statute, and cannot be construed as authority to a township drain commissioner to act outside of his township: Drain Commissioner v. Baxter, 57 M. 127.

(b) When inoperative.

As to validity generally, see CONSTITUTIONS.

7. A statute is not enforceable unless it furnishes adequate means to secure the purposes for which it was enacted: Attorney-General v. Lawton, 80 M. 386; Underwood v. People, 82 M. 1; Lloyd v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 56 M. 286; Hauck's Case, 70 M. 396.

8. A statute which authorizes a city to open and widen streets according to the procedure therein prescribed, but which prescribes no procedure for widening is, so far, inoperative: Chaffee's Appeal, 56 M. 244.

9. A clause in a city charter remains inoperative to change the general law where the charter makes no provision for carrying it out, and where the common law cannot supply the omission: People v. Smith, 9 M. 193.

10. A statute whereby parties' rights are conclusively determined after a specified period is inoperative where the only remedy provided for testing such rights within that period is void: Quinlon v. Rogers, 12 M. 168.

11. A section of a statute becomes inoperative where it is a part of and dependent on a new and unconstitutional system created by the statute: Rice v. Auditor-General, 30 M. 12.

As to effect of partial invalidity of statute, see, further, CONSTITUTIONS, §§ 676-689.

(c) Time of taking effect.

12. A statute need not be published before taking effect unless the constitution or statutes provide otherwise: Stevenson v. Bay City, 28 M. 44.

13. A statute not ordered to take effect at another time does not become of force until ninety days after the final adjournment of the legislature: Fosdick v. Van Huse, 21 M. 567; Wohlscheid v. Bergrath, 46 M. 46.

14. A law passed Feb. 4, 1859, providing for an election "at the annual township election to be held in April next." The law, under the constitution, did not take effect until May 16, 1859. Held, by two of the justices, that to give the law any force it must be held to apply to the next annual election after the date last mentioned: Rice v. Ruddiman, 10 M. 125; Carleton v. People, 10 M. 250.

15. A statute passed to take effect at a future day is to be understood as speaking from the time it goes into operation, and not from the time of its passage. The intervening period is allowed to enable the public to become acquainted with its provisions; but until it becomes operative as a law, they cannot be compelled to govern their actions by it: Price v. Hopkin, 18 M. 318.

16. The revision of the statutes passed in 1846, but which did not go into effect until March 1, 1847, had no force until the latter date; and its provisions could not affect rights acquired under a mortgage executed in January, 1847: Cargill v. Power, 1 M. 369.

(d) Notice and knowledge.

As to judicial notice of statutes, see EVIDENCE, §§ 972-984.

17. All persons are bound to take notice of a public statute: Le Roy v. East Saginaw R. Co., 18 M. 293.

18. All persons must take notice of a statute that enlarges a city; so that the illegality of a tax based on an invalid enlargement would be a defect apparent to all, and title would not be clouded: Curtis v. East Saginaw, 35 M. 508.

19. One whose property is assessed under an unconstitutional law must be presumed to know that the law is void and that a sale for the tax does not cloud his title: Detroit v. Martin, 34 M. 170.

As to effect of ignorance of unconstitutionality, see CONSTITUTIONS, § 690.

20. A statute is not operative as notice from its passage but from its taking effect: Cargill v. Power, 1 M. 369; Price v. Hopkin, 13 M. 318.

21. All who assume to contract with a public officer letting work are bound to take notice of the statutory regulations: Mackenzie v. Baraga, 39 M. 554.

As to the general presumption of knowledge of the law, see EVIDENCE, §§ 1527-1537.

II. CONSTRUCTION.

(a) In general; legislative intent.

As to particular terms, see WORDS AND PHRASES.

22. It is implied in all statutes that they shall be read in accordance with the regular rules of interpretation, and apply to such persons or things as fall naturally within their scope: Crane v. Reeder, 21 M. 24, 66.

23. The object of construction is to ascertain and carry into effect the intention of the legislature: People v. Oakland County Bank, 1 D. 282; Malonny v. Mahar, 1 M. 26; Niles v. Rhodes, 7 M. 374; Whipple v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 26 M. 342; Peninsular R. Co. v. Duncan, 28 M. 130; Albany & B. Mining Co. v. Auditor-General, 37 M. 391.

24. And that intent, when manifest, must not be defeated by construction: Parsons v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 37 M. 287.

25. The legislative purpose appearing it is not to be defeated by technical constructions: French v. Lansing, 30 M. 378.

26. But must be carried into effect by the courts if practicable: Brooks v. Hill, 1 M. 118.

27. The courts will give a statute such a construction as will carry out the intention of the legislature, where that intent is obvious and practicable: People v. Plumsted, 2 M. 465.

28. A construction that will result in great inconvenience is to be avoided unless the meaning of the legislature is plain, in which case it must be obeyed: Wales v. Lyon, 2 M. 276.

29. Where the provisions of a statute do not leave its construction doubtful, an argument based on the inconvenience attending such construction can have no weight: Folkerts v. Power, 42 M. 283.

30. Where the legislature possesses full power over a subject the question of the effect of what it has assumed to do must be a question of intent and construction: Detroit Street R. Co. v. Guthard, 51 M. 180.

31. Courts cannot pass upon the wisdom, policy or equity of valid statutes: Crane v. Reeder, 23 M. 323; Reithmiller v. People, 44 M. 280; Sheley v. Detroit, 45 M. 431.

32. The legislature will choose its own methods in collecting information to guide its legislative discretion, and the courts must assume that they are suitable and proper and lead to proper results. The legislature is not to be supposed to have acted improperly, unadvisedly or from any other than public motives under any circumstances, when acting within the limits of its authority: Flint & F. P. R. Co. v. Woodhull, 25 M. 99.

33. The intent to be sought for in a statute is that of the particular legislature which passed it: Dewar v. People, 40 M. 401.

34. The intent of the legislature in passing a law is to be sought in the law itself: Brooks v. Hill, 1 M. 118.

35. The construction to be put upon a statute must be such as is warranted by or at least not repugnant to the words of the act: Green v. Graves, 1 D. 351; Leoni v. Taylor, 20 M. 148.

36. The intent of the legislature must be gathered from the language used to express it; and where the language is clear and explicit and susceptible of but one meaning, and there is nothing incongruous in the act, the court is bound to suppose the legislature intended what the language imports: Barstow v. Smith, W. 394; Leoni v. Taylor, 20 M. 148; Swartwout v. Michigan Air Line R. Co., 24 M. 389; Whipple v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 26 M. 342; Wilt v. Cutler, 38 M. 189.

37. It is only where a statute is ambiguous in its terms that courts exercise the power of so controlling its language as to give effect to what they may suppose to be the intention of the legislature: Bidwell v. Whitaker, 1 M. 469.

38. Where the object of the legislature is plain and unequivocal, courts ought to adopt such a construction as will best effectuate the intention of the lawgiver: Green v. Graves, 1 D. 351.

39. But the courts are not at liberty, in order to effectuate what they may suppose to have been the intention of the legislature, to put upon the statute a construction not supported by the words, though the consequences should be to defeat the purposes of the act: Ibid.; Leoni v. Taylor, 20 M. 148.

40. A statute cannot be extended by construction beyond the obvious import of its language: Morrill v. Seymour, 3 M. 64; Meister v. People, 31 M. 99.

41. Where the language of a statute is clear and explicit, no other than a literal construction should be given to it: People v. Plumsted, 2 M. 465.

42. Where the provisions of a section of a statute are clear and unambiguous, the literal sense must prevail, unless it is obvious from a survey of the whole act that by such a construction the intention of the legislature would be defeated: Watkins v. Atkinson, 2 M. 151.

43. The real intention of the legislature, when accurately ascertained, prevails over the literal sense of terms, especially when a strict adherence to the letter would lead to palpable injustice, contradiction or absurdity: Green v. Graves, 1 D. 351.

44. The sense of a term used in a statute is to be determined from the context and the apparent object of the provision, as indicated by the nature of the case and other statutes in pari materia: People v. McKinney, 10 M. 54.

45. A statute must be construed with reference not only to its language, but its object, as gathered from its various parts and other statutes in pari materia: Washburn v. People, 10 M. 373.

46. The abstract meaning of particular words or their strict grammatical construction will not alone govern; but they must be applied to the subject-matter and general scope and purport of the whole act, and be considered with some reference to the evil sought to be remedied, and in the light of other statutes in pari materia, as well as the principles of the common law: Whipple v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 26 M. 342.

47. The occasion and the reason of the enactment; the letter of the act, whether words be used in their proper or in a technical sense; the context, the spirit of the act, and whether in its nature remedial or penal, are all to be considered: Attorney-General v. Bank of Michigan, H. 315.

48. Where the words of a statute are not explicit the intent is to be learned by considering the occasion and necessity of the law — the mischief felt and the remedy in view: Green v. Graves, 1 D. 351; People v. Plumsted, 2 M. 465; Sibley v. Smith, 2 M. 486.

49. The cause or reason of the act may either be collected from the statute itself or discovered from extrinsic circumstances: Green v. Graves, 1 D. 351.

50. A construction required by a strict and literal interpretation should not be adopted where the legislative intent would be perverted if the language used were tested by nice rules of art: Peninsular R. Co. v. Duncan, 28 M. 130.

51. If the intent of the legislature is intelligibly expressed the courts will carry it out, and will not allow it to be defeated by verbal criticism: Chippewa Supervisors v. Auditor-General, 65 M. 408.

52. Where one part of an act is equivocal, other portions may be resorted to as guides: Attorney-General v. Bank of Michigan, H. 315.

53. The legislative intent is to be gathered not from a particular expression or provision, but from a view of the whole statute and by comparing one portion with another: Attorney-General v. Bank of Michigan, H. 315; Joy v. Thompson, 1 D. 378; Bronson v. Newberry, 2 D. 88; Wales v. Lyon, 2 M. 276; People v. Plumsted, 2 M. 465; Sibley v. Smith, 2 M. 486; Seymour v. Peters, 67 M. 415 (Oct. 27, '87).

54. Provisions of a city charter in regard to refunding illegal taxes must be taken together with those relating to re-assessments: Louden v. East Saginaw, 41 M. 18.

55. The inferences to be drawn from a literal interpretation of one section of a statute must be controlled by clear and express language found in other sections, although the policy of the act may to some extent be defeated: Bidwell v. Whitaker, 1 M. 469.

56. The application of particular provisions is not to be extended beyond the general scope and object of the statute, unless such extension was obviously designed: Ticknor's Estate, 13 M. 44.

57. A statute is to be so construed as to give, if possible, full effect to all its provisions: Malonny v. Mahar, 1 M. 26; Swartwout v. Michigan Air Line R. Co., 24 M. 389.

58. Statutes should be so construed as to produce the least conflict, and so as to harmonize as far as possible all their provisions: Galpin v. Abbott, 6 M. 17, 41.

59. Effect is to be given, if possible, to every clause and sentence; and it is the duty of courts, so far as practicable, to reconcile the different provisions of a statute so as to make the whole of it consistent and harmonious; and where this is impossible to give effect to the manifest intent of the legislature: Attorney-General v. Detroit & E. P. R. Co., 2 M. 188; People v. Burns, 5 M. 114.

60. In order to give effect to a statute, courts will sometimes transpose sentences so as to place them in their just connection with the sentences to which they relate: Detroit v. Chaffee, 70 M. 80.

61. A construction rendering any part of a statute nugatory should not be adopted if any reasonable construction can be put upon it which would give effect to the whole: Smith v. Jones, 15 M. 281.

62. Where a statute admits of any other rational construction it is not to be supposed that any section was inserted with no intelligible purpose: People v. Ingham Supervisors, 20 M. 95.

63. A construction which would render useless a proceeding for which the statute provides, should not be adopted, as it would impute folly to the legislature: Peninsular R. Co. v. Duncan, 28 M. 180.

64. Every word in a statute must be presumed, where possible, to have some force and meaning, and to have been made use of for some purpose: Potter v. Safford, 50 M. 46.

65. In case of an apparent conflict between different subdivisions of the same section of the statute the entire section must be examined, and such a construction put upon it as, if possible, will harmonize and give effect to the various provisions according to the evident intent, so far as the same may be gathered from the language used: Burke v. Burke, 84 M. 451.

66. A term used in a statute may be given an enlarged or restricted meaning as the intention of the legislature will best be carried into effect: Carne v. Litchfield, 2 M. 340.

67. General words may be restrained or enlarged so as to effectuate the intention of the law-maker: Welch v. Stowell, 2 D. 332.

68. General words in a statute must receive a general construction; and if there be no express exception the court can create none: Ten Eyck v. Wing, 1 M. 40.

69. Special terms used in a statute do not enlarge but limit the force of the general words used: Detroit v. Putnam, 45 M. 263.

70. Where no intention to the contrary appears, general words used after specific terms are to be confined to things, purposes or persons ejusdem generis with those previously enumerated: American Transp. Co. v. Moore, 5 M. 368, 24 How. (U. S.) 1; McDade v. People, 29 M. 50; Board of Education v. Detroit, 30 M. 505; Brooks v. Cook, 44 M. 617.

71. Said rule is especially applicable in the interpretation of statutes defining crimes and regulating their punishment: McDade v. People, 29 M. 50.

72. But said rule does not apply where the statute does not attempt an enumeration in particular terms, but where all the terms used are alike general; so held of H. S. § 9161, as to false pretences, etc. (see CRIMES, § 363): Higler v. People, 44 M. 290.

73. The rule expressio unius est exclusio alterius is by no means universal, and requires great caution in its application; and where, without it, the legislative intent as gathered from the whole statute is clear, it does not apply: Niles v. Rhodes, 7 M. 874, 886.

74. Where a statute explicitly adopts, in reference to the acknowledgment or proof of deeds, the law of the place where acknowledged or proved, it is presumable that if it intended to adopt the law of the place of execution that intention would also have been expressed: Galpin v. Abbott, 6 M. 17.

75. Where a statute made special provision for the compensation of certain officers, the omission to provide compensation to other officers therein named was held to have been intentional, and to preclude them from pay: Perry v. Cheboygan, 55 M. 250.

76. The words of a statute are to be taken in their ordinary signification and import: Green v. Graves, 1 D. 351.

77. Phrases in a statute are not to be given a sense different from common and approved usage: Leoni v. Taylor, 20 M. 148.

78. The natural import of the words of any statute, according to the common use of them when applied to the subject-matter of the act, is to be taken as expressing the intention of the legislature, unless the intention so resulting from the ordinary import of the words be repugnant to sound acknowledged public policy: People v. May, 8 M. 593.

79. The words of a statute must receive a construction consistent with the ordinary import of the words employed, unless a different one is obviously contemplated: People v. Auditor-General, 7 M. 84.

80. In all cases where a common-law definition is employed, it must be presumed that it is employed in the common-law sense, unless there is distinct and satisfactory evidence to the contrary: Pitcher v. People, 16 M. 143.

81. If the subject of the statute relates to technical matters, the words used are to be construed technically, unless from the statute itself it appears that the terms are used in a more popular sense: People v. May, 8 M. 598.

82. Words which have acquired a well-defined technical meaning are to be understood in their technical sense, especially when employed by way of definition: Pitcher v. People, 16 M. 142.

83. Punctuation alone is an unsafe guide in construing a statute: Campau v. Dewey, 9 M. 381.

(b) Of revisions and compilations.

84. It is a general rule that where a statute is amended, either by the addition or omission of words or sentences, the law-maker must be presumed to have had some object in view—to have intended to effect some change—and that courts in construing such amended laws should seek for that intent, and not render void by construction parts added or revive parts omitted; but it is doubtful whether, in the construction of revised or entire new drafts of statute laws, any such rule should be applied: Strong v. Daniels, 3 M. 466.

85. The whole body of laws designated as the "Revised Statutes" (of 1846) was passed as one act and must be construed together as such: Perry v. Hepburne, 4 M. 165.

86. The Revised Statutes constitute but one act and all provisions must stand together: People v. Mayworm, 5 M. 146; Brayton v. Merithew, 56 M. 166.

87. In interpreting a provision of the Revised Statutes all such parts as relate to the same subject are to be taken into view: Malonny v. Mahar, 1 M. 26.

88. Different chapters of the Revised Statutes form parts of one entire code passed at the same session of the legislature, and must be construed together as one act: Shannon v. People, 5 M. 36, 50.

89. The Revised Statutes constitute in law but one statute, so that different chapters modify each other: Bewick v. Alpena Harbor Co., 89 M. 700.

90. The compiled laws have not the force of a revision; that is prohibited by the constitution: Ibid.; Stewart v. Riopelle, 48 M. 177.

91. The compiled laws are not a re-enactment or an original enactment of the provisions therein contained; they have no force except as a compilation of existing statutes, properly arranged but not altered: Stewart v. Riopelle, 48 M. 177.

(c) With reference to the title.

For constitutional requirements as to title, see CONSTITUTIONS, §§ 541-609, 621. And see REGISTERS OF DEEDS, § 5.

92. As the title of an act must express its purpose, the act may be construed in the light of its title if they are not incompatible: Reithmiller v. People, 44 M. 280.

93. A statute is to be construed in view of its title and its lawful purposes, assuming as far as possible that broad language should be confined to lawful objects: Allor v. Wayne Auditors, 43 M. 76.

94. A repealing act is to be read in the light of its title: People v. Hobson, 48 M. 27.

95. In case of doubt the title of a statute may be resorted to in aid of its interpretation, and may afford a conclusive solution: Smith v. Auditor-General, 20 M. 898.

96. Under our constitution the title of an act is significant and usually controlling in determining its scope: McKellar v. Detroit, 57 M. 153.

97. The operation of a statute must be restricted to the object expressed in the title: Baptist Missionary Union v. Peck, 10 M. 341; Ryerson v. Ulley, 16 M. 269; Bates v. Nelson, 49 M. 459.

98. Though the terms of a statute are general, they are restricted by a title which is specific in its reference to a particular class: Booth v. Eddy, 83 M. 245.

99. A statute is to be so construed as to confine its operation to the purview of its title: Bissell v. Wayne Probate Judge, 58 M. 237. That a prospective title precludes retrospective effect, see infra, § 249.

100. Nor can the operation be made more extensive by so defining the title in the body of the act as to make it cover more than the natural and proper meaning of the words will warrant: Northwestern Manuf. Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 58 M. 381.

101. The constitution does not, however, require that a statute shall have no operation further than its title absolutely expresses: People v. Wands, 23 M. 385.

(d) With reference to common law.

102. Statutes are to be construed with reference to the common law, and it is never to be presumed that the legislature intended to make any innovation upon the common law further than was necessary to carry the act into effect: Wales v. Lyon, 2 M. 276; Shannon v. People, 5 M. 71; Crane v. Reeder, 22 M. 322; Whipple v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 26 M. 342.

103. If the apparent meaning of the statute is opposed to well-settled and fundamental principles of the common law, such meaning should be restrained or enlarged accordingly: Wales v. Lyon, 2 M. 276.

104. But the manifest intent of the legislature is not to be resisted because the statute is in derogation of the common law: Sibley v. Smith, 2 M. 436.

105. And common-law rules cannot override statutes: Rogers v. Port Huron & L. M. R. Co., 45 M. 460.

That statutes in derogation of the common law are construed strictly, see infra, §§ 181-186.

(e) With reference to the constitution.

106. A construction, if practicable, is to be put upon a statute which will be in harmony with the constitution, and not one which would render the statute ineffectual: Tabor v. Cook, 15 M. 322.

107. Where two different constructions of a statute are possible, one of which is consistent with the constitution, while the other is inconsistent, the former is to be preferred as the one presumptively intended by the legislature: Motz v. Detroit, 18 M. 495; Grand Rapids Booming Co. v. Jarvis, 30 M. 306.

108. The legislature will be presumed to have intended the language of a statute to be used in a constitutional sense: Grand Rapids Booming Co. v. Jarvis, 30 M. 308.

109. Courts are bound, whenever possible, so to construe statutes as to give them validity and a reasonable operation: Van Fleet v. Van Fleet, 49 M. 610.

110. No unlawful intent will be inferred except where it is too plain to be mistaken: Allor v. Wayne Auditors, 48 M. 76.

111. A statute repealing a general law authorizing the formation of corporations is to be construed so as to make it valid rather than invalid: Bewick v. Alpena Harbor Co., 39 M. 700.

As to passing on constitutionality of statute, see CONSTITUTIONS, VI, (d), 2.

112. Charters and local laws and regulations must be construed in conformity with constitutional principles and in harmony with the general laws of the land: Frazee's Case, 63 M. 396.

113. The meaning of a statute is not enlarged by a subsequent change in the constitution: Dewar v. People, 40 M. 401.

114. And where a meaning claimed for a statute could not have existed when the act was passed, being forbidden by the constitution, a change in the constitution does not effectuate such meaning: Mount Pleasant v. Vansice, 43 M. 361.

115. An unconstitutional statute is not validated by amending the constitution so as to confer the powers which the statute sought to give: Dullam v. Willson, 53 M. 392.

116. Void legislation is to be regarded as absolutely void until the legislature, after obtaining authority, re-enacts it: Fenn v. Kinsey, 45 M. 446.

(f) With reference to other statutes.

117. The prior law on the subject is to be considered in arriving at the true construction of a later statute: Tabor v. Cook, 15 M. 322.

118. A new law cannot be controlled by an old one unless such an intent is clearly expressed: Chapoton v. Detroit, 38 M. 636.

119. Where there are two acts or provisions, one of which is special and particular and certainly includes the matter in question, and the other is general, and would, if standing alone, include the same matter, and thus conflict with the special act or provision, the special act must be taken as intended to constitute an exception to the general, especially when such conflicting provisions are contemporaneous in their passage: Crane v. Reeder, 22 M. 322.

120. A specially-directed and more recent statutory provision must be taken as an exception to an earlier general one: Dewey v. Central Car & Manuf. Co., 42 M. 399.

121. Village charters are not to be construed as designed to encroach upon the general law further than the plain terms show an intent to do so: Merrill v. Kalamazoo, 35 M. 211.

122. Statutes in pari materia are to be taken together in ascertaining the intention of the legislature: Joy v. Thompson, 1 D. 373; Willard v. Longstreet, 2 D. 172; Malonny v. Mahar, 1 M. 26.

123. Statutes in pari materia—those having relation to any particular class of persons or class of duties—are to be construed together: People v. May, 3 M. 598.

124. Statutes in pari materia often shed much light upon the true construction of a particular statute in a doubtful case: Galpin v. Abbott, 6 M. 17, 34.

125. Other statutes in pari materia may aid in determining the sense in which a term is used in a statutory provision: People v. McKinney, 10 M. 54, 84.

126. In order to ascertain the real intent it is often necessary to consider the provision in question in connection with other statutes: Whipple v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 26 M. 342.

127. Where two statutes simultaneously enacted relate to officers of courts, and to the persons who may prosecute and defend suits in them, they must receive such a construction as will render them consistent with each other: People v. May, 3 M. 598.

128. Statutes in pari materia should be construed together as one act; so held of the chapters in R. S. 1846 relating to exceptions and writs of error in civil and in criminal causes: Shannon v. People, 5 M. 36.

129. H. S. §§ 9548-9556, providing for trying criminals upon informations, must be construed with reference to other statutes referring to criminal prosecutions: Washburn v. People, 10 M. 372.

130. Acts in pari materia considered in construing a statute appropriating lands for the construction of a state road: People v. State Land Office Commissioner, 23 M. 270.

131. The provisions of H. S. § 1041, making taxes upon real estate a charge against the person owing the same on the second Monday of

May of the year in which they are assessed, construed in connection with previous statutes in pari materia: Harrington v. Hilliard, 27 M. 271.

132. For the purpose of determining how far the absence in the registry of a deed of any mark or device indicating a seal, or of any statement of the register that the original was sealed, would affect the validity of the record entry as evidence of title, the contemporaneous statutes governing the execution and sealing of deeds and their registry are regarded as in pari materia: Starkweather v. Martin, 23 M. 471.

133. When the law declares that a debtor's disposal of his property with intent to defraud his creditors shall be void at their instance, and at the same time declares that specific property of his shall be exempt as against their adverse claims, these provisions are in pari materia, and must be construed together; and the latter provision must be held to except this exempt property from the operation of the former provision: Smith v. Rumsey, 38 M. 188.

134. A statute forbidding sales of liquor on legal holidays, and other acts concerning privileged days, are in pari materia, and are to be considered together in determining what days are contemplated: Reithmiller v. People, 44 M. 280.

135. R. S. 1846, p. 227, § 71 (C. L. 1871, § 2641; see H. S. § 5039), in regard to changing school-district bounds, and the act of 1871 (C. L. 1871, § 8725; see H. S. § 5185) concerning alteration of graded school districts, are in pari materia, and must be considered together, and the meaning of the later enactment determined by comparing it with the other: Simpkins v. Ward, 45 M. 559.

136. Statutory provisions relating to judgment creditors of corporations and to receivers thereof construed together as in pari materia: Turnbull v. Prentiss Lumber Co., 55 M. 387, 394.

(g) Language adopted from other statutes.

137. Phrases adopted from former statutes are usually to be taken as they were previously construed: People v. Tyler, 7 M. 161.

138. A statute adopting by reference parts of another statute must be construed precisely as if such adopted provisions had been embodied in it; and such a reference to a section of another statute cannot broaden or enlarge the scope of the language of such a section beyond what it would import if literally re-enacted in the new statute in the place it was designed to fill: Clay v. Penmoyer Creek Imp. Co., 34 M. 204.

139. Where specific regulations in a general law are adopted in a local law by words of general reference, subsequent changes therein are not necessarily adopted also, unless the intent to do so is clear: Darmstaetter v. Moloney, 45 M. 621.

140. An English statute adopted from the statutes of New York, and the meaning of which had been settled by a long course of judicial decisions, must be presumed to have been adopted in the same sense and with the same extent of application — so far as no alteration is made — which had been given to it by the courts in England and in New York: Shaw v. Hoffman, 25 M. 162.

141. It is presumed that in adopting provisions from the statutes of another state the legislature was aware of the judicial construction they had received in that state, and that the intent was in accordance with such a construction: Stadler v. Moors, 9 M. 264.

142. As a general rule it may be inferred that the legislature, in adopting a statute from another state which has there been judicially construed, intended to give it the same interpretation it had there received: Drennan v. People, 10 M. 169.

143. Our legislature, in adopting our justices' act mainly from the state of New York, may reasonably be supposed to have intended to adopt it with the construction settled by the practice and course of decisions there: Harrison v. Sager, 27 M. 476.

144. Our statute of partition, having been adopted in substance from that of New York, is presumed to have been adopted with the construction previously given to it by the courts of that state in regard to a wife's right to be made a party: Greiner v. Klein, 28 M. 12.

145. Our probate and limitation laws were adopted from Massachusetts with the construction put upon them by the courts of that state: Campau v. Gillett, 1 M. 416.

146. In adopting, in 1838, from the Massachusetts statute the provision in H. S. § 1456, requiring persons travelling in a highway to "drive to the right of the middle of the travelled part" of the road, the legislature presumably adopted it with the meaning as previously settled by the courts of that state: Daniels v. Clegg, 28 M. 32.

147. And a contrary interpretation subsequently adopted by those courts will not be followed here: Ibid.

148. The rule that a statute adopted from another state is adopted with the judicial construction there given it is not always observed, and never where such construction and the statute construed are repugnant to our constitution: Risser v. Hoyt, 58 M. 185.

(h) Legislative interpretation.

149. A legislative interpretation of old laws has no judicial force; whether right or wrong must be determined by the statutes themselves: Frey v. Michie, 68 M. 323.

150. Legislative construction of past legislation has judicial force for the future only, yet it may properly be considered for the light it throws on doubtful language: Drain Commissioner v. Baxter, 57 M. 127.

151. The language of the saving clause in a repealing act is to be construed in the light of a state policy that has existed for a quarter of a century in regard to the subject-matter; and while such state policy will not prevail over a clear and distinct enactment, it may go far to explain any ambiguous or doubtful language: Blackwood v. Van Vleit, 80 M. 118.

152. Legislative recognition in a statute of the previous existence of a law cannot so operate upon the past as to give a previous existence to a law which had not existed in fact: Trask v. Green, 9 M. 358.

153. The actual state of the law is not changed by any misapprehension of the legislature concerning the real fact; and legislation enacted on the assumption that a certain remedy exists cannot be construed as establishing such remedy: Van Norman v. Jackson Circuit Judge, 45 M. 204.

154. That the legislature has proceeded to enact a law on an inaccurate opinion of the true meaning and effect of an earlier statute cannot change the earlier law; so, after the passage of act 65 of 1877, providing that a wife might bar her dower by a separate deed to whomsoever was the holder of the legal title, it was held that a previous release of her dower to her husband was valid in view of the married woman's act of 1855: Rhoades v. Davis, 51 M. 306.

That a statute may be confirmed by the subsequent legislative recognition of it, without express confirmation, see CONSTITUTIONS, § 526.

(i) Practical construction.

155. The general practice should have some weight in the construction of a statute: Shannon v. People, 5 M. 36, 49.

156. The practical construction of a law by long, notorious and unquestioned usage will be regarded in construing it: Cameron v. Merchants', etc. Bank, 87 M. 240.

157. Long practical construction of an important statute as valid, and acquiescence in and reliance on the faith of it, will outweigh any merely technical objections to its constitutionality based on a want of precision in setting forth its purpose in its title: Continental Improvement Co. v. Phelps, 47 M. 299.

158. Much respect is due to practical construction when it does no violence to language and has been so long continued as to show general acquiescence: Employers' Liability Co. v. Insurance Commissioner, 64 M. 614.

159. Contemporary construction of a statute, if general and acquiesced in by all concerned, is entitled to respect: Smith v. Eaton Supervisors, 56 M. 217.

160. But where it was claimed that a provision in a city charter making the mayor a member of the county board of supervisors was an inadvertence, the fact that for three years the mayor's predecessors had not sought to compel the recognition of their right to sit with the board was not entitled to much weight as a contemporary construction: Ibid.

161. The uniform understanding of the public, and the uniform practice of the executive branch of the government corresponding with such understanding, should be held of equal force and obligation with judicial or legislative construction: People v. May, 3 M. 598.

162. The reception of and long acquiescence in a statute as authoritatively published may justly be treated as a ratification of it in that form by the sovereign people: Pease v. Peck, 18 How. (U. S.) 595.

163. Long practical construction by an executive department, especially when coupled with legislative sanction, should have weight in the construction of a statute: Clark v. Mowyer, 5 M. 462.

164. The construction placed by an executive department upon a statute affecting the performance of its duties is not lightly to be questioned, especially when it has become established by long usage and relates to matters of form only. But practical construction must not be allowed to defeat the manifest purpose of the statute: Westbrook v. Miller, 56 M. 148.

165. Where a statute concerning the administration of tax-collectors' oaths has been uniformly construed in a certain way by the state and county authorities, and the construction has become a rule of property, many titles depending upon it, the maxim communis error facit jus may be invoked if the statute is doubtful: Malonny v. Mahar, 1 M. 26.

166. A construction placed by former com.

missioners of insurance upon a statute relating to foreign companies is not compulsory upon a present officer where the law has not been in force long enough to make it evident that such construction has been brought to the attention of the various governmental departments and been approved by their acquiescence: Employers' Liability Assurance Co. v. Insurance Commissioner, 64 M. 614.

167. The practical construction given by the interior department of the general government, in reliance upon the uniform opinions of the attorney-general's office, to a statute granting lands, should be followed by the state authorities until reversed by the federal courts: Johnson v. Ballou, 28 M. 379.

168. If a city has obtained money on a particular construction of a statutory provision, and then adopts a different construction to avoid payment, it is proper in case of doubt to give some weight to the first construction: Port Huron v. McCall, 46 M. 565.

169. A practical construction put by the members of a city's common council upon their charter powers in appointing certain officers by majority vote of members elect, followed: Baker v. Port Huron Police Commissioners, 62 M. 327.

170. Long practical construction and acquiescence create a presumption of validity: People v. Hurst, 41 M. 328; Stockle v. Silsbee, 41 M. 615.

(j) Reasonable construction.

171. A statute should be given a reasonable construction: Kephart v. Farmers', etc. Bank, 4 M. 602; Waterman R. E. Exchange v. Stephens, 70 M. — (June 22, '89).

172. Every city charter should be rationally construed: Torrent v. Muskegon, 47 M. 115.

173. Where the words are not explicit the intention is to be taken or presumed according to what is consonant to reason and good discretion: Green v. Graves, 1 D. 351; Sibley v. Smith, 2 M. 496.

(k) Liberal construction.

174. A remedial statute should be liberally construed for the advancement of the remedy: Shannon v. People, 5 M. 36; De Vries v. Conklin, 22 M. 255.

175. The statute enabling married women to make contracts, etc., is remedial, and should be construed liberally to effectuate its general purpose: De Vries v. Conklin, 22 M. 255.

176. Statutes exempting property from execution are remedial, and should be construed liberally for the debtor's benefit: Alvord v. Lent, 23 M. 369; Stewart v. Welton, 32 M. 56; Fisher v. McIntyre, 66 M. 681.

177. Such statutes are beneficial and are to be construed fairly and sensibly: Rosenthal v. Scott, 41 M. 632.

178. Hence the statute exempting property from execution is to be construed as exempting the same from garnishment: Wilson v. Bartholomew, 45 M. 41.

179. Homestead laws are to be construed liberally to effect the benevolent purpose in view: Barber v. Rorabeck, 36 M. 399; Lozo v. Sutherland, 38 M. 168; Bouchard v. Bourassa, 57 M. 8.

180. The policy of a statute should not be defeated by construing it liberally: Bachelor v. Brown, 47 M. 366.

181. Statutes in derogation of the common law are to be construed strictly: Sibley v. Smith, 2 M. 496; Tannahill v. Tuttle, 3 M. 104, 120; Maynards v. Cornwell, 3 M. 309; Brown v. Fifield, 4 M. 322; James v. Howard, 4 M. 446; Tong v. Marvin, 15 M. 60, 72.

182. Hence, the principle that every grant of power carries with it the usual and necessary means for the exercise of that power, and that the power to convey is implied in the power to sell, does not apply in the construction of statutes that are in derogation of the common law, and the effect of which is to divest a citizen of his real estate: Sibley v. Smith, 2 M. 496.

183. As to statutes in reference to tax sales the rule of construction is no more strict or liberal than generally; in all cases alike the legislative intent governs: Clark v. Mowyer, 5 M. 462.

184. Statutes that point out new modes of procedure, and especially where their effect is to deprive a citizen of his property, must be construed strictly: James v. Howard, 4 M. 446.

185. Statutes that attempt, in derogation of the common law, to create a liability cannot be enlarged or extended by construction: Detroit v. Putnam, 45 M. 263; Detroit v. Chaffee, 70 M. 80.

186. Statutory provisions permitting the summary enforcement of private charges, such as mechanics' liens, on property without the assent of the owner or judicial sanction, being in derogation of the common law, cannot be extended in their operation beyond the plain and fair sense of the terms in which they are expressed: Wagar v. Briscoe, 38 M. 587.

That the statutory provisions relating to attachments are strictly construed, see ATTACHMENT, § 1. So as to GARNISHMENT: See that title, §§ 2-9.

187. Statutes of limitation are not to be defeated by undue strictness of construction: Ten Eyck v. Wing, 1 M. 40; Toll v. Wright, 37 M. 93.

188. But are to be construed with the same favor as other statutes to effect the legislative intent: Gorman v. Newaygo Circuit Judge, 27 M. 138. And see 36 M. 487; 4 M. 508; 17 M. 28.

189. A concession from the state remitting a penalty for non-payment of taxes should not be defeated by strictly construing the statute: Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Saginaw County Treasurer, 32 M. 260.

190. Laws exempting property from taxation are in derogation of equal rights, and must be construed strictly: Detroit Young Men's Society v. Detroit, 3 M. 172, 182.

191. And in construing such statutes the narrowest meaning is to be taken that will fully carry out the legislative intent: East Saginaw Manuf. Co. v. East Saginaw, 19 M. 259, 279.

192. All reasonable inferences of construction should be against a position which rests not on equities but on mere technicalities: Johnson v. Ballou, 28 M. 379.

193. Criminal statutes must be construed strictly: People v. Reynolds, 71 M. — (July 11, '88).

194. A criminal statute cannot be enlarged by construction, nor restricted where the evident purpose is to make it comprehensive: People v. Caton, 25 M. 388.

195. Criminal statutes should be so construed as to include what is fairly and reasonably within the legitimate scope of the language, but not to include what is not within the language though partaking of similar mischievous qualities: People v. Reilly, 50 M. 384.

196. Penal statutes must be strictly construed, and cannot be enlarged by construction or intentment further than the intent fairly requires: Gilbert v. Kennedy, 22 M. 5; Shaw v. Clark, 49 M. 384; Van Buren v. Wylie, 56 M. 501; Carver v. Detroit & S. P. R. Co., 61 M. 584; Fox v. Francher, 66 M. 536.

197. When a law is susceptible of penal applications in special cases, such applications must be closely confined to cases within its principle: Wallace v. Finch, 24 M. 255.

198. Penal statutes are not flexible, and cannot be made to embrace anything that was not within the intent of the legislature in passing them: Shaw v. Clark, 49 M. 384.

199. Nor can acts not expressly forbidden by them be reached merely because they resemble the offence provided against or are equally and in the same way demoralizing or injurious; they cannot be made to embrace anything which was not within the intent of the legislature: Ibid.

200. Where an amendment is highly penal in character it precludes a liberal construction of the title of the original act so as to embrace objects not within the meaning of the language used therein: People v. Gadway, 61 M. 285.

201. It will not be presumed that a statute intended to remove disabilities adds new ones: Parsons v. People, 21 M. 509.

202. Penal laws defined: Fennell v. Bay City, 36 M. 186.

203. A statute giving creditors a remedy against corporate officers for official defaults is penal: Breitung v. Lindauer, 37 M. 217.

204. Otherwise held as to a statute holding the estate of a non-resident stockholder ratably liable for debts of his bank: Grand Rapids Savings Bank v. Warren, 52 M. 557.

(m) Strict pursuance of remedy.

205. Where a statute gives a new right and prescribes a particular remedy the party is confined to that remedy: Thurston v. Prentiss, 1 M. 198; Craig v. Butler, 9 M. 21.

206. Where a proceeding is in derogation of common-law principles it must depend for its validity upon a strict conformity to the statute: Weimer v. Bunbury, 30 M. 201.

207. In cases where the proceedings are not according to the course of the common law, the party seeking any benefit from them is bound to show their conformity to the statute under which they are had: Crane v. Hardy, 1 M. 56.

208. A statute, even when it is remedial, must be followed with strictness where it gives a remedy against a party who would not otherwise be liable: Chicago & N. E. R. Co. v. Sturgis, 44 M. 538.

209. When the right to proceed is wholly statutory the statute must be substantially followed: Dickinson v. Van Wormer, 39 M. 141.

210. A statute under which a party is to be deprived of his property by summary and ex parte proceedings must be strictly followed: Newsom v. Hart, 14 M. 238; Hasceig v. Tripp, 20 M. 216.

211. The rigorous rules that apply to proceedings in invitum contrary to the course of the common law should not be applied to statutory foreclosures, though every statutory requirement must be adhered to. All provisions must be construed reasonably: Lee v. Clary, 38 M. 223.

212. A statute authorizing substituted service of process must be strictly complied with: Colton v. Rupert, 60 M. 318.

Further as to strict compliance with statutory requirements, see ATTACHMENT, § 1: CONSTITUTIONS, §§ 239, 240; GARNISHMENT, §§ 2-9.

(n) Directory and mandatory provisions.

213. A statutory provision prescribing the course of proceeding to be pursued by public officers cannot be treated as directory merely and not mandatory, where that which is required to be done is in the nature of a condition precedent to subsequent action, and not simply a step in the course of the proceedings prescribed with a view to a regular and prompt transaction of the business in the progress of which such step is to be taken: Hoyt v. East Saginaw, 19 M. 89.

214. Where a statute authorizing a public agent to let contracts prescribes the mode—e. g., giving notice in a newspaper for sealed proposals—such mode of exercise of the power is not directory merely, but must be followed or the contract is void: State Prison Agent v. Lathrop, 1 M. 488.

215. Many matters in the assessment of taxes are deemed directory because the substantial rights of the tax-payer are not affected by them: Sibley v. Smith, 2 M. 496.

216. But those provisions of tax laws, a departure from which would be prejudicial to the owners of property taxed, cannot be held to be merely directory: Ibid.; Clark v. Crane, 5 M. 151; Hoyt v. East Saginaw, 19 M. 39; Steckert v. East Saginaw, 23 M. 104.

217. So held of a provision requiring a particular tax to be placed in a certain column on the roll: Case v. Dean, 16 M. 12.

218. Provisions as to description of land for taxation are mandatory: Amberg v. Rogers, 9 M. 332.

219. So is a provision requiring resident and non-resident real estate to be assessed separately: Rayner v. Lee, 20 M. 884; Hanscom v. Hinman, 30 M. 419; Seymour v. Peters, 67 M. 415.

220. Provisions of H. S. § 1081 as to apportionment among townships of amount to be raised for state and county taxes are mandatory: Boyce v. Sebring, 66 M. 210.

220. Charter requirement as to apportionment among wards of amount to be raised by taxation held directory merely where data were already fixed and correct amount was assessed in each ward: Fay v. Wood, 65 M. 890.

221. Statutes limiting the amount of taxes that may be levied are mandatory: Boyce v. Sebring, 66 M. 210.

222. A charter provision requiring commissioners in reporting assessment to common council to report valuation of respective lots is mandatory, even when assessments are not made on a basis of valuation: Steckert v. East Saginaw, 23 M. 104.

223. So is the date fixed by statute for tax sales mandatory: Houghton v. Auditor-General, 41 M. 28.

224. Statutes fixing a time for the doing of an act are considered as directory merely where the time is not fixed for the purpose of giving a party a hearing, or for some other purpose important to him: Fay v. Wood, 65 M. 890.

225. Statutory provision as to time of certification by clerk to supervisor of amount to be raised for township purposes held directory merely: Smith v. Crittenden, 16 M. 152; Peninsula Iron, etc. Co. v. Crystal Falls, 60 M. 510.

226. H. S. § 9577, requiring exceptions in criminal cases to be presented to the judge before the end of the term, is, as to the settlement of the bill, directory merely: Crofoot v. People, 19 M. 254.

227. A statute requiring circuit judge to assign on first day of next succeeding term a day for trial of defendant arraigned in county court was, as to time, directory merely: People v. Doe, 1 M. 451.

228. H. S. § 578 is to be regarded as directory merely, so far as it names the nominal obligees in sheriffs' bonds: Bay County v. Brock, 44 M. 45.

229. So held of a statutory requirement as to the manner in which election inspectors shall keep ballots: People v. Higgins, 3 M. 233.

230. And of a charter requirement as to notice of holding of election: People v. Hartwell, 12 M. 508; People v. Witherell, 14 M. 48.

231. And of a statute requiring return on chancery appeal to be made to nearest clerk's office: Beebe v. Young, 13 M. 221.

232. And of a statute requiring non-resident plaintiffs to give security for costs before process issues in their favor: Parks v. Goodwin, 1 D. 56.

233. So is the statute directory which requires each justice of the peace to keep a docket and enter therein the judgments rendered by him: Hickey v. Hinsdale, 8 M. 267.

234. So is H. S. § 6486, requiring the circuit judge who tries a case without a jury to give his decision on or before first day of next term: Rawson v. Parsons, 6 M. 401; Stansell v. Corning, 21 M. 242.

235. So is the provision in H. S. § 8505 requiring person selling mortgaged lands on statutory foreclosure to indorse on the deed the time when it will become operative: Johnstone v. Scott, 11 M. 232; Doyle v. Howard, 16 M. 261.

236. R. S. 1846, ch. 52, was permissive, not mandatory, as to incorporation of religious societies by trustees: Smith v. Bonhoof, 2 M. 115.

237. Statute providing that municipality voting aid to railroad shall within sixty days thereafter issue its bonds, etc., is simply permissive as to time: Chickaming v. Carpenter, 106 U. S. 668.

238. H. S. § 8503, requiring distinct tracts or lots to be sold separately on foreclosure by advertisement is not directory merely: Lee v. Mason, 10 M. 403.

239. Statutory provisions as to the execution and deposit of sheriff's deed on foreclosure by advertisement are mandatory and not merely directory: Doyle v. Howard, 16 M. 261.

240. H. S. § 5065, in providing that school teachers' contracts shall contain provisions requiring them to keep lists of pupils, etc., is directory merely: Everett v. Cannon School District, 30 M. 249.

241. Every provision of the statute of frauds should be strictly observed, and steadily enforced by the courts: Alderton v. Buchoz, 3 M. 322.

242. If an affirmative statute that is introductory of a new law directs a thing to be done in a certain manner, it shall not, even though there are no negative words, be done in any other manner: Brooks v. Hill, 1 M. 118; Sibley v. Johnson, 1 M. 380.

243. Where a statute creates a new offence and prescribes a particular judgment, that judgment only can be rendered; and the course of proceeding established by law to produce such a judgment is the one appropriate to the case: Pardee v. Smith, 27 M. 83.

(o) Prospective and retrospective.

244. Retrospective laws defined: People v. Collins, 3 M. 343, 391.

245. Statutes are not to be given a retrospective construction unless the language thereof clearly shows such to have been the intention of the legislature: Bronson v. Newberry, 2 D. 38; Scott v. Smart's Executors, 1 M. 295, 301; Harrison v. Metz, 17 M. 377; Bay City & E. S. R. Co. v. Austin, 21 M. 390; Merrill v. Kalamazoo, 85 M. 211; Finn v. Haynes, 87 M. 63; Maxwell v. Bay City Bridge Co., 46 M. 278.

246. Legislation is to have a prospective operation only, except where the contrary intent is expressly declared or is necessarily to be implied from the terms employed: Harrison v. Metz, 17 M. 377.

247. A statute applies to future transactions only unless in its express words given effect upon transactions previously had, or unless some of its terms cannot be otherwise answered: Ferrin v. Kellogg, 37 M. 316.

248. Statutes affecting valuable rights are presumed not to operate retrospectively: Van Fleet v. Van Fleet, 49 M. 610.

249. Presumptively, tax laws are intended to have a prospective operation only; and the remedies they provide for collection will not be applied to taxes previously laid unless an intent that they shall be is clearly manifested; and a title that is prospective in meaning precludes retrospective operation even though the statute contains retrospective provisions: Clark v. Hall, 19 M. 356; Smith v. Auditor-General, 20 M. 398; Auditor-General v. Monroe Supervisors, 36 M. 70; Fuller v. Grand Rapids, 40 M. 395; Thomas v. Collins, 58 M. 64; Auditor-General v. Iosco Circuit Judge, 58 M. 345; Auditor-General v. Saginaw Supervisors, 62 M. 579; Nester v. Busch, 64 M. 657; Seymour v. Peters, 67 M. 415 (Oct. 27, '87); Phillips v. New Buffalo, 68 M. 217 (Jan. 19, '88); Hall v. Perry, 72 M. — (Nov. 1, '88); McNaughton v. Martin, 72 M. — (Nov. 1, '88).

250. So, an amendment to the tax law allowing sale to be made to pay marshal's fees will not apply to assessments made before the passage of the law, unless plainly so intended: Fuller v. Grand Rapids, 40 M. 395.

251. A statute penal in its nature can have no retroactive effect: Newkirk v. Tracey, 61 M. 174.

252. A statute which simply gives an efficient remedy for the enforcement of a duty that existed before is not given retrospective operation when applied to a case where the duty had been neglected before it was passed: Merrill v. Kalamazoo, 35 M. 211.

253. A statute legalizing a tax-roll and healing defects therein will be so construed as not to affect an existing judgment for trespass against officers who seized and sold property to pay the tax; and this though certiorari is pending to review the judgment: Moser v. White, 29 M. 59.

254. A certain construction applied to a statute regulating the fixing of officer's salaries held not to give the act a retrospective operation: Knappen v. Berry Supervisors, 46 M. 22.

255. Act 236 of 1881, authorizing administrators to take possession of their intestates' real estate, was not retroactive in its terms: Van Fleet v. Van Fleet, 49 M. 610.

256. H. S. § 6738, regulating appeals in chancery, held not to apply to appeals already perfected: Perrin v. Kellogg, 37 M. 816.

257. A law postponing all liens to the lien of the tax imposed by it held not applicable to liens that attached before its passage: Finn v. Haynes, 87 M. 62.

258. The act of 1842 (S. L. 1842, p. 70), repealing previous exemption laws and exempting from execution property not previously exempted by statute, was held applicable to executions for the collection of debts contracted before the act took effect: Rockwell v. Hubbell's Administrators, 2 D. 197.

259. H. S. § 1590, permitting a guaranty of payment or collection of negotiable paper to be sued by any subsequent holder in his own name, applies to existing as well as to future contracts: Waldron v. Harring, 28 M. 493.

260. Whether a statute allowing pay for improvements previously made on lands without the owner's consent would be valid where no previous law had allowed such reimbursement, quere: Guild v. Kidd, 48 M. 307.

261. The pending of proceedings to reverse irregular action of supervisors does not preclude their confirmation by statute: People v. Ingham Supervisors, 20 M. 95.

262. A statute ordering a re-assessment for a public improvement could not cut off any right before existing to payment for the old assessment: Whitely v. Lansing, 27 M. 181; French v. Lansing, 30 M. 378.

As to what retrospective statutes are constitutional, see CONSTITUTIONS, §§ 208-227.

III. REPEAL.

(a) In general; what constitutes.

263. It is competent for the legislature in the same act to repeal any former one within its purview, although every other provision in the repealing act is unconstitutional. The question is one of legislative intent, and it is only necessary that words should be used that show an intent to repeal, irrespective of the unconstitutional provisions. But an act repealing all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with its provisions does not repeal an act inconsistent only with a void provision in the repealing act: Campau v. Detroit, 14 M. 276.

264. A mere legislative provision not contained in the constitution is repealable by subsequent legislation, and any subsequent act clearly inconsistent with it would thus far repeal it; so held of the act of April 25, 1846 (C. L. 1857, ch. 88), reserving from sale all public lands known to contain minerals: People v. State Land Office Commissioner, 28 M. 270.

265. The legislature has power to repeal existing remedies unless such repeal impairs the obligation of a contract: Robinson v. The Red Jacket, 1 M. 171. And see CONSTITUTIONS, § 158.

That a statute imposing a penalty upon directors in case of neglect to perform duty may be repealed without disturbing contract obligations, see CORPORATIONS, § 110.

As to validity of repealing statutes, see CONSTITUTIONS, III, (h), (i).

As to validity of repeals of corporate charters, see CONSTITUTIONS, §§ 182, 183, 442-445, 447.

266. The Revised Statutes of 1846 held not to repeal, on taking effect, a special act passed on the same day with the revision and given immediate effect: Crane v. Reeder, 22 M. 323.

267. An act repealing the charter of the "Bank of Oakland County" cannot be construed to be a repeal of the charter of "The President, Directors and Company of the Oakland County Bank." It is not necessary that a repealing act should correspond exactly, in naming the corporation, with the act of incorporation which it is meant to repeal; but there must be such a correspondence as will leave no doubt of the intention of the legislature: People v. Oakland County Bank, 1 D. 282.

268. Where a subsequent statute covers the whole ground occupied by an earlier statute it repeals by implication the former statute, though there be no repugnance: Shannon v. People, 5 M. 71; Feige v. M. C. R. Co., 62 M. 1.

269. A statute is repealed by a later one in so far as its provisions are inconsistent with it or are covered by it: Attorney-General v. Amos, 60 M. 372.

270. A new statute covering the same ground with an old one supersedes it for all further cases without the necessity of repealing words: People v. Hobson, 48 M. 27.

271. Where two acts relate to the same subject-matter, and the later one embraces the whole ground covered by the provisions of the former, introducing also new qualifications or modifications, the former act is repealed: People v. Bussell, 59 M. 104.

272. A general statute requiring a longer time for township meetings is superseded for the time by a statute fixing a shorter notice for specific meetings for a particular purpose: Miller v. Grandy, 18 M. 540.

273. Where a statute contains provisions regulating the bringing of actions against corporations organized under it, they must be regarded as exceptions to earlier general provisions on the same subject, if inconsistent: Dewey v. Central Car & Manuf. Co., 42 M. 399.

274. A second law on the same subject without a repealing clause or negative words does not repeal a former one unless so clearly repugnant as to imply a negative: Beals v. Hale, 4 How. (U. S.) 37.

275. An amendment operates as a repeal so far as it is repugnant to the original act; and if not repugnant in express terms, it still effects a repeal if it covers the whole subject of the amended act and contains new provisions showing that it was meant as a substitute: Breitung v. Lindauer, 37 M. 217.

276. Whether one law repeals another on the same subject to which it does not expressly refer is largely a question of legislative intent; if both can have effect, both must stand: People v. Gustin, 57 M. 407.

277. Where a statutory provision was repealed without change in what purported to be an amendatory act and the latter was afterward repealed, the original provision was repealed also: Moody v. Seaman, 46 M. 74.

278. Statutes can only be repealed by express subsequent enactment, or by necessary implication from a positive repugnancy to the provisions of a later act; but in the latter case the repeal is only to the extent of the repugnancy: Connors v. Carp River Iron Co., 54 M. 168.

279. A statute cannot be modified or superseded by one of earlier date, or perhaps by one of the same date which precedes it in the authorized publication of the laws: Thomas v. Collins, 58 M. 64.

280. Two local acts upon the same subject-matter prescribed different punishments for a violation of their provisions. Held, that the two could not stand together, but that the former was repealed by the latter: People v. Bussell, 59 M. 104.

281. The penal provisions of a statute are not superseded by an unnecessary municipal ordinance to the same effect: Wayne County v. Detroit, 17 M. 390.

282. The general rule that the creation of a smaller penalty supersedes a larger one previously prescribed for the same offence was held inapplicable where mitigated provisions were introduced into a city charter not with any idea of changing the state law, but under the erroneous notion that they created municipal grievances in which no one was interested but the city: People v. Swift, 59 M. 529.

283. A general statute does not impliedly repeal provisions of special acts or charters relating to the same subject: Hewitt v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 71 M. — (July 11, '88).

284. The re-enactment or modification of charter provisions cannot be held to affect special legislation outside of the charter without a clear indication of such an intent: Taggart v. Detroit, 71 M. — (June 22, '88).

285. Village charters will not be so construed as to change the operation of the general tax law unless such intent is clearly expressed: Howell v. Cassopolis, 35 M. 471.

286. Repeals by implication are not favored: Brown v. McCormick, 28 M. 215; Breitung v. Lindauer, 37 M. 217; Ryan's Case, 45 M. 173; Connors v. Carp River Iron Co., 54 M. 168; People v. Gustin, 57 M. 407; People v. Grand Rapids & W. R. Co., 67 M. 5.

287. So held where the repeal claimed would have reduced a criminal penalty: People v. Gustin, 57 M. 407.

288. Repeals by implication should not be established without satisfactory reason to believe the legislature intended them: Gordon v. People, 44 M. 485.

289. When a statute has been once passed for the express purpose of reducing the term of imprisonment under an old law, any implied restoration that would operate to repeal an important statute not referred to must clearly indicate such intention: Ibid.

(b) Effect of repeal.

290. Where an act done while a statute was in force is forbidden and therefore illegal, it does not become valid when the statute is repealed: Ludlow v. Hardy, 38 M. 690.

291. Act 43 of 1875 repealed the act for the formation of canal and harbor companies (C. L. 1871, ch. 84), with the proviso that such companies should "continue to have legal existence for the purpose of closing up their business only in accordance with the provisions of ch. 180 of the compiled laws." Said ch. 180, besides including one chapter of the Revised Statutes, contains many provisions in the shape of independent statutes passed at different times, and contains provisions for the dissolution of some corporations different from those applicable to others. Held, that the reference to said ch. 130 was too vague to incorporate any of its provisions into the repealing law, and that the repealing clause, while prohibiting a continuance in ordinary business, left the corporate existence unchanged for winding-up purposes: Bewick v. Alpena Harbor Co., 39 M. 700.

292. The repeal of a law giving a court power to license administrators to sell real estate after the license has been granted, but before a sale has been made, is a revocation of the license: Campau v. Gillett, 1 M. 416.

293. The repeal of a statute giving administrators power to take and hold possession of their intestate's lands operates to deprive them of the right to possession taken before such repeal: Campau v. Campau, 25 M. 127.

294. Where an act appropriated highway taxes collected in a certain town, among others, to a special purpose, and appointed commissioners to disburse the same, but before the taxes had been paid over, though after legal proceedings had been commenced by the commissioners to compel payment, the act was amended by striking out all that related to such town, and the amendatory act contained no saving clause, it was held that the right under the original act to the moneys collected in such town was thereby terminated: Tivey v. People, 8 M. 128.

295. Where a statute giving one remedy is repealed and a new remedy provided, with a saving of rights accrued, the saving clause will not authorize the institution of suits under the repealed statutes where the cause of action accrued before: Robinson v. The Red Jacket, 1 M. 171.

296. A penal statute being repealed without a saving clause of penalties which had accrued under it, such penalties cannot afterwards be recovered: Engle v. Shurts, 1 M. 150; Breitung v. Lindauer, 37 M. 217.

297. A statute which authorizes a judgment to be entered for double the damages found by the jury is in the nature of a penal statute, the repeal of which before judgment, though after verdict, will defeat the right to such recovery; no personal equity to such right underlying the law or arising upon it appearing: Bay City & E. S. R. Co. v. Austin, 21 M. 390.

298. The repeal of a general statute authorizing the formation of corporations for definite periods does not necessarily shorten the existence of a particular corporation or destroy corporate franchises: Bewick v. Alpena Harbor Co., 39 M. 700.

299. The saving clause in R. S. 1846, p. 598, § 9, as to rights accrued by adverse possession, etc., embraced rights accruing under the act of Feb. 17, 1847, relating to possession under tax titles: Perry v. Hepburne, 4 M. 165.

300. While the repeal of a statute generally ends all criminal proceedings under it, it does not do so in cases which have been put in judgment, and in which the judgment has been transferred by certiorari to a higher court and affirmed: People v. Hobson, 48 M. 27.

301. The punishment of an offence under an old statute is not inconsistent with a new law which repeals acts inconsistent therewith, but which applies only to future cases, and to those in substantially the same way: Ibid.

302. It seems that the repeal by the act of 1881 (H. S. §§ 2270-2283) of the act of 1879, regulating the sale of liquors, was not retrospective, and did not supersede existing criminal judgments which had only been suspended for review: Ibid.

303. Where a repealing statute substantially re-enacts the provisions of the repealed statute, suits commenced under the repealed statute are not affected by the repeal: Alexander v. Big Rapids, 70 M. 224.

304. Where certain provisions of a statute were substantially re-enacted in a later act which repealed all contravening provisions, but expressly saved rights accrued thereunder, no rights gained under the former statute were destroyed or changed: Davenport v. Auditor-General, 70 M. 192.

IV. AMENDMENT.

Amendments of bills pending passage, see CONSTITUTIONS, §§ 529-540.

305. Any provisions may be introduced by amendment if they are not foreign to the title of the act in which they are inserted; they may relate to a class of details different from those superseded: Underwood v. McDuffe, 15 M. 361.

306. If a provision could have been inserted in an original act without repugnance to its title, it cannot be a variance to introduce it as an amendment: Chippewa Supervisors v. Auditor-General, 65 M. 408.

307. But amendments including matter foreign to the title are invalid: Stewart v. Father Matthew Society, 41 M. 67.

And further as to compliance in amending statute, with constitutional requirement as to title, see CONSTITUTIONS, §§ 563, 571, 578, 585, 587, 588, 592, 596, 600, 606, 621.

308. A section of the compiled laws having been amended, a subsequent amendment will not be invalid because made by reference to the number of the section as it originally stood in the compilation, the section as amended being set forth at length: Jones v. State Land Office Commissioner, 21 M. 236.

309. It is not necessary to set forth a section as it stood before it was amended: Ibid.

310. The practice of amending by reference to sections instead of by reference to subjects or to the entire statute criticised as an unsatisfactory compliance with the requirements of the constitution; yet where the purpose is plain, it may be carried out, even though the section numbers of the original act and of the amendment are confused: Comstock v. Superior Court Judge, 39 M. 195.

311. And, subject to the same criticism, a reference that was incorrect as to the section of the original act, but right as to the section in Howell's Statutes, was held not to vitiate the amendment: Callaghan v. Chipman, 59 M. 610.

312. Amendments by implication are not prohibited: People v. Mahaney, 18 M. 481; Underwood v. McDuffe, 15 M. 361; People v. Wands, 23 M. 885; Mok v. Detroit Building, etc. Assoc., 80 M. 511.

313. An amending act may operate to alter the legal operation of other provisions than those that it re-enacts at length: People v. Wands, 23 M. 885.

314. An act adding a section to a prior law may amend other sections thereof by implication: Swartwout v. Michigan Air Line Co., 24 M. 389.

315. Subsequent changes in a general law are not necessarily adopted by implication in a charter that had previously adopted specific provisions of the general law: Darmstaetter v. Moloney, 45 M. 621.

316. An amended statute is to be understood in the same sense as if it had read from the beginning as it does as amended: Conrad v. Nall, 24 M. 275.

317. But this rule will not be applied when its effect would be to defeat the manifest intention of the legislature in adopting the amendment; so held where an amendment adopted twenty-two years after the statute was passed provided that actions on judgments "heretofore rendered" should be barred in ten years after entry thereof: Parsons v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 37 M. 287.

As to amendment of corporate charters, see CONSTITUTIONS, §§ 184-188, 441, 446-448, 526.

V. REVIVOR.

318. The Detroit police act having provided that on the appointment by the police board of a superintendent of police or captain of police, the office of city marshal should be abolished, a subsequent legislative act, passed before any such appointment of superintendent or captain of police had been made, changing the number of jurors "to be summoned by the marshal" in proceedings in opening, closing or altering streets, could not have the effect to prevent the office of marshal from being abolished by the appointment under the police act: People v. Mahaney, 18 M. 481.

319. Where, in compliance with the constitution, an amendment of a section of a statute is made by setting out the whole section as amended, the merely nominal re-enactment of the words that are not changed does not have the effect of disturbing the whole body of statutes in pari materia which have been passed since the first enactment of the section; nor, unless the intent is clear, does it restore a provision that had been impliedly repealed by another statute: Gordon v. People, 44 M. 485.

320. Where certain words of a statute have been impliedly repealed by the effect of a later statute, the recital of those words in an act amending the earlier statute, such amendment being made apparently for the sole purpose of introducing a clause relating to a different subject, does not revive those words: Curbay v. Bellemer, 69 M. 70 M. 106.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

I. SUFFICIENCY OF CONTRACT OR MEMORANDUM.

II. PROMISE TO PAY ANOTHER'S DEBT.

III. AGREEMENTS, ETC., RELATING TO LANDS.

IV. AGREEMENTS RELATING TO THE SALE OF GOODS AND CHATTELS.

(b) Earnest-money.

(c) Delivery and acceptance.

V. AGREEMENTS NOT TO BE PERFORMED WITHIN ONE YEAR.

VI. AGREEMENTS IN CONSIDERATION OF MARRIAGE.

VII. REPRESENTATIONS AS TO CREDIT, ETC.

VIII. MISCELLANEOUS CASES.

IX. PART PERFORMANCE; EXECUTED OR RATIFIED CONTRACTS.

X. PLEADING AND EVIDENCE; EFFECT OF THE STATUTE.

I. SUFFICIENCY OF CONTRACT OR MEMORANDUM.

1. Whether, under the statute, the contract required to be in writing is not to be treated as one entire contract, so that all the stipulations of both parties must be in writing, quere: Whipple v. Parker, 29 M. 369.

2. A promise in writing to pay the debt of another must show the whole terms of the contract; no resort can be had to parol evidence to add to them: Hall v. Soule, 11 M. 494.

3. The memorandum of a contract that is not to be performed within a year must embrace all its substantial terms except the consideration; and when essentially defective it cannot be aided by parol evidence: Palmer v. Marquette & Pacific Rolling Mill Co., 32 M. 274.

4. A telegram to "come on at once at a salary of two thousand, conditional only upon satisfactory discharge of business," lacks some of the essential terms of a contract in that it fixes no time for the continuance of the employment and does not even name the employment itself: Ibid.

5. H. S. § 6189, which dispenses with the necessity of expressing in any contract required to be in writing the consideration thereof, and permits proof of such consideration by other evidence, does not, it seems, apply to a case where the consideration consisted of counter-promises or executory stipulations to be performed more than a year after the making of the contract: Whipple v. Parker, 29 M. 369.

6. Whether or not the statute requires that the memorandum of a contract of sale shall show the price to be made, it must, at all events, show all the other terms of the contract, and also show that it is a contract of sale: James v. Muir, 33 M. 223.

7. A telegram in the following words: "I will take double-deck car—hogs; W. C. Bryant will close contract," having reference to a previous parol negotiation and arrangement, is not, under the statute, a sufficient memorandum of a contract. Standing by itself it contains none of the elements of a bargain except quantity: McElroy v. Buck, 35 M. 434.

7a. The following memorandum of sale, viz., "John Heffron bought of J. H. Rudell, agent for J. K. Armsby, 300 cases B. M. corn, $1.25 cash, less one-half per cent. [Signed] J. H. Rudell," is sufficient under the statute of frauds if the alleged agent was authorized to act for the vendor: Heffron v. Armsby, 61 M. 505.

8. Defendant, having orally agreed to buy goods of the value of $200, afterwards wrote to plaintiff as follows: "You may place the gas fixtures I selected to-day. The dining-room fixtures may as well be changed over with the salesman who showed me the goods. Please put them up in fine shape, promptly as possible." The goods were not accepted or received, and defendant countermanded his order. Held, that the letter contained no information except by reference to the oral agreement, and did not validate it: Sheley v. Whitman, 67 M. 897.

9. A letter from the vendor confirming to the purchaser a sale of a cow at a certain price per pound, and enclosing an order on her keeper for delivery and weighing, was held a sufficient memorandum: Sherwood v. Walker, 66 M. 568.

10. A mere memorandum of a land sale in a receipt for money paid down is not enough to establish the contract under the statute, unless it is complete in itself and leaves nothing to rest in parol. It is not enough to state the purchase price and omit the time of payment, as there is no known usage to fix periods of payment: Gault v. Stormont, 51 M. 636.

11. A writing that does not specify the purchase price or the time of payment is insufficient to constitute a contract for the sale of lands under the statute of frauds, and is not aided by a subsequent letter of the party sought to be charged instructing his agent how to fill out the contract if one should be made: Webster v. Brown, 67 M. 323 (Oct. 20, '87).

12. A sale of land is not made out by an entry on the books of the vendors and by their receipts for purchase money where the land was not fully described and did not belong to them, and the actual owners only assented to the sale orally: Ayres v. Gallup, 44 M. 13.

13. A land contract which, though written, does not describe a part of the lands nor point out any method for identifying them, is fatally defective under the statute of frauds. So held where a joint owner of land purported, in selling it, to be acting for himself and his co-owners, but the quantity of land fell short of his representations, and a compromise agreement was made which provided that the deficiency might be made up out of lands owned solely by the vendor, but there was nothing relied upon by either party to show what particular parcel could be taken: Alpena Lumber Co. v. Fletcher, 48 M. 555.

14. The description of real property, in a contract for its sale, must so fit and comprehend it that it can be applied to the property intended and exclude all else with the aid at least of extrinsic testimony which shall neither contradict nor add to it; and a conflict in the extrinsic evidence cannot establish its insufficiency under the statute: Eggleston v. Wagner, 46 M. 610.

15. In correspondence relative to the purchase and sale of certain real estate the property was at first described by both parties as the "Schoolcraft store" and subsequently as "the property." Held a sufficient description: Francis v. Barry, 69 M. 811.

16. A complete and binding contract of sale may be created by letters or other writings relating to one connected transaction, if, without the aid of parol testimony, the parties, the subject-matter and the terms of the contract may be collected: Ibid.

17. After negotiations concerning the sale of land, for which plaintiff offered $2,000 in cash and notes for $500, defendant wrote that all was satisfactory; that he would take the money when defendant could raise it, and to let all stand until his return in two weeks' time. Plaintiff borrowed the money and wrote defendant that it was ready and that she wanted a deed. Defendant replied that he would give a deed, take $2,000 and notes for the balance, and would attend to it when he returned. Held, that there was a sufficient contract in writing to comply with H. S. § 6181: Ibid.

18. A party offered in writing to sell land at a certain price, part to be secured by mortgage on the land, the valuation of the lots into which the land had been subdivided to be agreed to, and, on payment being made on account of said mortgage, lots of value equal to amount paid to be released, the valuation of each lot as agreed upon to be placed on plat. Held, that a mere oral acceptance of such offer within the time limited, without tender of cash payment or of any deed or mortgage executed or to be executed, did not constitute a sufficient contract under H. S. § 6181: Wardell v. Williams, 62 M. 50.

19. Where one party signs a memorandum offering to exchange land which he owns for land owned by another party, such memorandum cannot be made a valid contract by the oral acceptance and promise of the other party to make such exchange; such oral promise not being enforceable: Ibid.

20. An agreement in writing to pay higher interest held sufficient under the statute of frauds to charge the land, it being connected with the mortgage: Smith v. Graham, 84 M. 802.

And see INTEREST, §§ 85-88.

21. Printed memoranda and signatures are sufficient (arguendo): Pelton v. Ottawa Supervisors, 52 M. 517. Printed signature to warranty binds, when adopted, as if it were written: Grieb v. Cole, 60 M. 397.

22. The party's signature, written by another for him at his request and in his presence, is sufficient: Just v. Wise, 42 M. 578; Johnson v. Van Velsor, 48 M. 208; Eggleston v. Wagner, 46 M. 610; Coy v. Stiner, 53 M. 42.

23. A contract of service for more than a year, signed only by the employer, is void for want of mutuality; and the other party cannot make it effective by written acceptance after the employer has refused to perform: Wilkinson v. Heavenrich, 58 M. 574.

24. The authority of an agent acting for the vendor in the sale of lands must be in writing; otherwise the agreement to sell is void: Holland v. Hoyt, 14 M. 288; Hammond v. Hannin, 21 M. 874; Palmer v. Williams, 24 M. 328; Powell v. Conant, 33 M. 396; Dickinson v. Wright, 56 M. 42.

25. It seems that the authority of the agent of the vendee in a contract for the sale of lands must be in writing: Hammond v. Hannin, 21 M. 874.

26. An agent whose authority rests in parol cannot bind his principal by a contract for the purchase of land: Colegrove v. Solomon, 34 M. 494.

27. The authority of an agent to execute a lease of land for more than one year must be in writing: Toan v. Pline, 60 M. 335.

28. An oral ratification by the vendee in a written contract for the sale of lands made by his agent without authority is sufficient: Hammond v. Hannin, 21 M. 874.

29. The admission of a parol trust in land by a defendant's answer to a bill in chancery is a sufficient written declaration of the trust to answer the requirements of the statute of frauds: Patton v. Chamberlain, 44 M. 5.

II. PROMISE TO PAY ANOTHER'S DEBT.¹

That a written promise to pay another's debt must show the whole terms of the contract, see supra, § 2.

30. An oral promise to pay another's debt is void and not enforceable where nothing appears to remove it from the operation of the statute: Pratt v. Bates, 40 M. 87; Ruppe v.

¹ H. S. § 6185, subd. 2, avoids "every special promise to answer for the debt, default or misdoings of another person," unless in writing, etc.

Edwards, 52 M. 411; Schoch v. McLane, 62 M. 454.

31. Such a promise made directly to the debtor is not void: Pratt v. Bates, 40 M. 87.

32. H. S. § 6185, subd. 2, applies only to promises that are in the nature of guaranties for some original or primary obligation to be performed by another: Gibbs v. Blanchard, 15 M. 292.

33. An unwritten agreement of suretyship is void: Johnston v. Kimball, 89 M. 187; Bonine v. Denniston, 41 M. 293.

34. One is not, therefore, collaterally liable as guarantor or surety where he has not made a written agreement: Ingersoll v. Baker, 41 M. 48.

35. The statute prevents a written guaranty to sureties against loss or liability from being shown by parol to be the contract of another than the one it purports to bind: First National Bank v. Bennett, 38 M. 520.

36. The purchase of goods that are to be delivered to one on the joint promise and credit of two is in legal effect, as between them and the vendor, a purchase by both, and is not within the statute: Gibbs v. Blanchard, 15 M. 292.

37. An oral agreement whereby partners buy out the interest of a copartner, and agree in consideration of his surrender to them of his interest to indemnify him against the partnership debts, is not within the statute: Bonebright v. Pease, 8 M. 318.

38. Defendant orally promised a debtor of plaintiff to pay the debt on condition that the debtor would deliver defendant a certain cow. But the plaintiff not having discharged the debtor, the promise, not being upon any consideration moving from plaintiff, was void by the statute: Brown v. Hazen, 11 M. 219.

39. A contractor having abandoned the building he was erecting resumed work and did certain extra labor on the promise of defendant—a third person—to pay him. But the evidence showed that he still looked to the original debtor for payment, and to defendant only as guarantor; and the promise of defendant was held within the statute: Bresler v. Pendell, 12 M. 224.

40. One claiming an interest in certain goods held by another who was his debtor agreed not to attach them in consideration of the oral promise by another creditor who proposed to attach that he would pay his debt. Held, that this promise to pay was within the statute and void: Waldo v. Simonson, 18 M. 845.

41. The oral promise of a tenant of a mortgager to pay rent to the mortgagee, to be applied on the mortgage, is void as a promise to answer for the debt of another, if the mortgagee has not released the mortgager: Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 M. 351.

42. An oral promise to pay the debt of another is not exempted from the operation of the statute by reason of its consideration being the release of property to the original debtor. It remains a collateral promise still: Corkins v. Collins, 16 M. 478.

43. A promise to the holder of another's promissory note to pay it at maturity is one which is collateral to such note, and is within the statute: Halsted v. Francis, 81 M. 118.

44. Where A. orally promises B. to pay him for such goods as he may furnish C., the promise is not so taken out of the statute as to make A. liable unless B. has thereupon absolutely discharged C. from liability, and looks only to A. for payment; B. cannot hold each liable severally at his option: Welch v. Marvin, 36 M. 59.

45. In an action to recover the price of board and supplies furnished to laborers and employees of a subcontractor of the defendants, a verdict for defendants, with special findings that such subcontractor was never agent of defendants, that the agreements were made with him personally and not as agent, and that the debts sued for were incurred and the articles furnished solely on his credit and engagement, and not on account of defendants, shows that even if defendants had promised to pay the accounts their promise was within the statute of frauds, as a promise to pay the debt of another: Barden v. Briscoe, 36 M. 254.

46. An oral promise to pay for material furnished to another person on a contract made with him and not with the promisor cannot be enforced so long as the original contract remains uncanceled: Baker v. Ingersoll, 39 M. 158.

47. A mere oral promise to pay another's debt, without any understanding with the latter or any independent contract for the promisor's account, the original debt being kept alive, is void: Gower v. Stuart, 40 M. 747.

48. A parol promise by a railroad company to pay the obligations of a contractor to his laborers is void: Bottomley v. Port Huron & N. W. R. Co., 44 M. 542.

49. A firm of lumber dealers made a contract with a firm of manufacturers whereby the latter were to convert the timber on certain premises into shingles and siding. The manufacturers made an independent contract with a logger to cut the timber and haul it to the mill; but as they were slow in making payment the logger went to the dealers for payment, and they orally agreed to pay him on orders from the manufacturers. Several payments were made in this way, but when the logger tried to obtain a final settlement they refused to pay him the balance, and he brought suit on the agreement. Held, that it could not be maintained. There was no novation except so far as the orders were actually given; and the oral agreement was a promise to pay another's debt: Preston v. Young, 46 M. 108.

50. A town treasurer sold a pump on a tax levy, and the purchaser sold it to third parties, who claimed that the treasurer promised verbally, and without receiving any consideration, to be responsible for the title. Held, that the promise was a collateral undertaking involving no liability until the failure of the latter contract, under which a warranty of title was implied by rules of law: Tozer's Estate, 46 M. 299.

51. An oral promise to a merchant to guaranty payment for anything a third person should want in equipping a saw-mill, at which he was to manufacture shingles for the promisor, is within the statute and cannot support an action by the merchant against the person making the promise: Studley v. Barth, 54 M. 6.

52. An oral promise by A. to pay B. the amount of an account which B. holds against C.; there being no agreement between all three that A. should be substituted as the debtor and C. discharged, is void: Pfaff v. Cummings, 67 M. 143.

53. The business of a retail trader in debt to plaintiffs for goods bought was continued by his widow, who orally promised plaintiffs to pay her husband's debt if they would sell goods to her on credit. Credit was given. Held, that this was void as a promise to pay another's debt: Ruppe v. Peterson, 67 M. 437 (Nov. 3, '87).

54. The landlord of a liquor-dealer agreed to pay for his supplies if the latter would turn over to him two-thirds of his receipts and they should amount to enough to cover the bills. Held that, in the case of supplies sold to the dealer himself, and the title to which passed to him, such an agreement would be within the statute of frauds and must be in writing: Hake v. Solomon, 62 M. 377.

55. Contractors for the construction of a railroad gave their workmen certificates of the amount due them, which were presented to and accepted by the railroad company. Upon these certificates the plaintiffs furnished goods which they charged to the contractors. In a suit brought against the contractors to recover the price it was made a question before the jury whether the goods were furnished on the credit of the contractors, or of third persons who, according to some of the evidence, were to make advances. The jury were charged that if the goods were furnished under an arrangement with the contractors, or if they subsequently assented to the goods being charged to them — in either case they would be liable. Whether the latter branch of this charge was correct, quere; the court being equally divided on the question: Farwell v. Dewey, 12 M. 436.

56. A., who was indebted both to B. and to C., absconded, leaving property in B.'s hands, and B., on being informed that C. would attach the property, promised orally to pay C.'s claim. Held, that such promise was without any consideration that could inure to B., and was within the statute, whether B. appropriated the property to his own use or not: Stewart v. Jerome, 71 M. — (July 11, '88).

57. When the owner of negotiable paper sells it and accompanies the sale by a guaranty, his undertaking, being founded on a new consideration inuring to his own benefit, is an original one and is not within the statute: Jones v. Palmer, 1 D. 379; Thomas v. Dodge, 8 M. 51.

58. Where the guaranty of another's debt is merely incidental to a principal contract made by the guarantor himself on his own account, it is then regarded as in effect a promise to pay his own debt, and it need not, therefore, be in writing: Huntington v. Wellington, 12 M. 10.

59. The statute was held not applicable to a parol guaranty that certain notes sold by defendant to plaintiffs were good and collectible and the makers responsible; that the maker of a certain mortgage sold at the same time was responsible; that the land mortgaged was ample security, and the title perfect and unencumbered: Ibid.

60. The statute does not avoid an oral contract whereby one who claimed to have an interest in a patent under which he was about to organize a company to deal in rights promised another that if he would become a member, subscribe for shares, and give his promissory note therefor, the shares would cost him nothing, and as soon as the company should be organized, another man should be found to take the shares off his hands and pay him the amount of his note, and that he should be put to no expense on account of the shares and note: Green v. Brookins, 23 M. 48.

61. Nor does the statute apply to an understanding by which the dealings of individual partners with another firm shall be treated as a matter of account between the two firms in their mutual dealings; purchases and sales made on the faith and in strict pursuance of it can be considered as original transactions on the part of the members of the firm charged, who may bind themselves by such an agreement if no rule of law or policy or other disability prevents: Davis v. Dodge, 80 M. 287.

62. A promise to become a co-signer with the promisee of a note of third persons and to pay the same at maturity is not a promise to pay the debt of another within the statute of frauds, where the purpose of giving the note is to borrow money which is to go into such promisor's hands, though the ultimate purpose was to make use of the money to aid one of the third persons who were first signers of the note, and for which such promisor was to obtain security in his own name and for his own benefit as for an advance made by him personally: Potter v. Brown, 85 M. 274.

63. An arrangement by which A. is to cash for B. orders drawn on B. by B.'s contractor in payment of the contractor's employees, and B. was to reimburse A. for the moneys so advanced by him, is an original and direct, not a secondary or collateral, undertaking, and is not within H. S. § 6185, subd. 2: Comstock v. Norton, 86 M. 277.

64. The statute of frauds does not apply to an agreement to pay the debt of a third person where, as part of the agreement, such person is discharged from his original indebtedness: Mulcrone v. American Lumber Co., 55 M. 622.

65. While in many cases the test, whether a promise is within the statute of frauds, as a promise to pay the debt of another, is whether the original debtor remains liable on his undertaking and the promise is only collateral thereto, yet where the third party is himself to receive the benefit for which his promise is exchanged, it is not usually material whether the original debtor remains liable or not: Calkins v. Chandler, 86 M. 320.

66. The statute does not apply to a promise to make payments on the debt of another of sums which the promisor should become liable to pay to the debtor for services to be performed by the latter for him, there being a consideration moving to him which was the inducement for making the promise: Ibid.

67. The holders of a chattel mortgage upon a saw-mill owned by M. agreed orally with M. and with certain persons for whom M. was then engaged in sawing lumber, that, in consideration of an extension of the time of payment of the mortgage, M. should allow customers of his to retain the sum of fifty cents per thousand feet of all lumber thereafter sawed by M. for them, and that they should pay that sum to the holders of the mortgage. Held, that the promise was valid and not within the statute of frauds; and the persons for whom the sawing was done were bound to withhold from M. such proportion of their saw-bill as they had thus agreed to pay to the holders of the mortgage, and were liable to the latter for the amount thereof whether they did or not so withhold it: Ibid.

68. B. hired out to V. to draw wood for D., but fearing that he would not get his pay went to D. and told him he would draw no more unless he could be assured of getting it. D. told him to go ahead and he would pay him and take it out of V. Whether this, instead of being a novation, was not void as a promise to pay another's debt, and whether Calkins v. Chandler (supra, § 67) is not vitally distinguishable from it in that the arrangement there sustained was concurred in by the intermediate party whose debt was to be paid, quere: Bates v. Donnelly, 57 M. 521.

69. A promise to pay for goods sold to the promisor but billed to a third person is not within the statute as a promise to pay another's debt: Hake v. Solomon, 62 M. 877.

70. A promise to the vendor to pay for such goods as may be furnished to a third person is original and not collateral, and is not within the statute as a promise to pay another's debt: Larson v. Jensen, 53 M. 427; Morris v. Osterhout, 55 M. 263.

71. A.'s promise to B. at C.'s request to pay out of a fund which should come into A.'s hands belonging to C. the amount of C.'s debt to B. is an original promise not within the statute: Mitts v. McMorran, 64 M. 664.

72. It seems that an oral promise to execute a paper undertaking to pay debts, in accepting a written offer of sale which stipulates that they shall be assumed, is not void under H. S. § 6185, subd. 2: Wagner v. Egleston, 49 M. 218.

73. A. is bound by his oral guaranty that a note offered by B. as part of the purchase price of a farm that C. is selling to B. is as good as gold or as good as money; this is not a guaranty that the note is collectible: Taylor v. Soper, 53 M. 96.

III. AGREEMENTS, ETC., RELATING TO LANDS.¹

As to the memorandum, etc., see supra, §§ 10-29.

¹ H. S. § 6179. No estate or interest in lands other than leases for a term not exceeding one year, nor any trust or power over or concerning lands, or in any manner relating thereto, shall hereafter be created, granted,

That express trusts in lands cannot be created by parol, see TRUSTS, §§ 7-22, 25.

74. Conveyances of land and interests therein must be by deed: Enos v. Sutherland, 11 M. 588; Morrill v. Mackman, 24 M. 279; Hayes v. Livingston, 84 M. 884; Nims v. Sherman, 48 M. 45; Shaw v. Chambers, 48 M. 855.

75. That which is evidenced by the deeds of conveyance cannot be changed on parol testimony of promises, agreements or understandings: Hayes v. Livingston, 84 M. 884.

76. The correction which changes a void into a good deed can only be made by conforming to the statute of frauds: Paine v. Newell, 66 M. 245.

77. The statute of frauds is against extending on parol testimony an ambiguous description in a mortgage, unless upon positive proofs: Hurst v. Beaver, 50 M. 612.

As to exclusion of parol evidence to alter contract, etc., see EVIDENCE, II, (d).

78. A grantee's title cannot be divested or revested in his grantor by destruction of the conveyance: Gugins v. Van Gorder, 10 M. 528; Warren v. Tobey, 82 M. 45; Mette v. Feldman, 45 M. 25; Hyne v. Osborn, 63 M. 285.

79. The interest which the grantor in a conveyance of land absolute in form but intended as a security has in the premises can only be transferred at law by a written instrument: Miner v. O'Harrow, 60 M. 91.

80. A parol sale of standing timber is void: Russell v. Myers, 32 M. 523; Wetmore v. Neuberger, 44 M. 862; Spalding v. Archibald, 52 M. 865.

81. Whether a parol sale of a growing crop on a valuable consideration is valid, quere: Vanderkarr v. Thompson, 19 M. 82. See REAL PROPERTY, §§ 2, 8.

82. In general an easement on the land of another cannot be created without deed: Miller v. Reeves, 1 M. 108. See Day v. Walden, 46 M. 575.

83. A privilege granted for an annual compensation to flow lands for an indefinite period is void unless in writing: Morrill v. Mackman, 24 M. 279.

84. A warranty or representation that real estate is not encumbered is not the creation, granting or surrendering or declaring of any estate, interest, etc., which the statute requires to be in writing: Huntington v. Wellington, 12 M. 10.

85. One cannot by mere waiver part with the legal title to land. As to waiver of the right that an execution purchaser has to demand and receive a sheriff's deed after the period for redemption has expired, quere: Whiting v. Butler, 29 M. 122.

86. Title to land cannot under the statute of frauds be divested from the owner by mere oral authority, or by the mere payment of money by another on a contract for the purchase of land: Truski v. Streseski, 60 M. 84.

87. A division line established by mutual agreement and acquiescence and constant occupancy for more than twenty years cannot be changed without writing: Burns v. Martin, 45 M. 22.

88. Unless the attempt to settle a doubtful boundary is honestly made in view of a question about it, the statute of frauds will prevent mere acquiescence in the boundary from operating as an estoppel: Cronin v. Gore, 88 M. 881.

That oral estoppels cannot pass the title to land or to interests therein, see ESTOPPEL, §§ 66-71.

Dedications to public uses are not within the statute: See DEDICATION, § 1.

89. An unauthorized sale of land cannot be ratified except in writing or by such conduct as creates an estoppel; and it must be by a party informed of the facts: Palmer v. Williams, 24 M. 328.

And as to ratification of unauthorized contract, see supra, § 28; infra, §§ 202-205.

90. The statute permits leases for a year to be created by parol: Morrill v. Mackman, 24 M. 279. But an oral lease for a term longer than one year is void: Huyser v. Chase, 18 M. 98. So is a lease for more than a year, executed by an agent not authorized in writing: Toan v. Pline, 60 M. 885. See infra, § 203.

91. Though an oral lease for more than a year is void, such a lease, reserving an annual rent under which the lessee has been put in possession, will be a good lease from year to year until terminated by notice: Morrill v. Mackman, 24 M. 279.

92. An oral lease for a stipulated annual assigned, surrendered or declared, unless by act or operation of law, or by a deed or conveyance in writing, subscribed by the party creating, granting, assigning, surrendering or declaring the same, or by some person thereunto by him lawfully authorized by writing.

§ 6180. The preceding section shall not be construed to affect in any manner the power of a testator in the disposition of his real estate by a last will and testament; nor to prevent any trust from arising or being extinguished by operation of law.

§ 6181. Every contract for the leasing for a longer period than one year, or for the sale of any lands, or any interest in lands, shall be void, unless the contract, or some note or memorandum thereof, be in writing, and signed by the party by whom the lease or sale is to be made, or by some person thereunto by him lawfully authorized by writing.

rent, no time being named, is a lease for a year: Benfey v. Congdon, 40 M. 288.

93. An agreement made in April for a year's tenancy from the 1st of May is not a lease for a term exceeding one year (H. S. § 6179) or a contract for the leasing for a longer period than one year (§ 6181), and it need not be in writing: Tillman v. Fuller, 13 M. 118; Whiting v. Ohlert, 52 M. 462.

94. Where a lessor assented to an assignment by his lessee, and agreed by parol to accept the assignee as his tenant and to look to him for the rent, this was held to be a sufficient surrender of the old lease by operation of law (H. S. § 6179): Logan v. Anderson, 2 D. 101.

95. A license, being merely a permission to do some act or series of acts on the licensor's land without any permanent interest in it, may be created by parol, and will protect the licensor until revoked: Morrill v. Mackman, 24 M. 279.

96. A parol license to cut and remove timber at a fixed price is valid until revoked. It is not a sale of an interest in lands, and is entirely outside of the statute of frauds: Greeley v. Stilson, 27 M. 153; Spalding v. Archibald, 52 M. 365.

97. Such a parol license is valid so far as executed before revocation, and cannot be revoked so as to undo what has been done or earned under it: Ibid.; Wetherbee v. Green, 22 M. 811; Wetmore v. Neuberger, 44 M. 362; Sovereign v. Ortmann, 47 M. 181.

98. Parol extensions of time to take off growing timber under a contract for its sale and removal, whether valid under the statute of frauds or not when made, are good as licenses so far as acted upon: Haskell v. Ayres, 85 M. 89.

99. Where standing timber was by written contract absolutely sold to be taken off in two years by the vendee, who had fully paid therefor, subsequent parol extensions not exceeding one year each were made by the vendor. As to the validity of such extensions, quere; at least they amounted to a revocable license: Williams v. Flood, 63 M. 487.

100. An oral contract for the sale of lands is void: Dwight v. Cutler, 3 M. 566, 578; Bonier v. Caldwell, 8 M. 463; Holland v. Hoyt, 14 M. 238; Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 M. 351, 364; Palmer v. Williams, 24 M. 328; Scott v. Bush, 26 M. 418; 29 M. 528; Colgrove v. Solomon, 34 M. 494, Liddle v. Needham, 39 M. 147; Curtis v. Abbe, 39 M. 441; Nims v. Sherman, 43 M. 45; Ayres v. Gallup, 44 M. 13; Sutton v. Rowley, 44 M. 112; Jackson v. Evans, 44 M. 510; De Moss v. Robinson, 46 M. 62; Peckham

v. Balch, 49 M. 179; Wardell v. Williams, 62 M. 50.

101. The statute of frauds does not require executory contracts to be under seal, but requires deeds only where trusts or powers or estates in land are created or assigned: Enos v. Sutherland, 11 M. 538; Hammond v. Hannin, 21 M. 374.

102. A written agreement for the sale of lands is void unless signed by the vendor: Abell v. Munson, 18 M. 306; Cook v. Bell, 18 M. 387; Maynard v. Brown, 41 M. 298.

103. An oral agreement for the purchase of lands, with a stipulation that money paid down may be retained as stipulated damages, is a single contract, and under the statute is void — the agreement for forfeiture as well as the other stipulations: Scott v. Bush, 26 M. 418, 29 M. 528.

104. An agreement to convey a right of way is an agreement to convey an interest in land, and must, it seems, be in writing to bind the land-owner: Detroit, H. & I. R. Co. v. Forbes, 30 M. 165, 175.

105. An oral agreement to devise real estate is void: De Moss v. Robinson, 46 M. 62.

106. A promise by an administratrix to a certain person that if the latter would attend a sale of real estate to be made by her and bid a certain amount her right of dower in the land would pass by the sale is void: Wright v. De Groff, 14 M. 164.

107. An agreement to execute a mortgage upon real estate is an agreement concerning interests in lands which, to be valid, must be in writing, or some note or memorandum thereof signed by the party making the promise: Wardell v. Williams, 62 M. 50.

108. A contract involving the transfer of real estate and assumption of debts must be written: Wagner v. Egleston, 49 M. 218.

109. An oral agreement to pay for services by a conveyance of lands is invalid: Hillebrands v. Nibbelink, 40 M. 646; Sutton v. Rowley, 44 M. 112.

110. The statute does not apply to a bargain between principal and agent whereby the latter is to be paid for his services in obtaining lands a certain proportion of the profits on the sale thereof: Carr v. Leavitt, 54 M. 540.

111. An oral agreement whereby one party was to furnish his time and experience in procuring the purchase of certain lands while the other was to furnish the money, the profits to be shared equally after a sale, there being no express agreement as to whose names should appear as grantees in the purchase deeds, is not within the statute: Davis v. Gerber, 69 M. 248 (April 6, '88).

112. Agreements to pay money for services in procuring the sale of real estate are not within the statute: Waterman R. E. Exchange v. Stephens, 71 M. — (June 22, '88).

113. Where an oral agreement is made for the transfer of a farm, and it is also agreed that the wheat growing on the farm shall be transferred, the former agreement, being void because not in writing, avoids the latter as inseparably connected with it: Jackson v. Evans, 44 M. 510.

114. Where a written contract for the sale of personalty includes real estate also, the contract for personalty is not necessarily vitiated by non-compliance with the statute of frauds in that portion which relates to realty: Stansell v. Leavitt, 51 M. 536.

115. A parol arrangement whereby a man, who had deeded land to his wife, reserving to himself by written contract the right of possession and of repurchase within five years, bargains to give up his right under such contract, is void under the statute of frauds; and a ruling to that effect is not made erroneous by the judge's adding incidentally that "if the arrangement amounted to anything it would make the wife tenant of the husband, which was impossible," such further remark being immaterial: Grover v. Buck, 34 M. 520.

116. L. and N. agreed orally that if N. would deed land to L.'s son L. would give him his note for a certain sum. N. deeded the land but L. refused to pay. Held, that N. could not recover from him, as an oral land contract is void and furnishes no consideration for a promise, and if any undertaking to pay for the land was implied the grantee was liable upon it: Liddle v. Needham, 39 M. 147.

117. A bill which averred that a wife, after correspondence with her absent husband and by his consent, executed a deed of his land, leaving a blank space for his signature, and received a part of the consideration, and that the purchaser took possession, prayed that the husband might be required to complete the execution of the deed. Held, that the bill would not lie, even though the husband had promised to execute it when he returned. His promise being oral was within the statute of frauds and the deed was totally void. The bill was dismissed without prejudice to the purchaser's right to resort to other remedies: Curtis v. Abbe, 39 M. 441.

118. An agreement to surrender or release an equitable estate in fee-simple must be in writing signed by the party transferring or releasing it, and if oral it cannot be shown to alter a written contract: McEwan v. Ortman, 34 M. 325.

119. The legal title held by a mortgager is not conveyed by oral agreement and delivery of possession of the land: Nims v. Sherman, 43 M. 45.

120. A contract to procure the conveyance of an equity of redemption held by a third person is, within the statute, a contract for the sale of an interest in lands, and is void if not in writing: Rawdon v. Dodge, 40 M. 697.

121. An agreement by one person to purchase an interest in lands for another is void: Raub v. Smith, 61 M. 543.

123. An oral agreement to form a copartnership for the purchase of timber land from which the manufacture and sale of lumber is to be carried on is within the statute: Raub v. Smith, 61 M. 543.

124. An agreement whereby plaintiff is to purchase land whereon a plaster-bed is located, for himself and defendant, the title to be in the names of both parties, and whereby both are to form a partnership to work the plaster, is within the statute: Brosnan v. McKee, 63 M. 454.

125. After a vendor in a land contract has put performance out of his power by conveying to a third person, an oral agreement to have the land conveyed to the vendor and then reconveyed to the original vendee on his paying up all the purchase money is within the statute of frauds, and cannot operate as a waiver of such vendee's right to treat the contract as rescinded and to recover the money paid: Weaver v. Aitcheson, 65 M. 285.

126. A house built by one who holds lands under a contract of purchase, being part of the realty, an oral agreement that it may be levied upon by virtue of an execution against chattels is void: Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 M. 351.

127. A. let B. take a yoke of oxen to use in clearing land for A.'s wife, and with the understanding that B. should own the oxen when he had done $100 worth of clearing. Held, that this arrangement was not within the statute: Sutherland v. Carter, 52 M. 151.

128. A written contract was supplemented by an oral agreement whereby one of the parties was to advance money and use it in buying an interest in land for the other. Held, that under the statute of frauds the arrangement had no force, and that as the obligation to buy could not bind the other party he could not be charged with the cost of executing such obligation: Wetmore v. Neuberger, 44 M. 862.

129. A parol agreement reserving crops growing on land contracted in writing to be sold is void: Vanderkarr v. Thompson, 19 M. 82.

130. A parol agreement for the reservation or exception of a barn or sheds from the operation of a deed is void under the statute of frauds, and the question whether an undertaking sued on is of that character is not to be determined by the name which the parties or their witnesses give it, but by the nature and substance of the transaction: Detroit, H. & I. R. Co. v. Forbes, 80 M. 165.

131. An undertaking to remove a barn and sheds situated upon a forty-acre tract in consideration of the giving of a deed of land lying fifty feet on each side of a proposed railroad route where it should cross such tract cannot be construed as an exception or reservation of the barn and sheds from the operation of the deed, in the absence of any showing of the actual location of the route of the railroad, or that it was so located as to include the ground where the barn and sheds stood, nor is such undertaking required to be in writing: Ibid.

132. A party who, by promising to assign a tax-purchase certificate to the owner of the land, has induced the latter not to exercise his right to redeem, cannot, after the time for redemption has expired, shield himself behind the statute: Laing v. McKee, 18 M. 124.

133. An agreement to surrender or release a parcel of land, mentioned in a contemporaneous contract, is not a defeasance but an agreement for a resale, and is within the statute: McEwan v. Ortman, 84 M. 325.

134. Under the statute of frauds, which requires all contracts for the sale of lands to be in writing and avoids them if not written and signed by the vendor, parol alterations cannot be made extending the time therein expressly fixed for performance: Abell v. Munson, 18 M. 306; Cook v. Bell, 18 M. 387.

135. The time limited for acceptance in a written offer to sell land cannot be extended by parol: Wardell v. Williams, 62 M. 50.

136. Nor can any oral stipulation inconsistent with the terms of a contract for the sale of lands be imported into it; e. g., one to release or surrender a parcel mentioned therein: McEwan v. Ortman, 84 M. 325.

IV. AGREEMENTS RELATING TO THE SALE OF GOODS AND CHATTELS.¹

As to the memorandum, see supra, §§ 6-9.

(a) In general.

137. The terms "goods, wares and merchandise," in H. S. §§ 6186, 6187, embrace animate as well as inanimate property: Weston v. McDowell, 20 M. 853. But no writing is necessary where animals sold are delivered to the vendee: Dean v. Adams, 44 M. 117.

138. An agreement to pay compensation to an agent for the sale of personal property, graduated by the price obtained from a third person on such sale, is not an agreement for the sale of chattels and is not required by H. S. § 6186 to be in writing: Hamilton v. Frothingham, 59 M. 258.

139. The same is true of an agreement to procure a purchaser of shares of stock conditioned on the promisee's subscribing therefor: Green v. Brookins, 28 M. 48.

140. A contract to paint a portrait is not a sale of chattels and is not required by H. S. § 6186 to be in writing though the price is more than $50: Turner v. Mason, 65 M. 663. So with a tailor's contract to make a coat: Rasch v. Bissell, 52 M. 455.

141. The purchase of goods which are to be delivered to one on the joint promise and credit of two is in legal effect, as between them and the vendor, a purchase by both, and not within the statute: Gibbs v. Blanchard, 15 M. 293.

142. An agreement by a debtor to sell and deliver certain property to his creditor for a price not exceeding $50, and to be credited therefor on the latter's books, which credit was immediately given, but without the vendor's knowledge, there being no delivery or payment of earnest money, nor any memorandum of sale signed by the vendor, held valid: Webster v. Bailey, 40 M. 641.

143. There can be no recovery on an oral sale of goods exceeding $50 in value unless something has been paid or some part of the goods delivered: Dooley v. Eilbert, 47 M. 615.

144. Where goods exceeding $50 in price are ordered, the vendee is not bound unless there is an acceptance in writing or some act done on the faith of the order: Goodspeed v. Wiard Plow Co., 45 M. 322.

145. An oral purchase by sample with a parol order for shipment do not constitute such a setting apart of the identical goods purchased as to take the case out of the statute, and prior to acceptance by the vendee they remain the vendor's property, who may retake the goods where the vendee dies while they are in transit to him: Smith v. Brennan, 62 M. 349.

146. Liquors worth $80 were sold on oral order and were shipped to the vendee by rail, and while in the possession of the railroad company, before acceptance by or delivery to the vendee, were seized on execution against him. Held, that the sale was within H. S. § 6186, and that the vendor could bring trover against the execution purchaser: Winner v. Williams, 62 M. 363.

147. An oral contract for the sale of iron ore worth more than $50 is within the statute of frauds if it is made between residents of Michigan, relates to property here that is to be selected, weighed and delivered here, and if it is to be performed here; it makes no difference where vendor's agents or servants reside: Foster v. Lumberman's Mining Co., 68 M. 188 (Jan. 12, '88).

(b) Earnest-money.

148. Where earnest-money is paid to an agent acting for several interests it will be regarded as belonging ratably to all, and will therefore bring all within the protection of the statute, which validates sales without delivery where earnest-money is given: Burhans v. Corey, 17 M. 282.

(c) Delivery and acceptance.

149. If an oral order is followed by delivery and acceptance the sale is completed and the case is taken out of the statute. So held where the vendee telegraphed cancelling the order, but upon receiving an answer that the goods had been shipped accepted them: Sullivan v. Sullivan, 70 M. 588.

150. A party contracted to sell a quantity of wood, part of which was piled in his yard and the rest whereof was afterwards hauled and piled by him. Then the vendee took possession of the wood and hired a man to repile it. Held, a sufficient delivery to take the case out of the statute: Richards v. Burroughs, 62 M. 117.

151. The delivery required by the statute where no payment is made or earnest-money given is not dispensed with by an agreement at the time that the vendee should take the property where it then was and the vendor not be troubled to make any delivery: Alderton v. Buchoz, 3 M. 322. Inquiry about the property by the vendee afterwards is not an exercise of ownership over it such as will take the case out of the operation of the statute: Ibid.

152. In an oral sale of ponderous articles incapable of actual delivery, if the purchaser accepts them where they are, and exercises acts of control and ownership over them, it will satisfy the statute; but where it does not appear that the articles (as here, mill-irons) are ponderous, or were so regarded by the parties, that fact cannot be assumed without proof: Ibid.

153. Delivery and acceptance of part of the goods purchased take the case out of the statute as to the whole: Ibid; Garfield v. Paris, 96 U. S. 557.

154. Acceptance sufficient to satisfy the statute may be constructive; so held where spirituous liquors were sold by parol, vendor agreeing to furnish certain copyrighted labels which added to the value of the liquors and entered into the price and were accepted by the vendee: Garfield v. Paris, 96 U. S. 557.

155. Acceptance of merchandise under a contract that is invalid by the statute of frauds cannot be implied from a tender of such merchandise made on one side without referring to any contract, and from a refusal on the other to take it then for want of time to attend to it, with a promise, however, to send for it when it should be needed: Scotten v. Sutter, 37 M. 526.

156. An oral purchase by two vendees of goods worth more than $50 is not taken out of the statute as to both by a subsequent acceptance of the goods by one without the other's knowledge or assent: Chamberlain v. Dow, 10 M. 819.

157. Whether receipt of goods by carrier selected by vendees is such an acceptance by them as satisfies the statute in absence of writing or earnest-money, quere: Barker v. Cleveland, 19 M. 280. It seems that acceptance by carrier employed by vendee is effectual where the latter reserves no right of personal inspection or decision: Grimes v. Van Vechten, 20 M. 410.

158. But reception and assumption of custody by a carrier who is to take the goods to vendee subject to acceptance by him does not complete an oral sale so as to take it out of the statute: Rindskopf v. De Ruyter, 39 M. 1.

159. And where an oral sale would otherwise be void and there is a delivery of the goods in pursuance of the same contract to a carrier who has no separate and independent authority from the vendee to receive them, reception by the carrier does not amount to an acceptance by the vendee so as to bar the statute: Grimes v. Van Vechten, 20 M. 410; Webber v. Howe, 36 M. 150; Smith v. Brennan, 62 M. 349.

160. The administrator of a deceased vendee cannot accept goods orally ordered by his intestate and thus take the case out of the statute: Smith v. Brennan, 62 M. 349.

V. AGREEMENTS NOT TO BE PERFORMED WITHIN ONE YEAR.¹

As to the memorandum, see supra, §§ 3-5, 23.

161. One who counts on a contract not to be performed within a year from the time of its making must show that the contract, or a memorandum of it, was reduced to writing and signed by the defendant or on his behalf: Palmer v. Marquette & Pacific Rolling Mill Co., 32 M. 274.

162. An executed oral agreement for the sale of the good-will of one's professional practice is not void under the statute as one not to be performed within a year. When the practice is transferred, paid for and entered upon, the parties have done what they could to make the transaction complete, even if the purchaser does not, within the year, reap all the benefits he expects from it: Doty v. Martin, 32 M. 462.

163. A contract that in consideration of the plaintiff's procuring the defendant to be admitted as a partner, having a certain interest in a joint venture and in the business to be carried on and the profits to be made by it, the latter would at the end of three years pay whatever the business as then developed would show that interest to have been fairly worth when the contract was entered into, is within H. S. § 6185, subd. 2: Whipple v. Parker, 29 M. 369.

164. A contract whereby A., fifteen years old, is to work for B. until he, A., comes of age, B. to supply schooling in the winter and clothing, and at the end of the service certain articles of personalty, is void under the statute: Burroughs v. Morse, 48 M. 520.

165. A contract to cut, haul and deliver afloat in a certain stream all the logs that can be cut from specified lands "at the rate of two million feet, board measure, every winter, and as much more as the owners of said timber shall desire," is not one by the terms whereof performance cannot be made within one year; and an agreement extending the time of the annual cutting from year to year need not be in writing: Barton v. Gray, 48 M. 164, 57 M. 622.

166. An agreement for a lease is performed by making the lease; hence, an oral agreement to make a lease within a year for the term of a year to commence on a future day is not within the statute: Tillman v. Fuller, 18 M. 113; Whiting v. Ohlert, 52 M. 462.

167. The statute does not apply to contracts the terms of which are such as to leave it uncertain whether they may or may not be performed with a year: Barton v. Gray, 57 M. 623.

168. Where one promised to pay for services rendered, improvements made, etc., out of his estate after his death, the promise was not within the statute, for at the time of its making it was possible that it might be performed within a year: Sword v. Keith, 31 M. 247.

169. An oral agreement between father and son that the latter shall support his parents during their lives is not one that by its terms may not be performed within one year: Carr v. McCarthy, 70 M. 258.

170. An unwritten contract to be performed within a year is not made void, under the statute, by parol extension from time to time for periods of less than a year: Donovan v. Richmond, 61 M. 467.

VI. AGREEMENTS IN CONSIDERATION OF MARRIAGE.²

171. An ante-nuptial parol agreement to settle property on the wife is void: Wood v. Savage, 2 D. 316.

172. One's parol promise to give his daughter certain lands upon her marriage is doubly within the statute of frauds because it concerns land and because it is in consideration of marriage; nor does the marriage take it out of the statute: Welch v. Whelpley, 62 M. 15.

VII. REPRESENTATIONS AS TO CREDIT, ETC.³

173. Representations concerning the credit of a corporation are within H. S. § 6188, which prohibits actions on oral representations concerning another's character, ability, trade or dealings: Bush v. Sprague, 51 M. 41.

¹ H. S. § 6185, subd. 1, avoids "every agreement that, by its terms, is not to be performed within one year from the making thereof," unless in writing, etc.

² H. S. § 6185, subd. 3, avoids "every agreement, promise or undertaking made upon consideration of marriage, except mutual promise to marry," unless in writing, etc.

174. But that section does not apply to a case in which defendants are charged with conspiring to form a corporation for the purpose of defrauding plaintiff and with carrying out their fraudulent purposes by a course of dealing tending to make him believe the alleged corporation to be of good credit: Ibid.

175. Nor to the representations made by the owner of corporate stock (which he was seeking to sell to plaintiff) as to the business of the corporation and the value of its stock: French v. Fitch, 67 M. 492.

176. H. S. § 6188 is confined to cases where the representations form no part of a contract: Huntington v. Wellington, 12 M. 10.

177. H. S. § 6188 does not apply where the holder of a note seeks to recover against an indorser whose signature was obtained by means of his own false and fraudulent representations as to the maker's solvency: Lenheim v. Fay, 27 M. 70.

178. Nor where a person induced a dealer to supply brick to contractors engaged in building houses for him, he falsely representing — orally — to the dealer that he had sufficient money coming to them under his control, and that the dealer should be paid first: Daniel v. Robinson, 66 M. 296, 299.

VIII. MISCELLANEOUS CASES.

179. The statute does not require a vendee's agreement to pay purchase money to be in writing: Holland v. Hoyt, 14 M. 238; Scott v. Bush, 26 M. 418; Burke v. Wüßer, 42 M. 327; Huff v. Hall, 56 M. 456.

180. Mortgages, being chattel interests, may be transferred or extinguished without writing: Cooper v. Ulmann, W. 251; Dougherty v. Randall, 3 M. 581; Martin v. McReynolds, 6 M. 70; Pease v. Warren, 29 M. 9; Nims v. Sherman, 43 M. 45.

181. The statute of frauds concerning trusts does not apply to trusts in personality, which may, therefore, be evidenced by parol: Catlin v. Birchard, 18 M. 110; Bowker v. Johnson, 17 M. 42; Bostwick v. Mahaffey, 48 M. 342; Calder v. Moran, 49 M. 14.

182. An interest that rests in parol may be extinguished by parol: First National Bank v. McAllister, 46 M. 397.

183. And it seems that, against the legal owner of land, equities may be extinguished otherwise than by conveyance under the statute of frauds: Munch v. Shabel, 37 M. 166.

184. An assignment of a laborer's claims against a company that has employed him need not be in writing: Donovan v. Halsey Fire Engine Co., 58 M. 38.

185. Nor need an agreement between attorney and client that the former shall prosecute the latter's suit and pay all costs, receiving half the recovery if successful: Willey v. Crane, 69 M. 17.

186. A parol acceptance of a draft or bill of exchange is void under H. S. § 1583: Elliott v. Miller, 8 M. 132; Pfaff v. Cummings, 67 M. 148.

187. An indorser's consent to the alteration of paper need not be in writing: Stewart v. First National Bank, 40 M. 348.

188. An account stated need not be in writing: Sperry v. Moore's Estate, 42 M. 353; Watkins v. Ford, 69 M. 357.

After discharge in bankruptcy a new promise to pay or an acknowledgment of debt need not be in writing: See BANKRUPTCY, § 28.

IX. PART PERFORMANCE; EXECUTED OR RATIFIED CONTRACTS.

As to what is sufficient part performance to warrant decree of SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE, see that title, I, (b), 8.

189. The statute will not bear any exception that cannot rest on the substantial equities of a partly-performed contract: Baker v. Johnston, 21 M. 319, 348.

190. An oral contract for the sale of land is made valid by part performance: Scott v. Bush, 26 M. 418; Davis v. Strobridge, 44 M. 157.

191. The effect of part performance on a void contract is not to make it enforceable at law, but to raise such equities against whichever party permits the other to rely on it as may justify a court of equity in enforcing it specifically against him: Dickinson v. Wright, 56 M. 42.

192. The grantor of land who had conveyed it by deed absolute in form but intended as a security, having had an offer from a third person for the land, informed B., the grantee, thereof, who told him he would like to take the land himself for the price, and it was orally agreed B. should have it, and possession was given up to him accordingly. B. subsequently sold the land for a larger price to the third person. Held, that the parol contract had been carried out by performance; that B.'s promise was based on a sufficient consideration, and that he was liable for the price: Miner v. O'Harrow, 60 M. 91.

193. Part payment of an existing debt in money, under an arrangement to accept payment partly in money and partly in land held by a third person, and in the debtor's discharge of a mortgage he held against the land in question, cannot operate as such a part performance of an oral contract to accept the land as payment as to take the case out of the statute; such part payment was but payment of so much of an existing debt, and the discharge of the mortgage was not a fact of part performance at all, but merely a preparatory act to put the vendor in condition to tender performance: Colgrove v. Solomon, 84 M. 494.

194. In a particular case the partial execution of an oral agreement varying the terms of a lease of water-power was held to take the whole agreement out of the statute: Norris v. Showerman, 2 D. 16.

195. Whether a mere oral promise of such a character that by the statute it would have to be in writing to be of any force constitutes of itself a sufficient consideration for another promise to render the latter binding at the time it is made, quere. Where such oral promise has been fully performed within a reasonable time, and before the promise in consideration of which it was made has been retracted, and such performance has been accepted, the defendant's promise becomes binding and can be enforced: Detroit, H. & I. R. Co. v. Forbes, 80 M. 165.

196. An oral agreement is valid so far as it has been carried out, even though when made it referred for its terms to another contract not then signed and not in fact signed afterwards, and therefore invalid. Nor can such an agreement be so revoked as to undo what has been earned under it: Sovereign v. Ortman, 47 M. 181.

197. A logging contract with the owners of certain pine lands provided that they were to sell the other parties, on certain terms, all the white pine the latter should cut from the lands before a certain date. The signing of the contract was delayed, but meanwhile the parties made an oral agreement that the purchasers should proceed with their lumbering. The original contract was not signed after all, and the owners of the land replevied the logs which the other parties had got out and forwarded to buyers, whereupon the purchasers sued for damages. Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to all the interests which they had earned under their parol agreement so far as they had executed it, whether it made them agents or equitable owners, and that they could recover their agreed compensation or the money had and received by defendants to their use, or such damages as might appear, according to the nature of the agreement; the case was one for the jury: Ibid.

198. The owner of land made an oral agreement with defendant to convey to him the land subject to a mortgage, defendant agreeing to pay the same and the mortgage notes, and to hold the vendor harmless. Subsequently the vendor quitclaimed the land to defendant's sons at the request of defendant, who renewed his agreement to pay the notes and mortgage. Held, that the conveyance to the sons was equivalent to a sale to defendant, and the conveyance, delivery and acceptance of possession took the case out of the statute: Waldron v. Laird, 65 M. 237.

199. A parol trust in lands, when executed or recognized, is not to be disturbed: Barber v. Milner, 48 M. 248; Patton v. Chamberlain, 44 M. 5.

200. In trover by an administrator against a son of the deceased, evidence of a parol agreement faithfully executed by the defendant who had made it with the deceased and his wife, and by which the defendant was to remain on the farm, manage affairs and support his parents during their lives in consideration of what there was of the property, was held admissible, notwithstanding the objection that it showed an oral arrangement required by the statute of frauds to be in writing: Hill v. Chambers, 80 M. 422.

201. If the parties to a sale that would be void under the statute of frauds choose to treat it as valid, it will be so as to them, and may become effectual for all purposes: Spalding v. Archibald, 52 M. 865.

202. The absence of proof of written authority to an agent to execute a land contract is unimportant where there is full proof of ratification by both parties by demand and receipt of payment and by possession and improvement: Hanchett v. McQueen, 32 M. 22; Bailey v. Cornell, 66 M. 107.

203. Failure to sign a written lease does not destroy the effect of a previous arrangement that had been practically executed in part by an exchange of possession which took it out of the statute of frauds: Switzer v. Gardner, 41 M. 164.

204. Leases for more than one year are invalid if executed by an agent not authorized in writing; but when the lessee has been put in possession and has enjoyed the premises for a full year, the executed agreement is good for that period at least, and the lessee is liable for the accrued rent: Toan v. Pline, 60 M. 385.

205. Where the officers of an association have given a written agreement whereby the recipient is declared entitled to a specified portion of certain described land held by the association under a lease, and this agreement is ratified and confirmed on the books of the association, the objection that a subsequent oral agreement to perfect the title and give him the interest was void under the statute of frauds was considered unimportant where this agreement also was ratified, confirmed and entered on the books, especially as the title was afterwards perfected, which fact in itself would have left the original agreement, if valid, sufficient to assure the same interest: Compo v. Jackson Iron Co., 49 M. 39.

X. PLEADING AND EVIDENCE; EFFECT OF THE STATUTE.

206. A bill to enforce an agreement involving an interest in lands is demurrable if it appears on its face that the agreement is void under the statute of frauds; and if not appearing, it is so involved in the case as to prevent recovery without proof or waiver of proof of a statutory right. But the defence may be lost by not insisting on it or bringing it before the court: Eveland v. Stephenson, 45 M. 394.

207. A declaration on a guaranty within the purview of the statute of frauds need not aver that the guaranty was in writing: Dayton v. Williams, 2 D. 81.

208. Nor need it aver that the undertaking guarantied, though that also was within the purview of the statute, was made with the formalities which the statute requires: Ibid.

209. Goods being found by two jointly in the St. Clair river, it was agreed that defendant should sell the same and divide the proceeds. Suit being brought upon this agreement, defendant claimed that under the statute relative to lost goods no sale could lawfully have been made within a year, and the agreement, which was not in writing, was therefore void. Held that, to render the statute applicable, he should have shown that the finding was within the state: Cummings v. Stone, 18 M. 70.

210. The sufficiency, under the statute, of a description of land in a contract for its sale is a question which arises on the face of the paper; and, it seems, should be settled by inspection thereof before the introduction of extrinsic evidence to connect the contract with any particular premises: Eggleston v. Wagner, 46 M. 610.

211. The admission of oral evidence to prove an agreement for the transfer of an interest in lands is none the less error because the agreement itself was void: Rawdon v. Dodge, 40 M. 697.

212. A parol agreement that would be void under the statute of frauds may nevertheless be put in evidence in an action on it to the extent to which the parties have carried it out, since they have so far agreed to be governed by its terms: Fuller v. Rice, 52 M. 435.

213. A contract void under the statute of frauds is a mere nullity, and cannot be used or be binding for any purpose whatever: Scott v. Bush, 26 M. 418; Lentz v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 53 M. 444; Raub v. Smith, 61 M. 548; Wardell v. Williams, 62 M. 50.

214. An agreement void under the statute because not written cannot be considered in measuring damages or for any other purpose: Hillebrands v. Nibbelink, 40 M. 646; Sutton v. Rowley, 44 M. 112.

215. A contract void under the statute of frauds can support no rights, legal or equitable: Kelly v. Kelly, 54 M. 30.

216. For the breach of a contract void under the statute there can in law be no damages, stipulated or otherwise: Scott v. Bush, 29 M. 523.

217. A promise void under the statute of frauds cannot be enforced as an estoppel where the party has not been misled as to the facts. Accordingly, where an administratrix promised one that if the latter would attend a sale of real estate to be made by her and bid a certain amount her right of dower in the land should pass by the sale, it was held that she was not thereby estopped from claiming it: Wright v. De Groff, 14 M. 164.

218. A contract that is within the statute and void because not in writing cannot be recognized as creating a moral obligation which in its turn should be held a sufficient consideration to take any part of the contract out of the statute: Scott v. Bush, 29 M. 523.

219. An oral promise to pay the debt of another, being void under the statute of frauds, is not a valid consideration for a subsequent promise in writing: Hall v. Soule, 11 M. 494.

220. A promise made in consideration of an oral executory contract to deed land is void for want of consideration: Liddle v. Needham, 39 M. 147.

221. It seems that, when the only consideration for defendant's promise is plaintiff's promise or undertaking, which is invalid because merely oral, such consideration is insufficient: Detroit, H. & I. R. Co. v. Forbes, 80 M. 165, 176.

222. Payment by A. under his oral contract with B. to pay the latter's debts and obtain discharge of mortgages upon his land, B.

to convey his real estate to A., cannot create an equitable lien upon the land, though perhaps recoverable in assumpsit: Kelly v. Kelly, 54 M. 90.

223. An oral bargain that is not a valid contract under the statute needs no rescission, being utterly void: Colgrove v. Solomon, 34 M. 494.

224. An oral contract by two persons jointly to purchase articles within the statute cannot be made effectual against both by the subsequent ratification by one of them, the contract being wholly void: Chamberlain v. Dou, 10 M. 819.

225. A contract void under the statute is wholly, not partially, void, and cannot furnish authority to a third person to ratify it: Grimes v. Van Vechten, 20 M. 410.

226. Nor can one who has not sufficient authority to bind his principal under the statute of frauds by a contract for the sale of lands accomplish the same result by way of estoppel: Holland v. Hoyt, 14 M. 288.

227. The statute does not prevent one who has surrendered his contract from recovering the consideration he has paid: Sullivan v. Dunham, 42 M. 518.

228. A vendee of land under oral contract can refuse to carry out his contract—where nothing has been done to take the case out of the statute—and can recover back what he has paid: Scott v. Bush, 26 M. 418, 29 M. 523; Nims v. Sherman, 43 M. 45; Kelly v. Kelly, 54 M. 80; Wright v. Dickinson, 67 M. 580 (Nov. 10, '87).

229. Money advanced on an oral agreement to purchase lands, to be held as stipulated damages on default in the purchaser, and otherwise to be applied as part of the purchase money, may be recovered back, even though the vendor offers to convey, where no possession has been given or act done so as to take the case out of the statute: Scott v. Bush, 26 M. 418, 29 M. 523.

230. Even though the contract stipulates for such retention or compensation for vendor's expenses and trouble: Scott v. Bush, 29 M. 523.

231. Nor can money so advanced be retained on the claim that there was a sufficient consideration for the payment growing out of collateral matter which in effect was but part of the void contract itself: Ibid.

232. C. bought land of S., but the sale was cancelled and C. reconveyed to S., who, however, retained the money paid; but an oral agreement was made that S. should pay back partly in money and partly by means of land owned by A. whereon S. held a mortgage, and which A. was to convey to C. S. made the part payment and discharged his mortgage, but C. refused to accept a deed of the land. Held, that C. could recover the rest of the original payment made by her: Colgrove v. Solomon, 34 M. 494.

233. One who goes into possession under an oral contract, makes payments and cuts timber cannot maintain an action to recover back such payments: Cilley v. Burkholder, 41 M. 749.

234. The statute of frauds does not preclude recovery for the price of lands actually conveyed, whether the agreement for the price is written or oral: Holland v. Hoyt, 14 M. 288.

235. In an action on the common counts to recover back the value of a consideration paid, received and appropriated under a contract void under the statute of frauds, held, that the contract might be referred to to show the equitable circumstances under which the consideration was received in order to reduce the value, but that it could not be used by the plaintiff to aid him in recovering beyond the real value of such consideration: Whipple v. Parker, 29 M. 369.

236. The statute does not preclude a suit by a principal against his agent for money equitably due the former in consequence of a fraudulent transaction whereby the agent bought lands of his principal and sold them at a higher price: Moore v. Mandlebaum, 8 M. 433.

237. In an action for fraud in the sale of lands, perpetrated by pointing out and pretending to sell to one ignorant of the manner of describing lands in deeds, and unable to read, a parcel of valuable land, and then fraudulently deeding in lieu thereof a different and worthless parcel, evidence of the fraudulent transaction cannot be excluded on the ground that the agreement to sell the land, not being in writing, was void under the statute of frauds: Ochsenkehl v. Jeffers, 32 M. 482.

I. LIABILITY OF SURETY.

1. The contract or undertaking of a surety is a contract by one person to be answerable for the payment of some debt or the performance of some act or duty in case of the failure of some other person who is himself primarily responsible for such payment or performance: Roberts v. Hawkins, 70 M. 566.

2. A surety is one who, being liable to pay a debt or perform an obligation, is entitled, if it is enforced against him, to be indemnified by some other person who ought himself to have paid or performed before the surety was compelled to do so: Smith v. Sheldon, 35 M. 42.

3. It is immaterial in what form the relation of principal and surety is established, or whether the creditor is or is not contracted with in the two capacities; the relation is fixed by the arrangement and equities between the debtor or obligors, and may or may not be known to the creditor: Ibid.

4. The relation of principal and surety grows out of the consent of the parties, and the principles that belong to it in regard to the recovery over do not necessarily apply to a case where the relation does not arise from consent, but is caused by a positive wrong committed by one against another; e. g., where an officer without intentional wrong on his part has been induced, by means of fraudulent representation, to seize a third person's property, for which seizure he has been held responsible: Kenyon v. Woodruff, 33 M. 310.

5. The undertaking of a surety, though it may be contemporaneous, is not joint with that of the principal debtor, but is merely accessory and collateral to it: Farmers', etc. Bank v. Kingsley, 2 D. 379.

6. A contract of suretyship need not be contemporaneous with the principal obligation: Miller v. Finley, 26 M. 249.

7. One who indorses a note for the maker's accommodation and without consideration is a surety of the maker: Farmers', etc. Bank v. Kingsley, 2 D. 379.

8. Retiring partners whose copartner has agreed to pay the firm debts are in the position of sureties, and are discharged from their liability to a creditor of the firm who, with knowledge of the facts, disregards their rights as sureties in dealing with the partner so assuming such debts: Smith v. Sheldon, 35 M. 42; Johnson v. Emerick, 70 M. 215 (May 11, '88).

9. The agreement of a surety is not binding where, without his knowledge, the bargain between the primary parties out of which it springs is contaminated by positive illegalities; nor does his equity at all depend upon the question whether the principals could demand the like relief: Denison v. Gibson, 24 M. 187.

10. An extension of credit will uphold a contract of suretyship: Lee v. Wisner, 38 M. 62.

11. If sureties when they sign a bond make it a condition that it shall not be delivered until executed by others as sureties, whose names are therein inserted, and it is delivered to the principal or his agent on this condition, it seems that until performance of the condition there can be no legal or effective delivery: People v. Brown, 2 D. 9.

12. Where a bond for costs was expressly worded as though the suitor had become obligor jointly with others who signed it in his behalf upon the condition that it should not be used until his signature was obtained, the sureties are not liable upon a delivery without his signature; nor does the fact that he was liable independently and at all events alter the case: Hall v. Parker, 87 M. 590.

13. An official bond of a township treasurer was drawn up in the usual manner, setting forth the officer as principal and others as sureties, and it was accepted by the supervisors without the sureties' knowledge or consent that it was not to be signed by the principal. Held, that the sureties were not bound: Johnston v. Kimball, 89 M. 187.

14. The sole liability of sureties upon a bond which names their principal as an obligor, but which he has not signed, cannot be established without positive proof that they delivered the bond to be operative against themselves alone: Ibid.; Hall v. Parker, 89 M. 287.

15. Where an appeal bond names certain persons as sureties, it must be presumed that each one contemplates that the rest will join in its execution; and one who sues on the bond has the burden of explaining the omission of any one to do so: Woodin v. Durfee, 46 M. 424.

16. Where a replevin bond contains the name of the plaintiff as a principal in the body of it, but is not signed by him, the presumptions are against its validity (see Green v. Kindy, 43 M. 279); but it is valid as against the surety if shown to have been delivered by him with the intention that it should be binding without the principal's signature: Cahill's Appeal, 48 M. 616.

17. A surety signed a bond for the release of attached property on the understanding or condition that a certain person — whose name was inserted — should sign as co-surety; and with notice of this the bond was accepted, the co-surety's name, however, being stricken out, and in its place was put the name of another person who actually signed as surety unknown to the first surety. Held, that the first surety was released: Hessell v. Johnson, 63 M. 623.

18. A surety cannot escape liability on a bond as having signed only on condition that a specified co-surety should be procured before it was used, if he had delivered it to the principal to be completed with nothing on its face to show that such a condition was imposed: Gibbs v. Johnson, 63 M. 671.

19. Where two bonds were given at the same time to release attached property, the fact that in the body of one bond names of two sureties were written had no tendency to show that the attorney of the attaching creditors, who drew both bonds, knew of the condition that a particular person should be procured as co-surety in the other bond: Ibid.

20. That failure to procure a freeholder as co-surety does not release surety on bond for release in attachment, see Ibid.

21. Where a bond required to be filed in a public office has been signed in blank by a surety and entrusted to the principal or other person to be filled out with the name of a specified person as co-surety, it binds the surety notwithstanding non-compliance with the condition, unless such condition was made known to the approving officer or was suggested on the face of the bond; the officer need not leave his office to make personal inquiries: McCormick v. Bay City, 23 M. 457; Brown v. Kent Probate Judge, 43 M. 501; Hessell v. Johnson, 63 M. 623. So held of a guardian's bond. Nor would the fact that the obligation clause in a printed form was so filled out as to read "sureties" be enough to suggest to the approving officer such a condition: Brown v. Kent Probate Judge, 43 M. 501.

22. Where a debtor made a note to his creditor and signed his own name thereto, and then, without authority, that of two copartnerships of which he was a member, and then went with the creditor's agent to defendants, who also, at his request, signed the note as sureties, and neither the agent nor defendants were aware of the want of authority in the debtor to sign the copartnership names to the note, it was held that defendants were liable thereon: Bowen v. Mead, 1 M. 432.

23. The estate of a deceased surety is liable upon an injunction bond signed by him jointly with the principal obligors: Stewart's Appeal, 39 M. 619.

(b) Creditor and surety; relation between, how regarded.

24. The rights of sureties are always favored in the law, and persons standing in that relation are not held except so far as an intention to bind themselves is clearly manifested: Columbus Sewer Pipe Co. v. Ganster, 58 M. 385.

25. A surety's promise cannot be enlarged in the slightest particular without his consent: Bullock v. Taylor, 39 M. 187.

26. A surety can insist that he will not be bound except upon his own terms, and his obligation cannot fairly be extended beyond the scope of his written contract: Johnston v. Kimball, 39 M. 187.

27. No covenants that do not appear on the face of the bond can be implied as against the surety: Bishop v. Freeman, 42 M. 533.

28. Sureties execute a bond in view of its recitals, and their liability cannot be enlarged by contradicting the recitals and showing facts which they cannot be assumed to have known of: Gunn v. Geary, 44 M. 615.

29. A surety's contract is not to be enlarged beyond its terms: Ferguson v. Davis, 65 M. 677.

30. The undertaking of sureties cannot be enlarged by the courts: Michie v. Ellair, 60 M. 73.

31. The obligation of sureties is strictissimi juris, and is not to be enlarged by a proceeding had without their knowledge or consent: Evers v. Sager, 28 M. 47.

32. Creditors having no knowledge of the relations of their debtors to each other, as principal or surety, will not be affected in their rights by such relation; but if they know that one party is surety merely, they are bound, in any subsequent action they may take regarding the debt, not to lose sight of the surety's equities: Smith v. Shelden, 35 M. 42.

33. A creditor is not precluded from recovering against his debtor's surety if he does not know of any confidential relation between the two and has no reason to believe the debtor was guilty of fraud or improper concealment as against the surety: Lee v. Wisner, 38 M. 82.

34. If a surety is induced to become such by a fraud perpetrated on him by his principal's creditors — as by false representations as to material facts — the surety may make the defence of fraud: Waterbury v. Andrews, 67 M. 281.

35. Where a joint maker of a promissory note writes after his signature the word "surety" he does not thereby change or limit his liability to the payee or holder, or make it the latter's duty to proceed at his request against the other maker: Inkster v. First National Bank, 30 M. 143.

36. A surety is not the agent of the common creditor to enforce the latter's demand, for the creditor would not be bound by the surety's act, and until payment may look to any or all the other sureties: Backus v. Coyne, 45 M. 584.

37. A surety who, after time given by the creditor to the principal, promises to pay the debt with full knowledge of the facts, is liable without any new consideration for the promise. The action in such case is upon the original contract, and not upon the new promise: Porter v. Hodenpuy, 9 M. 11.

38. Where a surety on a promissory note secured himself by taking a chattel mortgage on a growing crop of wheat, an arrangement between him and the holder of the note that his principal might market the wheat and account to the holder for the proceeds is supported by sufficient consideration, in that the surety would lose his mortgage lien on any wheat thus marketed, and in marketing it the principal would be the agent of the holder. Whether or not the principal was a party to the arrangement would be immaterial if he assented to act and did act on it. It would also be immaterial whether the mortgage covered other property; for if the surety was discharged in law from his obligation as surety he could not keep the security alive to protect the holder of the note: Chanter v. Reardon, 32 M. 162.

39. In a complicated case upon a bill for accounting filed by an indorser the rights of surety and creditor growing out of arrangements and proceedings by the creditor subsequent to the indorsement were considered: Hosie v. Barbour, 49 M. 506.

40. Where the principal in a bond makes default in payment, the notice required to bind his surety need not be in writing unless so stipulated: Lee v. Briggs, 39 M. 592.

41. Where a bond required that demand upon the surety be made within a given time, a demand by the obligee's husband was held sufficient, though he did not expressly state that he made it in his wife's behalf, where no question of his authority was made at the time, and the facts indicated that it was assumed he made it in her name: Ibid.

42. No recovery can be had against the sureties on a bond for the jail limits, where the bond recites that the principal is in custody by virtue of a capias ad respondendum and the evidence shows it to be under a capias ad satisfaciendum, the measure of damages in the first instance being the actual damages sustained by the plaintiff, while in the second it is the amount of the execution: Gunn v. Geary, 44 M. 615.

(c) Evidence establishing the fact of suretyship.

43. One joint maker of a note may show in an action by the payee thereon that he was a surety for the other and that the payee knew the fact: Barron v. Cady, 40 M. 259.

44. So in the case of a note that is several as well as joint: Stevens v. Oaks, 58 M. 343.

45. It is always competent to show that any obligation, whatever its form, was in fact made for the debt or liability of another, so that the contract is one of suretyship: Canadian Bank of Commerce v. Coumbe, 47 M. 358.

46. As against a purchaser of a past-due note it may be shown that an indorser became such for the maker's accommodation and at the request of the original holder, so that such indorser was entitled to be dealt with as a mere surety: Simons v. Morris, 53 M. 155.

47. Where an accommodation maker writes his name across the back instead of signing on the face of the note, this indicates, though not conclusively, an intention to sign as surety, not as joint maker, and it puts the original creditor on his guard: Moynahan v. Hanaford, 42 M. 329.

48. Parol evidence is admissible as between indorsers whose names successively appear upon a note to show that they are accommodation indorsers, and were, by agreement among themselves, co-sureties for the maker, and so liable to contribution: Farwell v. Ensign, 66 M. 600.

49. Where a bond expressly states that some of its signers are bound as principals and others as sureties, the relations of the signers cannot be shown by parol to be otherwise: Coots v. Farnsworth, 61 M. 497; Farnsworth v. Coots, 46 M. 117.

(d) Judgment against principal or surety or both.

50. Sureties on an executor's bond having been notified of application for leave to sue such bond were held bound by decree jurisdictionally passed against their principal on his accounting in the probate court: Clark v. Fredenburg, 43 M. 263; Holden v. Lathrop, 65 M. 652.

51. Sureties are concluded by a regular judgment against their principal, but not by a secret confession of judgment fraudulently and collusively made between their principal and the obligee; and in such case they may seek discharge in chancery: Wright v. Hake, 38 M. 525.

52. A surety in a replevin bond is not discharged by a judgment which, though consented to by both parties, was rendered upon data that had been lawfully ascertained by the court: Estey v. Harmon, 40 M. 645.

53. The surety in an injunction bond who has undertaken to abide by the decree and pay such damages as may be awarded against his principal is bound by such decree: Lothrop v. Southworth, 5 M. 436.

54. The power to render judgment against sureties on bonds in legal proceedings without separate action is statutory, and cannot be extended by implication: Willard v. Fralick, 31 M. 431.

55. And such summary judgment cannot be sustained except where the surety must be understood to have agreed to it by his contract: Mitchell v. Shuert, 17 M. 65.

Validity of statutes permitting summary judgment: See CONSTITUTIONS, §§ 37, 39.

56. H. S. § 7663, permitting judgment to be immediately entered against the surety for costs when judgment is recovered against his principal, does not apply to sureties in bonds given on appeals from commissioners on estates or from the probate court; their undertaking is not for costs only: Willard v. Fralick, 31 M. 431; Bondie v. Bourassa, 46 M. 321; Reed v. Northrup, 50 M. 442; Booth v. Radford, 57 M. 357.

57. Plaintiff recovered judgment before a justice, and on an appeal by defendant recovered judgment for a less amount in the circuit court, where, on motion, he took judgment against the sureties in the appeal bond, and then took the case to the supreme court on case made. Held, that the latter court, on increasing the judgment in plaintiff's favor, could not render judgment against the sureties: Mitchell v. Shuert, 17 M. 65.

58. Sureties for plaintiff in certiorari may be included in judgment entered anew in the circuit court, with interest, against their principal: McDermid v. Redpath, 39 M. 372.

59. A security for costs in justice's court may be included in the judgment rendered against his principal on certiorari as well as on appeal: McLean v. Isbell, 44 M. 129; Boatz v. Berg, 51 M. 9.

60. Judgment for costs will not be given in the supreme court against a security for costs on reversing a judgment in favor of a plaintiff in whose behalf the security was given, where the costs awarded are those of the supreme court, and where those of the circuit court, which the security was primarily given for, are left to abide the result of a new trial: Ortmann v. Merchants' Bank, 42 M. 464. See Schuetzen Bund v. Agitations Verein, 44 M. 313.

61. But where, in a suit originally begun in justice's court and appealed to the circuit, where plaintiff was required to give security for costs, defendant obtained in the supreme court a judgment for costs of all courts, judgment was entered in the supreme court against the security: Gay v. Hults, 56 M. 153.

62. Judgment against surety for costs is entered "immediately" (H. S. § 7663) if entered when the successful party first moves for judgment, even though the clerk, in entering final judgment, did not notice that there were sureties: Ibid.

63. Judgment against sureties for costs cannot exceed the penalty of their bond: Ibid.

64. When judgment summarily rendered against surety on appeal or certiorari is vacated on his notifying the party recovering it that he regards it as illegal, he cannot complain if it is vacated and if he is sued on his bond: Porter v. Leache, 56 M. 40.

As to how soon execution must issue to authorize levy upon property of surety in appeal bond, see APPEAL, § 486.

That application for execution against sureties in a bond for discharge of garnishment need not be on notice, see GARNISHMENT, § 182.

(e) Liability of surety for good conduct of others.

As to liability of sureties upon official bonds, see OFFICERS, §§ 215-240.

65. A surety is not presumed to have meant to become answerable for acts committed before he signed the obligation: Hyatt v. Grover & B. S. M. Co., 41 M. 225.

66. The liability of a surety upon a bond does not extend to the acts of a partnership of which the principal in the bond subsequently becomes a member with the consent of the obligee: White Sewing Machine Co. v. Hines, 61 M. 423.

67. A firm were appointed agents for an insurance company, one of them having previously been the agent alone. They gave a bond for the faithful performance of their duties, which was conditioned, among other things, for the payment to the company of all moneys, etc., and other property belonging to it. They also gave their firm note for an amount covering a large amount of uncollected premiums due from the former agent. In an action on the bond to recover the amount due on the note, held, that the firm could not charge their surety by assuming the amount due the company, but that if they collected any part of that amount the bond would cover it: Ball v. Watertown Fire Ins. Co., 44 M. 187.

68. Sureties on an agent's bond are liable for moneys collected by him within his district on policies issued independently of him; also for unearned premiums returned by the company on cancelled policies and remitted to the agent to be paid back to the assured: Ibid.

69. The bond of an insurance agent who had assumed an indebtedness of a former agent for uncollected premiums does not cover the debt, but if the agent collects any part of the premiums it covers the amount: Ibid.

70. An insurance agent's bond was made to cover all liabilities and delinquencies of the agent under his existing or any future appointment, and whether as sole agent or a joint agent with others, and notwithstanding changes in the tenor of the agreement or agreements under which he should act. Held, that the sureties were not bound by this for the acts of a cashier appointed by the company to assist the agent, but would be liable for such moneys as came under the control of the agent or of subordinates for whose selection he himself was answerable: Equitable Life Assurance Co. v. Coats, 44 M. 260.

71. A bank teller's bond and the liability of sureties thereon cover any duties to which, in the natural course of the business of the bank, he may be assigned by the cashier or other proper officer in the temporary absence of the person whose duty it would be to perform them. So held where the receiving teller in the savings department was assigned, in the temporary absence of the general teller, to do his work in a bank in which the money was kept in a common fund: Detroit Savings Bank v. Ziegler, 49 M. 157.

72. Sureties on the bond of a sewing-machine agent are not responsible for his transactions outside of the territory assigned to him by his contract with the company: White Sewing Machine Co. v. Mullins, 41 M. 339.

73. Plaintiff sold certain goods to S., taking from him a mortgage thereon for the purchase money. Defendant agreed with plaintiff in writing that the goods so sold should at all times remain in possession of the purchaser, ready to be redelivered upon the default of any payment, except what had been sold from day to day at regular sales; and that if upon default of payment there should not be sufficient goods to liquidate the sum remaining due on the chattel mortgage, the balance should be made up by defendant. Under this agreement defendant was liable for the whole deficiency, without regard to the manner in which the goods had been disposed of, and not merely for such portions as plaintiff could show had been diverted from the ordinary sales by the purchaser: Mills v. Spencer, 3 M. 127.

74. The liability of the sureties on an administrator's bond is co-extensive with that of their principal; the balance on administrator's final account cannot be one sum in favor of distributee and another in favor of sureties: Ward v. Tinkham, 65 M. 695.

75. The sureties upon the bond given by a guardian before selling his ward's land are liable for his misapplication of the proceeds of the sale; but their liability cannot be fixed upon an application for leave to sue the bond: Schles v. Darrow, 65 M. 362.

II. DISCHARGE OF SURETY.

(a) By general novation of contract.

76. A surety is not discharged by the substitution of other obligations, unless such substitution is by concurrent action of principal and creditor: Robertson v. First National Bank, 41 M. 356.

77. A. and B. contracted with a school district to complete a school-house by a certain date, C. and D. being the sureties on their bond for performance, and they assigned their contract to E., with whom the district afterwards agreed to extend the time of completion. No site had been mentioned in the contract, nor was any selected or prepared until nearly the time of completion. Held, 1. That the district was bound to furnish a suitable site within a reasonable time for completion. 2. That the sureties were released by the district's recognition of the assignment and extension: Todd v. Greenwood Sch. Dist., 40 M. 294.

(b) By extending time.

As to discharge of guarantor by extension of time, see GUARANTY, §§ 63-66, 69.

78. Extension of a note for a consideration and without the consent of a surety thereon releases the surety if the creditor knew the fact of suretyship: Stevens v. Oaks, 58 M. 343.

79. A surety upon the bond of an executor who is also residuary legatee is released by the act of a legatee who, without the sureties' assent or procurement, accepts the executor's note for the amount of the legacy after the time limited by the will for paying it has expired: Probate Judge v. Abbott, 50 M. 479.

80. Sureties upon a bond for the performance of a contract are released by an assignment of the contract and the grant of an extension of time to the contractors: Todd v. Greenwood School District, 40 M. 294.

81. The principle that an extension of time not consented to by the surety discharges him applies as well to the case of a joint maker of a note, who is in fact (as known to the payee) an accommodation maker, as to the case of those who are ostensible sureties: Barron v. Cady, 40 M. 259.

82. The extension of time upon a note in consideration of the signature of a new indorser does not release one who, as to the other maker, is only a surety, but to the holder is known as a joint maker only: Gano v. Heath, 36 M. 441.

83. A stockholder's liability for his corporation's labor debt is that of a surety, and is discharged where the laborer extends the time and accepts the note of the corporation: Hanson v. Donkersley, 87 M. 184.

84. As retiring partners, whose liability for the firm's debt has been assumed by their former copartners, stand as sureties, they are discharged by extensions granted to such copartners by firm creditors who have knowledge of the dissolution of the firm and of the assumption of liabilities: Smith v. Shelden, 85 M. 42; Johnson v. Emerick, 70 M. 215 (May 11, '88).

85. Plaintiffs, in renewal of the notes of a firm which they held, and which were secured by the guaranty bond of a surety, took the individual notes of a member of the firm, payable at a future time, signed thus: "For late firm of P. C. & Co., W. J. P." Held that, although time might not be given thereby to all the members of the firm, it was given to the maker of the renewal notes, and the surety was consequently discharged: Farmers', etc. Bank v. Kercheval, 2 M. 504.

86. Where a party purchasing land gives in payment notes of a third person, securing them by a mortgage on the land, he is in the position of a surety, and an extension granted without his consent to the principal debtor discharges the mortgage: Metz v. Todd, 36 M. 473.

87. The debtor of a bank asked an extension and sent a consideration therefor, which the bank applied on the debt without answering the request or notifying the debtor that the extension was declined, as in fact it was. It did not appear that the debtor understood that an extension was agreed upon. Held, that there was no binding agreement for an extension and that the debtor's surety was not released: Garton v. Union City Bank, 34 M. 279.

88. The length of time granted by way of extension does not affect the question whether a surety is discharged: Smith v. Shelden, 85 M. 42.

89. A mere voluntary indulgence on the debt does not release the surety where there is no binding arrangement between creditor and debtor for further time: Frickee v. Donner, 35 M. 151.

90. The discharge of a surety by an extension of time on his principal's debt results from the contract for extension and not merely from forbearance to collect the debt or from a promise to forbear collection: Michigan State Ins. Co. v. Soule, 51 M. 312.

91. A surety is not discharged by a mere extension of time, unless it is an extension resting in a valid contract; and a subsequent purchaser of mortgaged land does not stand as a mere surety, nor can he complain of an extension of the mortgage where he has a right to redeem: Case v. O'Brien, 66 M. 289.

92. A creditor may extend the time for his debtor to pay in, without discharging sureties, if he by the same agreement expressly reserves his remedy against them (but see infra, § 93): Bailey v. Gould, W. 478.

93. A surety ought not to rest in a worse position than his principal. How far a creditor can legally agree with his debtor not to look to him until he has exhausted his remedy against an accommodation surety, and how far such creditor could claim as a bona fide holder against one who has been defrauded into becoming a surety, quere: Kelly v. Freedman, 56 M. 321.

(c) By alteration of contract.

As to discharge of guarantor by change of contract, see GUARANTY, §§ 62, 68.

94. Any alteration in the terms of their contract, by the parties to it, which changes the situation of the sureties without their consent, discharges them when the contract has been actually made: People v. Brown, 2 D. 9.

95. Where the penalty of sheriff's official bond was reduced $5,000 by the board having power to fix it, after a part of the sureties had signed it, it was held that it was thereby made void as to the sureties who had signed it, but that it was valid as to those who signed it afterwards: Ibid.

96. A creditor who knows that his debtor is only a surety is bound to take no steps which will change the principal's liability without the surety's consent: Canadian Bank of Commerce v. Coumbe, 47 M. 358.

97. A surety only engages to make good a deficiency; and an arrangement between his principal and the creditor, without his privity, whereby the principal is not to be sued by the creditor, is a substantial alteration of the contract of suretyship to the surety's prejudice: Farnsworth v. Coots, 46 M. 117.

98. In an action brought by the obligee in an indemnity bond against the surety, there was evidence tending to show that the principal and the obligee had agreed, without the surety's knowledge, that the principal should not be sued on the bond, but that suit should be brought in the interest of the principal against the surety. The defendant offered for submission to the jury special questions as to whether the suit was not brought for the benefit of the principal, and not for that of the obligee, and whether a check given by the principal to the obligee's attorney, but not used, had not been given on the understanding that the principal should not be sued on the bond. The court refused to submit the questions and did not cover them in his charge. Held, that the refusal was erroneous: Ibid.

As to what alteration of note will release maker or indorser, see ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS, II.

99. See infra, § 150.

100. Where one has agreed to be surety for payment of promissory notes to be executed by his principal, the unauthorized insertion in such notes of provisions for the payment of current exchange or express charges and of an attorney fee does not release the surety; such provisions being in the one case no change of his liability, and in the other being void: Bullock v. Taylor, 39 M. 137.

101. One who by indorsement upon a lease is jointly liable for rent upon the lessee's default is not discharged by an agreement subsequently entered into between lessor and lessee reducing the rent: Preston v. Huntington, 67 M. 139.

102. A discontinuance as to part of the defendants by the plaintiff in an attachment suit is such an alteration of the operation of the contract of the sureties, in a bond given to secure the release of the attached property, as will discharge the sureties: Andre v. Fitzhugh, 18 M. 93.

103. A surety in a bond on appeal by joint defendants from a justice is released by a judgment on appeal against one only, unless the other was an infant or otherwise incapable, so that his undertaking was a mere nullity: Post v. Shafer, 63 M. 85.

104. A discontinuance on an appeal from a justice's court as to an infant joint defendant does not discharge the surety; such discontinuances are contemplated by the appeal bond: Taylor v. Dansby, 42 M. 82.

105. Plaintiff's surety for costs in a justice's court is not discharged by a judgment in favor of plaintiff, but is discharged by the submission of the cause to arbitration pending appeal: Dunn v. Sutliff, 1 M. 24.

106. Sureties in a bond on appeal from a justice are discharged by a radical change in the cause made under stipulation, without their consent, amending the pleadings in a manner that H. S. § 7025 does not warrant: Evers v. Sager, 28 M. 47.

107. Dealings with the principal obligor in a replevin bond for her discharge, without the knowledge or assent of the sureties therein, release the latter: Greenlee v. Lowing, 35 M. 63.

108. The sureties in a replevin bond are not discharged by the transfer, under a statute passed before the bond was given, of the replevin suit from the circuit to a municipal court: Reusch v. Demass, 34 M. 95.

(d) By release of other securities by creditor.

109. Where the vendor in a land contract had taken notes payable to his own order for the purchase price, which notes he indorsed to a bank, and at the same time gave the bank a deed of the lands as security for the payment of the notes, and the bank afterwards took from the vendee a quitclaim deed of the lands without the vendor's knowledge, it was held that such deed was a rescission of the contract, and the vendor was thereby discharged from his liability as indorser of the notes—at least to the extent of the value of the land: Ives v. Bank of Lansingburgh, 13 M. 361.

110. An agreement between the vendee and the bank, at the time of the delivery of the quitclaim deed, made without the knowledge of the vendor, that such deed should not affect the liability of the vendee on his notes, would not prevent its having this effect upon the rights of the vendor as indorser: Ibid.

111. One who has secured another's debt is entitled to the benefit of any further security which the lienholder obtains from the debtor; and if the latter security consists of a chattel mortgage and the lienholder disposes of the property which it covers, for his own benefit and without the consent of the person giving the first security, the latter is released, to the extent, at least, of the property so disposed of. And its proceeds must be first applied to the satisfaction of the oldest mortgage if the securities have been so confused by the lienholder as to make it impossible to distinguish between them: Wendell v. Highstone, 52 M. 552.

112. If A. secures B.'s debt to C., and C. without A.'s consent disposes of security to A.'s disadvantage, A. is discharged: Ibid.

113. As soon as sureties on a bond of indefinite duration notify the obligees that they will not be bound in future, they are discharged from further liability unless the obligees will be prejudiced by their withdrawal: Jeudevine v. Rose, 36 M. 54.

114. Whatever, in contemplation of law, makes a satisfaction of the debt and thereby discharges the principal necessarily extinguishes the surety's liability. Where recovery cannot be had against the principal (unless his defence is personal) none can be had against the surety: Farmers', etc. Bank v. Kingsley, 2 D. 879, 403.

115. A bank's guaranty against loss or liability for signing as sureties a note discounted by the bank would be a bar to any suit by the bank against the sureties: First National Bank v. Bennett, 33 M. 520.

116. A surety sued on an indemnity bond is entitled to show that an arrangement has been made between his principals and the obligee whereby the bond has been paid and the principals discharged from further liability: Coots v. Farnsworth, 61 M. 497.

117. If a bank with which a note is left for collection sells it without authority to do so, and satisfies the payee, the purchaser cannot afterwards collect it as against the maker's surety, even though the maker consents to continue liable: Fuller v. Bennett, 55 M. 357.

118. A creditor's delay in collecting his debt does not itself discharge a surety where there is no binding agreement for delay: Hayes v. Knox, 41 M. 529.

119. A creditor's neglect or refusal to enforce his demand against his debtor at the request of the latter's surety does not release the surety: Michigan State Ins. Co. v. Soule, 51 M. 312; Roberts v. Hawkins, 70 M. 566 (June 8, '88).

120. It seems that if the appellee in a cause removed from justice's court unreasonably delays taxing costs so that the surety is prejudiced, the latter will be protected: Weiss v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 50 M. 158.

III. SURETY'S REMEDIES.

(a) In general.

121. One who consents to become surety for a party in a legal proceeding must see to it that he acts on the request of the party himself or his attorney or agent duly authorized to represent him in that respect: Mitchell v. Chambers, 43 M. 151.

122. And where the managing owner of a vessel has obtained bail for its release from detention, such bail, having paid executions, cannot hold co-owners liable for reimbursement without showing that they were parties to procuration of bail: Ibid.

123. Where sureties for building contractors assume the contract they can claim nothing under it which the original contractors could not: Knapp v. Swaney, 56 M. 345.

124. Sureties are bound to use some diligence for their own protection: Detroit v. Weber, 26 M. 284.

125. Where contractors directed payments to be made to their sureties, and they were made on orders drawn in favor of the contractors and indorsed by them to their sureties, but always delivered to the sureties by the party making payment, it was held that this course of business did not of itself indicate a waiver by the sureties of their rights under the order that payment be made to them instead of their principals: Howard v. Holland Public Schools, 50 M. 94.

126. That an absolute transfer by a defaulting principal to his surety to provide for the default and the surety's liability is not subject to garnishment and gives rise to no trust in favor of the principal, see Spear v. Rood, 51 M. 140.

127. If the principal fails to meet his obligation with due diligence his surety cannot, in general, appeal to chancery for protection, but must first perform his obligation as surety, and may then sue at law for indemnity: McElroy v. Hatheway, 44 M. 399.

128. A surety on a residuary legatee's bond to pay the testator's debts, etc., cannot have discovery and relief by way of accounting in equity against his principal and co-sureties: Ibid.

(b) General rights against principal.

As to recovery by surety of payments that include usury, see INTEREST, §§ 130, 131.

129. Where one deposits money with another who has signed notes with him as a surety before the notes mature, and it is agreed between them that the latter should apply the money so received in discharge of the notes, the former cannot afterwards revoke such agreement; the suretyship is a sufficient consideration to support such a contract: Mandigo v. Mandigo, 26 M. 349.

130. Where a principal has authorized his surety to sell certain of his property, indemnify himself, and use the rest of the proceeds for specific purposes, he cannot complain if on his own advice the surety takes paper instead of cash in payment; or if he takes it in his own name, so long as he acts in a careful, prudent, honest and business-like way and with such care and judgment as a reasonable man should exercise: Fick v. Runnels, 48 M. 302.

131. If a contract, whatever its form, is in fact one of suretyship for another the fact may be shown, and the surety if held to pay it may sue for reimbursement: Canadian Bank of Commerce v. Coumbe, 47 M. 358.

132. The discharge of a surety upon certiorari from the circuit to a justice's court, whether erroneous or not, does not concern the principal, who cannot complain of it: Fewlass v. Abbott, 28 M. 270.

133. A defaulting agent cannot make good his default as between himself and his sureties on the one hand, and his principal on the other, by taking the principal's money for the purpose: Detroit v. Weber, 29 M. 24.

134. The payment of money by a surety for his principal's benefit raises an implied promise against the principal to refund on demand, and giving credit for it is equivalent to an extension of credit: Lee v. Wisner, 38 M. 82.

135. An agreement given by principals to their sureties, by which, reciting that in order to save harmless their sureties they agree to pay the demand secured within thirty days after it comes due, is not one of indemnity merely; and the sureties have a right of action upon it on the failure of their principals to make the payment (see a similar case, MORTGAGES, § 484): Hall v. Nash, 10 M. 303.

136. Where such an agreement is secured by mortgage, and suit is brought to foreclose the same before payment by the sureties, quere whether the court will in any case see to the application of the money by the sureties. There is no occasion to do so where it appears that subsequent to the commencement of the suit the complainants have paid the demand secured: Ibid.

137. Where a surety who has satisfied his principal's obligation sues the principal as for money paid to his use, it is nothing to the jury that he paid it to secure his own release from the obligation, and not with the sole intent of benefiting the principal: Lange v. Perley, 47 M. 352.

138. In an action by a surety for money paid to his principal's use, defendant may show, by way of accord and satisfaction or as an executed compromise, that in accordance with an agreement between himself and plaintiff and other sureties he has assigned all his property in consideration of being exonerated from all liability: Ibid.

139. A retiring partner standing in the relation of surety by virtue of his copartner's agreement to pay the firm debts is entitled, if compelled to pay such a debt, to collect the whole debt, and is not confined to enforcing contribution: Johnson v. Emerick, 70 M. 189 (May 11, '88).

(c) Subrogation.

140. A surety who pays his principal's debt is entitled to be subrogated to all the rights of the original creditor; e. g., to the title to and possession of an article of personalty which was to remain in such creditor until the debt should be paid: Myres v. Yaple, 60 M. 339, 65 M. 403.

141. Sureties who have paid, on execution and levy, the whole of a judgment, intending to have the levy kept alive for enforcing contribution, are entitled to be subrogated thereto, and may join in a suit to remove obstacles obstructing their right of recurrence to it in making their co-surety contribute: Smith v. Rumsey, 33 M. 183.

142. A surety on an administrator's bond who has been compelled to pay creditors after an order of distribution may be subrogated to their rights, and may pursue and recover trust funds in the administrator's hands that have been diverted and misapplied: Pierce v. Holzer, 65 M. 263.

(d) Contribution.

143. Contribution cannot be enforced on the ground merely that a liability exists, or even that a judgment has been recovered; there must have been either a payment of the demand or such an assumption of it as imposes on the claimant more than his share, and correspondingly releases the others: Backus v. Coyne, 45 M. 584.

144. B. and G. gave a joint note to C., G. signing as B.'s surety. C. indorsed it to P., who afterwards released it, taking instead a joint note given by G. with C. as surety. Held, that on the original note G. was the debtor of C. and would have had recourse only to B., and that on paying the second note he could not claim contribution from C., who was virtually his surety in both cases: Goetschius v. Calkins, 46 M. 323.

145. A surety who asks another person to become his co-surety does not thereby bind himself to save the other harmless; they are equally responsible unless there is a plain understanding changing their liability: McKee v. Campbell, 27 M. 497.

146. Successive indorsers of commercial paper are not, as such, sureties for each other and liable to contribution: McGurk v. Huggett, 56 M. 187.

But they may be shown by parol to be such as between themselves: See supra, § 43.

147. Where a surety has been compelled to pay the full amount of his principal's debt, and some of his co-sureties have become insolvent or are beyond the reach of process, he is entitled in equity to recover from the remainder the proportion they would have to pay of the whole amount if insolvents and non-residents were excluded: Stewart v. Goulden, 52 M. 143.

148. A surety on a bond who has paid the whole of a judgment recovered thereon becomes a judgment creditor of the other sureties, and may file a bill to set aside a conveyance made by one of them in his fraud: Rynearson v. Turner, 52 M. 7.

149. A surety on a bail bond is entitled to contribution from a co-surety for any payment in excess of his share, unless there is an agreement to the contrary, express or implied: McKee v. Campbell, 27 M. 497.

150. One who stands in the position of a surety is justified in employing counsel and incurring costs in defending, for the common benefit, against illegal demands; and his co-sureties must contribute to make him good, whether he succeeded or not, provided that he acted prudently in the light of facts indicating the probability of a sufficient recovery to justify the expense: Backus v. Coyne, 45 M. 584.

151. Where one of two sureties paid his half of the joint liability, and joined with his co-surety in a note for the other half, and was sued and suffered judgment on the note and paid the judgment, such note is to be regarded as given for the sole debt of the co-surety, and the money as paid to his use; in such case the necessary costs are recoverable back as well as the debt, as they were caused by the default of the latter, and paid under legal compulsion: McKee v. Campbell, 27 M. 497.

152. Under an execution and levy certain sureties paid the whole judgment, intending to keep the security alive against their co-sureties so as to obtain contribution. Held, that they were entitled to insist that the levy should remain to be enforced for their benefit against the co-sureties: Smith v. Rumsey, 33 M. 183.

153. A surety on a promissory note, the maker of which had become insolvent, conveyed his land to his son for inadequate consideration and in evident contemplation of being held liable as surety. The other surety paid the note, sued him for contribution and levied on the land conveyed. Held, on a bill in aid of execution, that the deed should be set aside as against the execution levy: Pashby v. Mandigo, 42 M. 172.

154. A bill in equity lies to obtain contribution from the representatives of a deceased co-surety where the case involves an inquiry into the liability and solvency of other sureties: Rynearson v. Turner, 52 M. 7.

SURVEYS.

As to surveys of PUBLIC LANDS, see that title, I.

1. In private as in public surveys monuments control course and distance: Diehl v. Zanger, 39 M. 601.

2. A correct survey of lots conveyed by deed with reference to a plat, which calls the points of the compass with reference to the lines and angles of the lots, must follow the plat though its lines are not conformable to the true meridian: Bower v. Earl, 18 M. 307.

3. One who claims that the county surveyor has not performed his duty, or has blundered in performing it, has the burden of showing that fact: Smith v. Rich, 37 M. 549.

4. Where lots have been conveyed by reference to a plat which states that they are of a certain width, the testimony of the surveyor who originally scaled the plat is inadmissible to show that some of the lots are of less width on the plat: Twogood v. Hoyt, 43 M. 609.

5. The location or starting-point of a section line cannot be determined finally by the opinion of a surveyor, but is a question of fact for the jury: Stewart v. Carleton, 31 M. 270.

6. Surveyors cannot finally determine boundaries; all bounds and starting-points are questions of fact, to be determined by testimony; and ex parte surveys cannot be regarded: Cronin v. Gore, 38 M. 881; Gregory v. Knight, 50 M. 61; O'Brien v. Cavanaugh, 61 M. 368; Fisher v. Dowling, 66 M. 370.

7. A starting-point cannot be assumed to be true merely because surveyors agree upon it; some proof must be made that it was one of the points actually fixed by the original survey before a survey starting from such point can be regarded: Beaubien v. Kellogg, 69 M. 833.

8. A tangible and established boundary is not to be disturbed by a surveyor's opinion based on examination of records, etc.: Stewart v. Carleton, 31 M. 270.

9. Where ejectment is based on an allegation of a mistake in the original survey, it is admissible to show that the boundaries have been defined for twenty years or more: Diehl v. Zanger, 39 M. 601.

10. A boundary long treated and acquiesced in as the true line, or fixed by adverse possession, should not be disturbed on new surveys: Dupont v. Starring, 42 M. 492; Bunce v. Bidwell, 43 M. 542; Wilmarth v. Woodcock, 66 M. 831.

Mutual survey and acquiescence as fixing boundary, see ESTOPPEL, §§ 231, 232.

11. A dividing line established for mutual convenience was held no evidence of line originally surveyed: Dondero v. Frumveller, 61 M. 440.

12. Old surveyed lines which have become uncertain are not to be superseded by new ones, but are to be ascertained by a resurvey, if rights have become fixed and regulated in reliance upon the common understanding as to where they lie: Baker v. McArthur, 54 M. 139.

13. A survey made after the monuments of the original survey have disappeared is inferior to a long-established fence as evidence of actual boundaries: Diehl v. Zanger, 39 M. 601.

14. And the question in such case is not how an entirely accurate survey would have located the lots, but how the original stakes located them: Ibid.

15. A resurvey was had when the evidences of the original survey had nearly disappeared, and a question afterwards arose as to where the true line was. The boundaries of property conveyed before the resurvey were not to be disturbed. Held proper to show that lots had been laid out and buildings put up with reference to the line as established by the first survey, and that it had been shown by a recent survey that the line as run by the resurvey would cross lots and bisect buildings: Baker v. McArthur, 54 M. 139.

And see EVIDENCE, § 818.

16. Resurveys cannot be allowed to unsettle the lines of town lots after the lot-owners have established such lines in accordance with the stakes which they have found planted or recognized by authority, and in reliance on which they have purchased: Flynn v. Glenny, 51 M. 580.

17. Where the line between quarter sections of land has gone unquestioned for a long time — as in this case twenty-three years — it ought not to be disturbed upon a mere disagreement between surveys, especially if the later survey is made under circumstances unfavorable to accuracy, such as the absence of corner posts and witness trees and the existence of a boundary dispute: Case v. Trapp, 49 M. 59.

18. Old fences are strong evidence in fixing boundary lines as located by the original survey; and if they have stood for twenty or thirty years they should be taken as the true lines, at least as against a resurvey which assumes a starting-point at a certain street without any evidence that it was a point fixed by the original survey: Beaubien v. Kellogg, 69 M. 333.

19. And where a survey which attempted to reproduce the original regarded the lines of such old fences, while a later survey, made after the fences had been removed, assumed a starting-point, it was held that the jury should have been instructed to consider the relative situations of the fences in determining which survey best reproduced the lines as originally located: Ibid.

20. It seems that a survey made much earlier than another and at a time when the old landmarks were more apt to be found and rightly located is to be preferred as the more correct: Wilmarth v. Woodcock, 66 M. 331.

21. Test surveys based upon speculative starting-points cannot be used to fix a disputed boundary between lots which can be settled by a proper construction of a plat: Reimers v. Quinnin, 49 M. 449.

22. A resurvey which starts from a point outside of and not belonging to the immediate plan or local system that controlled the original survey is inadmissible to show that an old fence is an incorrect boundary: Burns v. Martin, 45 M. 22.

23. Streets opened, used and acquiesced in form new starting-points in subsequent surveys of premises conveyed with reference to a recorded plat: Twogood v. Hoyt, 43 M. 609; Wilmarth v. Woodcock, 66 M. 331.

24. The location of a street that has been established and recognized for more than ten years cannot be shifted about by surveyors: Pratt v. Lewis, 39 M. 7.

25. The ex parte action of surveyors is not entitled to credence and authority upon the true lines of a highway and the fact of encroachment: Gregory v. Knight, 50 M. 61.

26. A county surveyor's certificate is not evidence of the facts therein contained (H. S. § 616) unless it contains the particulars required by H. S. § 619 to be entered in the surveyor's record; it must show that there was a survey, for whom made, etc.: Smith v. Rich, 37 M. 549.

27. No presumptions can be based upon the acts of a county surveyor relating to official surveys, unless the requirements of H. S. §§ 616, 619 have been complied with. Oral evidence of his acts is of no more weight than similar evidence would be concerning the acts of any other surveyor: Beeman v. Black, 49 M. 598.

Parol evidence inadmissible to vary survey, see EVIDENCE, §§ 1260, 1261.

That survey of road is an entirety so that showing part renders rest admissible, see EVIDENCE, § 1053.

Record of survey as proof of line of road, see HIGHWAYS, § 11.

As to proof of surveyor's field-notes, see EVIDENCE, § 1195.

That others than surveyors may testify to lines, etc., see EVIDENCE, § 596.

That surveyor's tax included in a levy is presumably lawful, see TAXES, § 75.

X. TAX LEASES.

As to special assessments for improvements in cities, etc., see CITIES AND VILLAGES, §§ 198-246; CONSTITUTIONS, §§ 841, 845-860.

As to the stamp tax, see STAMPS.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

(a) What is a tax.

1. A tax, in the view of Const., art. 14, is a burden, charge or imposition for public uses: Van Horn v. People, 46 M. 188.

2. Taxes are charges levied for the support of the government, and their amount is regulated by its necessities: Sands v. Manistee, etc. Co., 123 U. S. 288.

3. Taxation and eminent domain distinguished: Williams v. Detroit, 2 M. 560.

4. Assessments imposed upon property for local improvements are taxes: Ibid.; Lefevre v. Detroit, 2 M. 586; Woodbridge v. Detroit, 8 M. 274; Motz v. Detroit, 18 M. 495.

5. Taxation for general public purposes and assessments for local improvements in cities and villages distinguished: Woodbridge v. Detroit, 8 M. 274.

6. Tolls for the use of passage over land or water highways are not taxes: Benjamin v. Manistee River Imp. Co., 42 M. 628; Manistee, etc. Co. v. Sands, 53 M. 593, 123 U. S. 288.

7. The tax on dogs is not a charge for the purpose of raising revenue, but is rather a police regulation or a license: Van Horn v. People, 46 M. 183; Hendrie v. Kalthoff, 48 M. 306.

8. Water rates paid by consumers are not taxes, but assessments for water-pipes laid in front of vacant lots are: Jones v. Detroit Water Commissioners, 84 M. 273.

9. A license fee for keeping a ferry is not a tax: Chilvers v. People, 11 M. 43.

10. Nor is a fee charged for keeping meat stalls outside of public markets: Ash v. People, 11 M. 347.

(b) The taxing power generally.

11. The unrestricted power to tax includes the power to destroy by taxation: Fyfield v. Close, 15 M. 505.

12. The power of the state to tax is plenary: Butler v. Saginaw Supervisors, 26 M. 22.

13. No property is beyond the state's taxing power unless designedly and unequivocally put beyond it by sovereign power: Robertson v. State Land Office Com'r, 44 M. 274.

14. The state may levy taxes until all its needs are supplied: Attorney-General v. St. Clair Supervisors, 30 M. 388.

15. All taxes must be authorized by the state: Youngblood v. Sexton, 32 M. 406.

16. The state has the same power to tax corporations as it has to tax individuals, unless charter expressly parts with power: People v. Detroit & P. R. Co., 1 M. 458.

17. The right to change the methods or extent of taxation always exists when there is no express contract to the contrary: Detroit v. Detroit & H. P. R. Co., 48 M. 140; East Saginaw Salt Manuf. Co. v. East Saginaw, 13 Wall. 373.

18. Courts will not limit the exercise of the taxing power simply because methods are harsh, unreasonable and arbitrary: Robertson v. State Land Office Com'r, 44 M. 274.

19. A prohibited business may be taxed; taxation of a business implies no idea of special protection: Youngblood v. Sexton, 32 M. 406; People v. Walling, 53 M. 264.

20. The legislature cannot by mere direction impose taxes; taxation implies proceedings in pais, in some of which the tax-payer has a right to be heard: Butler v. Saginaw Supervisors, 26 M. 22.

21. Judicial proceedings are not necessary in appropriating property under the power of taxation: Weimer v. Bunbury, 80 M. 201.

22. Municipalities have no inherent right to decide what taxes shall be levied for local government: Youngblood v. Sexton, 32 M. 406.

23. Municipalities have no inherent power of taxation, but take only so much as the state sees fit to allow: People v. Salem, 20 M. 452.

24. The burden is on a municipality to show grant of power to levy tax: Williams v. Detroit, 2 M. 560.

25. Const., art. 15, § 18, requires the legislature to restrict the power of municipalities to tax; and that body only performs an imperative duty when it imposes such a limitation on a city: Wattles v. Lapeer, 40 M. 624.

26. Provisions of §§ 23 and 32 of the Detroit police act (Laws 1865, p. 99) held to be restrictive of the power of taxation within the meaning of Const., art. 15, § 13: People v. Mahaney, 13 M. 481.

27. A school district cannot levy a tax except for a purpose specified by statute: Hinman v. School District, 4 M. 168.

28. Municipalities cannot exercise or be authorized to exercise power of taxation in aid of private corporations, such as railroads: People v. Salem, 20 M. 452; Bay City v. State Treasurer, 23 M. 499; Thomas v. Port Huron, 27 M. 820.

29. If the legislature cannot impose a tax directly it cannot authorize its imposition by a vote of the municipality or people: Bay City v. State Treasurer, 23 M. 499; Anderson v. Hill, 54 M. 477.

As to taxation in its relations to local self-government, see CONSTITUTIONS, §§ 477-483.

30. Power of taxation may be exercised in same statute with police power: Reithmiller v. People, 44 M. 280.

(c) Purpose and object of tax.

As to the constitutional requirement that a law imposing a tax shall specify object to which tax is to be applied, see CONSTITUTIONS, §§ 610-612.

That the state cannot levy taxes in aid of internal improvement, see CONSTITUTIONS, §§ 425-432, 579.

31. Taxation must be for a public purpose: People v. Salem, 20 M. 452; Bay City v. State Treasurer, 23 M. 499; Butler v. Saginaw Supervisors, 26 M. 22; Attorney-General v. Bay Supervisors, 34 M. 46; Chaffee's Appeal, 56 M. 244.

32. Tax imposed on a municipality solely must not only be for a public purpose, but must be for a purpose of local interest: People v. Salem, 20 M. 452.

33. The state cannot, by a process of taxation, take from an individual money to supply a mere local convenience or need: Park Commissioners v. Detroit, 28 M. 228.

34. State may compel local taxation for general purposes but not for local ones: Youngblood v. Sexton, 32 M. 406.

35. A municipal body authorized to raise money by tax cannot raise it for the purposes or uses of others, but must apply it to public uses under its own control or care: Attorney-General v. Bay Supervisors, 34 M. 46.

36. Taxation is based upon some idea of compensation, benefit or advantage, direct or indirect, to the person taxed: Williams v. Detroit, 2 M. 560.

37. It is contrary to our tax system to levy taxes for the purpose of accumulating funds for the future: Midland v. Roscommon, 39 M. 424.

38. It is the policy of our law to raise taxes no faster than they are likely to be needed: Michigan Land, etc. Co. v. L'Anse, 63 M. 700.

But levy for highways contemplated though not actually laid out is not void: See HIGHWAYS, § 128.

(d) Apportionment and uniformity.

39. Common burdens should be sustained by common contributions, regulated by some fixed rule and apportioned according to some uniform ratio of equality: Williams v. Mayor, 2 M. 560; Ryerson v. Utley, 16 M. 269.

40. The principle of apportionment lies at the foundation of the taxing power: Woodbridge v. Detroit, 8 M. 274; Motz v. Detroit, 18 M. 495; Chaffee's Appeal, 56 M. 244.

41. Apportionment according to some rule or basis is a necessary element in all taxation: People v. Salem, 20 M. 452; Bay City v. State Treasurer, 23 M. 499; Callam v. Saginaw, 50 M. 7.

42. The rule of apportionment is for the legislature to determine: Williams v. Detroit,

2 M. 560; Woodbridge v. Detroit, 8 M. 274; Youngblood v. Sexton, 32 M. 406.

43. Taxes cannot be imposed in disregard of any rule of uniformity: People v. Auditor-General, 7 M. 84; Motz v. Detroit, 18 M. 495; Bay City v. State Treasurer, 23 M. 499; Merrill v. Auditor-General, 24 M. 170.

44. The policy of the state is to secure uniformity and equality: Hogelskamp v. Weeks, 37 M. 422.

45. A state burden is not to be imposed upon any territory smaller than the whole state, nor a county burden upon any territory smaller or greater than the county: People v. Salem, 20 M. 452. See Sears v. Cottrell, 5 M. 273; Ryerson v. Utley, 16 M. 269.

46. In general, county burdens must be raised by uniform taxes on property; but a city can be authorized to raise by corporate taxes the entire money required for a courthouse for the county: Callam v. Saginaw, 50 M. 7.

47. A tax must be uniform in a township: Michigan Land, etc. Co. v. Republic, 65 M. 628.

48. Water-pipe assessments on vacant lots must be uniform and are not apportionable by frontage: Jones v. Detroit Water Commissioners, 34 M. 273.

49. The principle of uniformity is not infringed by exempting property from taxation or by remitting taxes: People v. Auditor-General, 7 M. 84.

50. The tax on dogs (H. S. § 2123) is an exertion of the police power, and is not void because not laid according to any principle of uniformity nor assessed by cash value: Van Horn v. People, 46 M. 183.

51. The rule of uniformity forbids double taxation. No one can be twice assessed upon the cash value of the same property to defray a public burden, but double taxation (not bearing on the same person) is not necessarily unconstitutional: People v. Sanilac Supervisors, 71 M. 16.

52. Taxing an individual owner's cars and the railroad companies for earnings, held not to be duplicate taxation and not to violate rule of uniformity: Comstock v. Grand Rapids, 54 M. 641.

53. Taxes may be levied on peculiar classes of business or upon those who are engaged therein, without regard to valuation or amount of business done: Walcott v. People, 17 M. 68; Kitson v. Ann Arbor, 26 M. 325; Youngblood v. Sexton, 32 M. 406.

As to apportionment, etc., of assessments for local improvements and condemnations, see CONSTITUTIONS, §§ 346-360; CITIES, ETC., §§ 209-223, 355-357.

(e) Strict compliance.

54. The authority to tax being fixed by the statute must be strictly pursued: Case v. Dean, 16 M. 12.

55. The statutory mode of levy and collection must be followed: Ryerson v. Laketon, 52 M. 509.

56. Statutes for the assessment and collection of taxes, as to what they require to be done for the protection of the tax-payer, are mandatory, and cannot be regarded as directory merely: Clark v. Crane, 5 M. 151.

57. All legislative provisions adopted for the protection of the tax-payer and to shield him from unequal and unjust burdens are mandatory: Sibley v. Smith, 3 M. 486; Steckert v. East Saginaw, 22 M. 104; Seymour v. Peters, 67 M. 415.

58. Those provisions of the tax laws a departure from which would be prejudicial to the owners of the property taxed cannot be held to be merely directory: Houghton County v. Auditor-General, 41 M. 28.

59. A tax is void unless all the essential conditions and requirements precedent to its levy have been observed: Scofield v. Lansing, 17 M. 437.

60. Enactments prescribing the course of proceedings in tax matters cannot be considered as directory merely, and not mandatory, where that which is required to be done is in the nature of a condition precedent to subsequent action: Hoyt v. East Saginaw, 19 M. 39.

61. Statutory provisions in relation to the description of property for purposes of taxation and deeds on tax-sales are mandatory: Amberg v. Rogers, 9 M. 333; King v. Potter, 18 M. 134.

62. All statutes are mandatory which expressly or by implication limit the amount of taxes that may be levied: Boyce v. Sebriny, 66 M. 210.

63. One's title to his property cannot be divested under the tax law without full compliance with all the substantial requirements of the statute: Maxwell v. Paine, 53 M. 80.

64. The statutory requirement as to assessment at cash value cannot be dispensed with: Hogelskamp v. Weeks, 37 M. 422.

65. In order to invalidate a tax for non-compliance with a requirement that is directory, it must be shown that injury has resulted therefrom to the person assessed: Fay v. Wood, 65 M. 390.

(f) Irregularities and defects; presumptions; curative acts.

66. A tax is not invalidated by omissions or irregularities in assessment, etc., that are not jurisdictional or prejudicial (H. S. § 1165; § 84 of act 9 of 1882; § 89 of act 153 of 1885): Pillsbury v. Auditor-General, 26 M. 245; Stockle v. Silsbee, 41 M. 615; Peninsula Iron Co. v. Crystal Falls, 60 M. 510; Petrie Lumber Co. v. Collins, 66 M. 64; Michigan Dairy Co. v. McKinlay, 70 M. 574 (June 8, '88); Hill v. Graham, 72 M. — (Nov. 28, '88).

67. Said H. S. § 1165 should receive a construction carrying out the evident intent of the legislature: Albany, etc. Mining Co. v. Auditor-General, 87 M. 391.

68. An error which does not tend to increase a tax, but rather to reduce it below its due proportion, constitutes no injury to the tax-payer, and cannot be set up by him as a ground for invalidating a sale: Case v. Dean, 16 M. 12.

69. Where one's property has been seized upon items inserted in the collection roll unofficially and without authority of law, the error is not cured by H. S. § 1165: Ferton v. Feller, 38 M. 190.

70. The tax-collector's failure to sign and verify his return of unpaid taxes is not a "want of matter of form in any matter not affecting the merits of the case:" Upton v. Kennedy, 36 M. 215.

71. H. S. § 1165 requires that a tax be presumed to have been legally assessed until the contrary is affirmatively shown: Hunt v. Chapin, 42 M. 24.

72. Where the board of supervisors had ordered state and county taxes spread upon the rolls, it was held that the fact that township, school and highway taxes were added by the supervisor without the direction of the board would not invalidate the tax-title unless it was affirmatively shown that they were not duly authorized: Ibid.

73. A township tax exceeding the amount voted by the township may be sustained on the presumption that the township board had exercised its statutory right to increase the amount, if there is no showing to the contrary: Silsbee v. Stockle, 44 M. 561.

74. A bridge and highway tax is not to be presumed invalid for exceeding the percentage on the assessed valuation allowed by law, if it does not also appear that it was not authorized under H. S. § 483, subd. 15, by the board of supervisors: Stockle v. Silsbee, 41 M. 615.

75. A surveyor's tax included in a township levy is presumptively lawful, as H. S.

§ 624 allows such a burden in some cases upon particular parcels of land to meet the cost of their survey: Silsbee v. Stockle, 44 M. 561.

76. A tax-title cannot be held invalid on the ground merely that some of the lands in the township were not assessed for taxes for the year, where there is no showing that such lands were worth anything during that time, and where, on the other hand, certain classes of real estate were exempt from taxation. It will be presumed that the assessors did their duty in omitting the lands: Perkins v. Nugent, 45 M. 156.

77. It was formerly presumed that if a paper required in tax proceedings — e. g., a certificate necessary to authorize a tax for a county agricultural society — could not be found in the proper place, such paper never existed; and such presumption stood until rebutted: Hall v. Kellogg, 16 M. 185.

78. But now, under H. S. § 1165, the presumption is the other way: Hogelskamp v. Weeks, 87 M. 422.

79. A tax in aid of a county agricultural society is sustained by the presumption that the proper certificate was presented by its officers to the board of supervisors: Silsbee v. Stockle, 44 M. 561.

80. And such presumption is not rebutted by a supervisor's testimony that he had no recollection whether the certificate had been presented to the board or not: Ibid.

81. A finding that a highway commissioner's report to the township board is "not to be found" is not sufficient to rebut the presumption raised by H. S. § 1165 that it was made: Stockle v. Silsbee, 41 M. 615.

82. The presumption raised by H. S. § 1165 that a necessary paper was attached to a roll is overcome where roll appears with paper unsigned: Dickison v. Reynolds, 48 M. 158.

83. Ejectment was brought against a tax purchaser of land which was taxed at $1.63 but was sold for a charge of $1.94. The record did not show whether the additional 23 cents was charged as a penalty under the name of interest or for some other purpose; and it did not exclude the possibility that it was made up of legitimate charges for the cost of advertising, sale and conveyance. Held that, in the absence of a clear showing to the contrary, it would be assumed that the charge was lawfully made: Drennan v. Beierlein, 49 M. 272.

Further as to presumptions in favor of tax-deeds, see infra, IX, (d).

84. The legislature can cure irregularities in proceedings for the assessment and collection of any taxes that are authorized by law; but a curative statute cannot make a void tax a lien: Hart v. Henderson, 17 M. 218.

85. A sale which, in the contemplation of H. S. § 1165, is to be upheld must be one made as required by law, and effectuated by such a deed as the law contemplates, having a lawful return to support it. A sale based on the tax collector's unsigned and unsworn return is void: Upton v. Kennedy, 86 M. 215.

86. The tax law of 1869, as its title indicates, was passed to regulate the assessment, collection, etc. of taxes for the future; and, therefore, § 164 thereof (H. S. § 1166) was not intended to relate to and make good sales previously made: Clark v. Hall, 19 M. 356; Seymour v. Peters, 67 M. 415.

87. A tax void for want of jurisdiction to levy it cannot be validated by statute: Houseman v. Kent Circuit Judge, 58 M. 364.

88. An assumed tax must be a tax in fact, or it cannot be validated by a statute; if what has been levied under the name of a tax is a mere arbitrary demand, the legislature cannot indirectly compel its payment: Sinclair v. Learned, 51 M. 335.

89. Statutory legalization of a tax-roll and healing defects therein cannot affect an existing judgment in trespass against officers for seizure and sale: Moser v. White, 29 M. 59.

90. The legislature may enact that omission of or defects in certificate to assessment roll shall not prejudice tax: Sinclair v. Learned, 51 M. 335.

91. But an assessment roll bearing a defective certificate cannot be legalized after sale made and suit brought therefor: Daniels v. Watertown, 61 M. 514.

92. Nor can a sale made under a statute that could not authorize it be retrospectively validated: Hall v. Perry, 73 M. — (Nov. 1, '88).

93. Notwithstanding the curative provisions of H. S. § 1165, a tax-sale for a sum that includes an illegal levy with other taxes that are legal is void: Silsbee v. Stockle, 44 M. 561.

94. Whether an assessment in one township of lands in another can be cured by a subsequent statute is doubtful; acts 365 and 366 of 1879, pp. 163, 169, held not to attempt to legalize such an assessment: Taylor v. Youngs, 48 M. 268.

95. A statute directing the board of supervisors to levy certain taxes for the payment of certain orders, taxation for which had become impracticable by reason of judicial decisions, was not regarded as a curative statute and was held invalid: Butler v. Saginaw Supervisors, 26 M. 22.

(g) Specific taxes.

96. Specific taxes are such as are laid upon certain classes of business or pursuits: Jones v. Detroit Water Commissioners, 84 M. 276.

97. Assessments for water pipes laid in front of vacant lots are not specific taxes: Ibid.

98. Specific taxes, which, though levied by general law, are devoted to local purposes, are not state taxes such as Const., art. 14, § 1, requires to be applied to educational uses: Youngblood v. Sexton, 32 M. 406.

99. Specific taxes other than those enumerated in Const., art. 14, § 10, may be imposed: Walcott v. People, 17 M. 68.

100. Specific taxes may be imposed not only upon domestic but upon foreign corporations; also upon partnerships and the business of individuals: Ibid.

101. Local specific taxes may be imposed on a business or occupation: Kitson v. Ann Arbor, 26 M. 325; Youngblood v. Sexton, 32 M. 406.

102. Specific taxes may be levied upon business as such without regard to valuation: Walcott v. People, 17 M. 68; Kitson v. Ann Arbor, 26 M. 325.

103. An act imposing a specific tax is not void for not providing for the appropriation of the tax where that is fixed by Const., art. 14, § 1: Walcott v. People, 17 M. 68.

104. A specific tax obliging mining companies to pay more upon mineral obtained in the state and exported unsmelted than on that which is smelted here is void: Jackson Mining Co. v. Auditor-General, 32 M. 488.

105. State cannot tax the business of importing, etc., liquors at wholesale into this state: Walling v. Michigan, 116 U. S. 446 (reversing People v. Walling, 53 M. 264). See CONSTITUTIONS, §§ 400-402.

106. The specific tax imposed by H. S. § 8719 on gross receipts within the state of foreign express companies is valid: Walcott v. People, 17 M. 68.

As to specific taxes on railroads, banks, etc., see infra, II, (b), (c), (d).

As to taxes upon liquor dealers, etc., see INTOXICATING LIQUORS, §§ 6-14, 26-28, 101-109; MANDAMUS, §§ 196, 206.

Appeal from assessment of specific taxes, see infra, § 244.

II. WHAT TAXABLE; EXEMPTIONS.

(a) In general.

107. A vessel enrolled and licensed or registered under the United States navigation laws does not, by engaging in business within a state, become subject to its taxing power if its owner is a non-resident: Roberts v. Charlevoix, 60 M. 197.

108. Vessels belonging to a non-resident corporation, but lying in a harbor of this state, are not taxable under the statute of 1885; and the fact that they are taxed improperly does not prevent a resident owner of stock in such corporation from being assessed for such stock in the township where he resides: Graham v. St. Joseph, 67 M. 652.

109. Interest acquired under contract made by the state may be subjected to taxation; so held of interest acquired under certificate of purchase of state swamp lands: Robertson v. State Land Office Com'r, 44 M. 274.

110. Lands in Michigan for which patent certificates had been issued by the federal land-office were held liable to state taxation at their full value as the property of the purchaser, though no patent had been issued: Carroll v. Safford, 3 How. (U. S.) 441.

111. Railroad-grant lands are taxable after the state has executed its trust and after the railroad company has perfected its title and acquired the right to sell: Tucker v. Ferguson, 22 Wall. (U. S.) 527.

112. Manuscript books of abstracts of land titles are not taxable: Perry v. Big Rapids, 67 M. 146.

113. Securities — e. g., mortgages — representing values may be taxed, while at the same time the land is also taxed: People v. Sanilac Supervisors, 71 M. 16.

114. Act 262 of 1887, providing for reporting of mortgages by the registers of deeds to the supervisors and assessing officers, sustained: Ibid.

115. Where one owns cars which he is accustomed to load with his goods and then to have them moved for him by railroad companies at agreed rates, he must pay taxes thereon, although such companies are taxed in respect of their own earnings; here is no duplicate taxation: Comstock v. Grand Rapids, 54 M. 641.

116. And such cars are assessable to the owner by value; the special tax imposed by H. S. § 1229 on freight lines or car-loaning companies does not apply, although, in fixing the compensation, the railroad companies allow such owner for wheelage: Ibid.

117. The business of dealing in intoxicating liquors is taxable even while the constitution forbids licensing the liquor traffic; a tax is not a license: Youngblood v. Sexton, 82 M. 406; People v. Walling, 58 M. 264.

(b) Taxation of railroad companies.

118. The state cannot tax gross receipts of railroads for carriage of freights and passengers into, out of or through its limits: Fargo v. Stevens, 121 U. S. 230 (reversing Fargo v. Auditor-General, 57 M. 598). See CONSTITUTIONS, §§ 403-405.

119. The Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railroad Company is not a corporation formed under the general railroad law, and as to that portion of its road in Michigan it is taxable on the basis defined in the special charter of the Michigan Southern Railroad Company, which, with the Northern Indiana Railroad Company, with which it was authorized to consolidate, with no change of taxation, forms a part of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Company: State Treasurer v. Auditor-General, 46 M. 224.

120. A state cannot tax the whole track and equipments, the gross earnings or the entire capital stock of a road which lies partly without its boundaries and is partly operated in other states. It can only tax that part of the road property which lies within its jurisdiction, or the proportion of stock representing that part of the road: Ibid.

121. A foreign railroad corporation formed by the consolidation of lines partly within and partly without the state is not to be taxed, under the tax law of 1882, as if its roads constituted a single line that ran partly without the state and derived its powers from the state law. It is taxable only in proportion to its Michigan road: Chicago & N. W. R. Co., v. Auditor-General, 53 M. 79.

122. A railroad company incorporated prior to the revision of the statutes in 1846, whose charter is silent as to taxation, is liable to pay the specific tax imposed by R. S. ch. 21, § 5, p. 121: People v. Detroit & P. R. Co., 1 M. 458.

123. Under the charter of the Michigan Southern Railroad Company — which subjects the company to an annual tax of three-fourths of one per cent. upon its capital stock paid in, including the $500,000 purchase money, and also upon all loans made to the company for the purpose of constructing their road, or purchasing, constructing, chartering or hiring of steamboats authorized by the charter — the company cannot claim exemption from taxation on sums of money paid out for commissions and other expenses attending the sale of its bonds and the obtaining of loans: Michigan Southern & N. I. R. Co. v. Auditor-General, 9 M. 448.

124. Nor can the said company claim exemption from taxation upon any sum of money borrowed by it and afterwards loaned upon worthless securities, whereby it became lost to the company: Ibid.

125. But a deduction from the taxable amount should be made of bonds of the said company which were loaned and for which worthless securities were afterwards received in payment: Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. People, 46 M. 193. (The company was held liable to taxation upon this item in People v. M. S. & N. I. R. Co., 4 M. 398, upon the facts as there presented, upon the presumption that the bonds received were the equivalent of those issued; but in M. S. & N. I. R. Co. v. Auditor-General, 9 M. 448, where it affirmatively appeared that the bonds received were of no value, the court was equally divided.)

126. The discount on lands sold at less than par should also be deducted from the taxable amount: L. S. & M. S. R. Co. v. People, 46 M. 193. (The court held otherwise in 4 M. 398, and was equally divided on the question in 9 M. 448.)

127. No deduction should be made for the 3,000 shares of capital stock alleged by the company to have been distributed as a bonus among the original stockholders without any consideration being received therefor—the allegation not being sustained by the facts in the case: 4 M. 398; 9 M. 448.

128. Stock dividends and issues of stock proportioned to that previously held by shareholders must stand on the same footing with original stock, and should be taxed as far as it is considered paid in: L. S. & M. S. R. Co. v. People, 46 M. 193.

129. The act authorizing the consolidation of the Michigan Southern Railroad Company with the Northern Indiana Railroad Company provides that said corporation shall continue subject to the same rate of tax as though such consolidation should not take place; and the amount of its capital and loans thereafter, upon which such taxation should be paid, should be such portion of its capital and loans as is actually employed in the state of Michigan. It was held that the act of consolidation was not designed to change the principle of taxation fixed by the original charter of the Michigan company, but that all the stock and loans formerly taxable were to continue taxable without diminution by losses or unproductiveness. And that therefore no deduction can be made from the amount taxable for the cost of steamboats destroyed by accident, or lying idle within the limits of another state and taxable there. The term "actually employed in the state of Michigan," in the act of consolidation, has no reference to the actual use of the property purchased by the company, but is merely designed to distinguish the Michigan investment from the Indiana investment: M. S. & N. I. R. Co. v. Aud. Gen., 9 M. 448.

130. The tram-railway act prescribes the rate and manner of taxing such railway companies, but elsewhere provides that the act may be at any time amended or repealed, though this shall not alter the corporate rights of companies formed under it. The subsequent tax law changed the mode of taxation, but the other clause was not disturbed. Held, that the companies came within the tax law, and that the term corporate rights, used alone, meant only such essential and fundamental rights as attach to corporations, and did not include incidental privileges and immunities, such as a special standard of taxation: Detroit Street R. Co. v. Guthard, 51 M. 180.

131. H. S. § 3516 (repealed by act 6 of 1882), which provided that the specific tax therein laid should be "in lieu of all other taxes upon all the property of" a company formed under the tram-railway act, precluded ordinary taxation on property assessed, but did not preclude liability to pay the tax on dogs imposed by § 2123: Hendrie v. Kalthoff, 48 M. 306.

132. Where a statute requires a corporation to be taxed at a certain rate upon its capital and on loans employed in the state, and the auditor-general merely computes the amount of the tax on the basis of reports made to him by the company, but without passing judgment upon their correctness, the state is not precluded from enforcing payment of the correct amount: Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. People, 46 M. 193.

133. A foreign company with which a local one had been consolidated reported its receipts in gross, without discriminating between its own roads and roads leased by it, and was assessed as if it constituted a single line. Held, that it was not estopped by the report from disputing the assessment: Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Auditor-General, 53 M. 79.

134. Where a statute after laying upon a railroad company a specific annual tax of one per cent. on the cost of the road, and reserving a right to impose a further tax upon gross earnings, enacted that "the above several taxes shall be in lieu of all other taxes to be imposed within" the state, held, that the statute imposed a tax in reference to the railroad itself, and did not preclude the taxation of lands owned by the company not used or necessary in operating the road, but which it had mortgaged to pay the cost of building the road, and which it was holding for sale: Tucker v. Ferguson, 23 Wall. (U. S.) 527.

(c) Taxation of banks and bank stock.

135. Under a statute providing, as the tax law of 1883 provided, that, except as to real estate, all taxation of state banks shall be against the shareholders, a savings bank is not liable to taxation as a corporation for its bank fixtures and surplus of property beyond its nominal capital stock, where its shareholders have been taxed upon their shares: Lena-wee County Savings Bank v. Adrian, 66 M. 273 (June 9, '87).

136. Specific taxation by the state of national banks upon capital stock paid in is void: Smith v. First National Bank, 17 M. 479; First National Bank v. Watkins, 21 M. 488.

137. U. S. Rev. St. § 5219, which allows state taxation of national bank stock if at no greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of citizens of the state, is not infringed by the provisions of H. S. § 1003, providing merely for deduction of debts from credits, and not allowing shareholders to deduct the amount of their debts from the value of their stock: First National Bank v. St. Joseph, 46 M. 526.

138. H. S. § 1008, providing for the taxation of national bank stock in the township or city where the bank is located, except that where a stockholder resides in another township in the same county he is taxable in his own township, is valid: Howell v. Cassopolis, 85 M. 471.

139. And a village (Cassopolis) charter in authorizing the taxation of "all property, real and personal, within the limits of said village," not exempt from taxation, for county and township purposes, does not allow the village to tax the shares of bank stockholders who reside in another township in the same county: Ibid.

(d) Taxation of insurance companies.

140. A mutual life insurance company undertook to insure at actual cost, but set down in its policies a maximum premium exceeding the usual annual cost, and adjusted the matter by allowing an offset to the premium each year of an amount equal to the excess of the maximum premiums of the year before over the actual cost of insurance for that year; held, that the amount upon which is levied the state specific tax of three per cent. on the premiums collected by the company in Michigan is the sum of the maximum annual premiums as set down in the policies so collected, and not merely the cash balance actually paid over to the company: Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. State Treasurer, 81 M. 6.

141. H. S. § 4212, authorizing a tax to be collected both on premiums received and on such as within the year "shall have been agreed to be paid (sic) for any insurance effected or agreed to be effected or procured," is held to prescribe a substantially different basis of taxation from that supplied by C. L. 1871, § 2951 (see H. S. § 4231), which authorized taxation only on "all premiums received in cash or otherwise." The later rule supplants the earlier for future cases: Ibid.

(e) Exemptions.

142. A corporate charter containing no stipulation promising exemption from taxation does not preclude subsequent legislation imposing a tax: People v. Detroit & P. R. Co., 1 M. 458.

143. The exercise by the legislature of power (if such power exists) to grant a perpetual exemption from taxation will not be assumed in any case unless the language employed admits of no doubt: East Saginaw Salt, etc. Co. v. East Saginaw, 19 M. 259.

144. A statute exempting lands of a railroad company from taxation is not a contract unless based on a consideration; if not so based, it is revocable at pleasure; and the presumptions are against the existence of a contract for exemption: Tucker v. Ferguson, 23 Wall. (U. S.) 527.

145. A statute exempting from taxation property employed in a certain manufacture, when made by way of bounty to encourage such manufacture, is subject to repeal: East Saginaw Salt, etc. Co. v. East Saginaw, 19 M. 259, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 873.

146. Legislation exempting for a limited period unsold state swamp lands given in aid of a canal or of a railroad is valid; nor can the courts inquire into the consideration for legislative exemption from taxation: People v. Auditor-General, 7 M. 84; Chippewa Supervisors v. Auditor-General, 65 M. 408.

147. Whether an agreement for a sale of lands by the usual executory contract—the title to be conveyed when the purchase price is paid—constitutes a sale within the meaning of the act of the legislature of Feb. 12, 1858, exempting lands donated for the construction of the Sault St. Marie Canal from taxation for five years, except as to any portion sold, quere: People v. Auditor-General, 7 M. 84.

148. In act 86 of 1873, authorizing the board of control of state swamp lands to make an appropriation of such lands in aid of a railroad, "the full power and authority over said lands, the reservation necessary, and the privileges requisite in the application of such lands to such a purpose" were given, with a proviso that the lands should become taxable as soon as earned. Held, that the intent was clear that the board could contract to exempt from taxation such lands while unsold: Chippewa Supervisors v. Auditor-General, 65 M. 408.

149. Said act of 1873 was entitled so as to cover the exemption clause, nor was the amendatory act of 1875 (p. 119) a departure from the former statute so as to render the title inapplicable: Ibid.

150. The compact under which Michigan was admitted into the Union exempts from taxation certain military bounty lands, while they continue to be held by the patentees and their heirs, "for the term of three years from and after the date of the patents therefor." This language, being clear and unambiguous, must be applied precisely according to its tenor, and cannot be held to mean three years from the location of the land: People v. Auditor-General, 9 M. 184. As to rejection of tax on such lands, see infra, § 290.

151. The exemption of houses of public worship, etc., from taxation applies only to taxes imposed under the general system of taxation, and does not extend to assessments for paving streets: Lefevre v. Detroit, 2 M. 586.

152. It seems that the provisions of R. S. 1846, ch. 20, p. 103, exempting from taxation "all houses of public worship," etc., were not intended to exempt the lot or ground upon which houses of public worship stand: Ibid.

153. The exemption from taxation of "the real estate belonging to library, benevolent, charitable and scientific institutions, actually occupied by them for the purposes for which they were incorporated," exempts only such distinct tenements as are actually occupied by such institutions for the purposes of their creation, and not tenements, though under the same roof, which are used for other purposes: Detroit Young Men's Society v. Detroit, 8 M. 172.

154. Certain real estate was deeded to a church in fee, "to the end that they might, from time to time as they should deem necessary, erect thereon any buildings or improvements suitable for ecclesiastical, literary or benevolent purposes," and was leased to the Sisters of Charity for thirty years at a nominal rent for charitable purposes, and was actually occupied for such purposes. Whether the premises, while held and occupied under this lease, are exempt from taxation under the statute as "real estate belonging" to the Sisters of Charity, quere; the court being divided: Sisters of Charity v. Detroit, 9 M. 94.

155. Exemption from ordinary taxation does not exempt from dog tax: Hendrie v. Kalthoff, 48 M. 306.

III. ASSESSMENT.

(a) General matters.

156. A township is not completely organized for the assessment, levy and collection of taxes until officers are elected; and until then the township from which it is set off may levy and collect the taxes: Comins v. Harrisville, 45 M. 442.

157. Assessments under the general tax law of 1882 (H. S. pp. 1265-1292) may be sustained; the question of the constitutionality of that statute (about which the court was equally divided in the State Tax-law Cases, 54 M. 350) related to proceedings subsequent to the return of delinquent taxes to the auditor-general: Davenport v. Auditor-General, 70 M. 192 (May 11, '88); Humphrey v. Auditor-General, 70 M. 292.

158. The tax law of 1869 (act 169) was repealed by act 11 of 1882, so far as it related to the assessment of taxes and the steps to collect the same. It remained in force only to protect collection proceedings begun before the repeal, and to protect rights, etc.: Goodman v. Nester, 64 M. 662.

159. Under act 228 of 1875 the assessor might add to the assessment roll, during the days fixed by law for a review thereof, the name of any person liable for a liquor tax, and no notice to such person was necessary. Such assessment would be for a full year's tax: Wood v. Thomas, 38 M. 686.

160. Report for assessment for tax on company's gross receipts should not estop company in absence of fraud: Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Auditor-General, 53 M. 79.

161. The fact that the assessment of a township was placed at two different sums, first in the roll as made by the assessor at one sum, and subsequently in the tabular statement of the supervisors at another, is not material, and therefore the roll is not void for that reason: Tweed v. Metcalf, 4 M. 579.

As to legalizing assessments, see supra, §§ 84-95.

That irregularities in assessments are not reviewed on CERTIORARI, see that title, §§ 23, 24.

(b) Assessors.

162. The absence of any record in the town books showing that the assessors were sworn does not furnish prima facie evidence that they were not sworn: Sibley v. Smith, 2 M. 486.

163. An assessor who has omitted lands from an assessment is presumed to have done so rightly unless the facts exclude such presumption: Perkins v. Nugent, 45 M. 156.

164. It seems that an individual tax-payer has no ground of action against a supervisor for assessing property on a false valuation except on the ground of fraud or malice: Moss v. Cummings, 44 M. 359.

165. As to what remedy tax-payer has against supervisor who fails to list others' property, quere: Ibid.

166. Assessors are entitled to inspect liquor bonds so as to ascertain property of sureties: Brown v. County Treasurer, 54 M. 132.

167. A supervisor is not liable in trespass on account of any errors or defects in the description of real estate in the assessment roll. When the roll comes to him properly certified from the board of supervisors he has no right, unless from some defect that renders the whole roll void, to refuse to make out the tax-roll and attach his warrant thereto. He is required to issue this warrant in general form, and cannot notice or except individual cases: Clark v. Axford, 5 M. 182.

As to what constitutes justification in such case, see OFFICERS, § 189.

168. A supervisor who issues a warrant to collect a tax duly certified to him is protected unless the certificate on its face apprises him that some of the moneys specified therein are illegal charges, even though he has knowledge outside of such certificate — e. g., by his membership in the town board — of the facts constituting the illegality: Wall v. Trumbull, 16 M. 228.

169. A supervisor issuing a tax warrant is held to knowledge of and liability for any illegality manifest on the face of the warrant: Atwell v. Zeluff, 26 M. 118.

(c) Locus of assessment.

170. By a statute passed in April, but which did not go into effect until September, 1885, land was taken from the township of R. and was added to B., a township in a new county. The supervisor of R. assessed the land as if in B., thereby increasing the rate of taxation, levying the taxes upon statements handed him by B.'s supervisor, which taxes were collected and paid over to B.'s treasurer. Held, that such assessment and levy of the tax for 1885 were unauthorized (see § 97 of tax-law of 1885, act 153), and that in an action against R. to recover back the tax paid under protest R. could not complain if a recovery was allowed for the excess levied upon plaintiff's lands above the township tax-rate above the other real estate in the township: Michigan Land, etc. Co. v. Republic, 65 M. 628.

171. An assessment of land as if it were in some other township than that in which it really lies is wholly void, even though made in good faith and in ignorance of the facts: Taylor v. Youngs, 48 M. 268.

172. Standing timber is not personal property generally, nor is it a "forest product" within the meaning of the tax-law of 1885, § 11, subd. 4; and though growing upon widely separate tracts and owned distinctly from the land it is to be assessed as realty with the lands whereon it is situated: Fletcher v. Alcona, 71 M. — (Oct. 19, '88).

173. Lumber that is brought to a railway station for transit merely, and is kept there in piles for convenience of shipment upon grounds that are neither owned nor hired for the purpose, is not taxable at that place as property in storage: Monroe v. Greenhoe, 54 M. 9.

174. Lumber upon the premises of the manufacturer and under a contract of sale to dealers whose place of business is elsewhere is not taxable where it is, as if in a place of "storage," especially if anything remains to be done to complete the transfer to the purchaser: Osterhout v. Jones, 54 M. 228.

175. Lumber piled to dry and season upon ground hired by the owners for the purpose, and not intended to be moved until sold, is stored within the meaning of the tax-law of 1882, and is properly taxed in the township where so stored: Hood v. Judkins, 61 M. 575.

176. Under H. S. p. 1267, § 11, logs in camp are taxable where the camp is, if there is an office there and buildings for transacting the local business, receiving funds and making returns to headquarters: Ryerson v. Muskegon, 57 M. 383.

177. Where a lumber company had its principal office in a metropolitan city, but had no yard, and paid no taxes there, it was proper to tax its lumber in the remote township where, by contract with a company that had its mill and storage room there, it was manufactured and piled on the latter's docks, from which, after remaining until it was seasoned, it was taken by purchasers: Manistique Lumbering Co. v. Witter, 58 M. 625.

178. Personal property belonging to a firm must, as a general rule, be assessed for taxation in the township where the business of the firm is principally carried on: Fletcher v. Alcona, 71 M. — (Oct. 19, '88).

179. Where the stock of a firm of lumber dealers is sold at their general place of business, but is sawed and shipped elsewhere, it is taxable at the general place of business, and not in the township where it is manufactured: Putman v. Fife Lake, 45 M. 125.

180. Logs temporarily left afloat for sawing by a firm whose place of business and the residence of whose partners is elsewhere cannot be assessed in the township where so left: Torrent v. Yager, 52 M. 506.

181. Personal property belonging to a partnership is assessable in the locality where it is, if the firm has its place of business there: Williams v. Saginaw, 51 M. 120.

182. Township taxes assessed on the personal property of a partnership can only be assessed in the township where the firm has a place of business (H. S. § 1012), and not where the personal property is manufactured and stored, even though small quantities are occasionally sold therefrom at that place: McCoy v. Anderson, 47 M. 502.

183. A manufacturer lived in one ward and had a warehouse and stock-in-trade in another, and he also had a number of railway cars which he used in the transportation of his manufactures. The cars were taxed in both wards. Held, that they were properly taxable with the stock-in-trade as appurtenant to the business; and as personal property is assessable in gross and specific description of it is surplusage, the enumeration of the cars on the tax-roll could not affect the validity of the assessment, and if it was excessive the owner's remedy was by appeal to the board of review and not by a suit to recover taxes paid under protest: Comstock v. Grand Rapids, 54 M. 641.

184. Under act 153 of 1885, § 11, subds. 1 and 2, stock upon a farm is properly assessed where the farm lies, although both belong to a corporation whose principal business office is in another township: Michigan Dairy Co. v. McKinlay, 70 M. 574.

185. Under act 153 of 1885, providing that forest products in transit shall be assessed at the place of destination, which, in the absence of testimony to the contrary, shall be deemed to be at the sorting grounds, logs in transit contracted to be sawed at a certain place are properly assessed there and not elsewhere: Boyce v. Cutter, 70 M. 539.

186. The tax-law of 1885, § 11, subd. 4, provides that forest products in transit shall be held to be delivered to the sorting grounds of the booming company or driving agents nearest the mouth of the stream, unless the contrary is made to appear by the owner or party having them in charge. Held, that a showing under oath before the assessor or board of review is not necessary, but that any information — as by an agent's letter — is sufficient if it satisfies the officers: Brooks v. Arenac, 71 M. — (July 11, '88).

187. A charge upon the question whether logs were in transit or not, so as to determine in what township they were assessable, held to be sufficiently favorable to the party objecting to the assessment: Hill v. Graham, 72 M. — (Nov. 28, '88).

188. Subds. 6, 4 and 1 of § 11 of act 153 of 1885 are to be construed and stand together in determining where logs belonging to an estate in the hands of an executor or administrator are to be assessed: Avery v. Dewitt, 71 M. — (Oct. 19, '88).

189. The tax laws contemplate that the interest held by a purchaser of primary school or swamp lands shall be assessed as personalty, but that the assessment is to be separate from the general valuation of his personal property and must be made in the township where the land lies, irrespective of the owner's residence; and that if the tax cannot be collected by the customary process, his interest in the land shall be forfeited to the state: Robertson v. State Land Office Commissioner, 44 M. 274.

190. For purposes of taxation intangible property like stock follows the domicile of the owner unless separated from it by positive law: Howell v. Cassapolis, 35 M. 471.

As to where bank stock is to be taxed, see supra, §§ 188, 189.

(d) To whom property to be assessed; resident and non-resident.

191. Our laws regarding the assessment and collection of taxes have usually had regard to the possession rather than the ownership: Crane v. Reeder, 25 M. 303.

192. The resident owner or occupant must be named in the roll: Lefevre v. Detroit, 2 M. 586.

193. Land should not be assessed as non-resident simply because the tenant or owner does not have his home upon the premises; certain facts, such as cultivation of the land and residence in the township, held to constitute occupancy: Tweed v. Metcalf, 4 M. 579; Burroughs v. Goff, 64 M. 464.

194. An assessment of lands belonging to a resident in the non-resident list is invalid: Rayner v. Lee, 20 M. 384.

195. Putting resident land on the roll with non-resident lands and grouping and jointly assessing them with other lands belonging to a different person are such defects as will invalidate a tax-title: Hanscom v. Hinman, 30 M. 419.

196. The requirement that unoccupied lands not owned by residents and not exempt shall be entered on a separate part of the roll from resident lands is mandatory, and if disregarded avoids tax-titles based on assessments so made: Seymour v. Peters, 67 M. 415.

197. Where the statute (H. S. § 1010) permits the property of an estate to be assessed to the heirs or devisees without naming them, an assessment to the estate by name is legally equivalent, and therefore sufficient: Dickison v. Reynolds, 48 M. 158.

198. A legatee cannot be assessed for a legacy not yet due and still in the hands of executors; all undistributed estate must be assessed to the executor: Herrick v. Big Rapids, 53 M. 554.

199. The assessment of a guardian upon an undistributed legacy to his minor ward is invalid; and the guardian's previous acquiescence in the assessment as a member of the board of review cannot bind the ward: Barstow v. Big Rapids, 56 M. 35.

200. The tax law of 1882 (H. S. p. 1267, § 1), declared that "all personal property, except as hereinafter provided, shall be assessed to the owner in the township of which he is an inhabitant;" and further, that "personal property under the control of a trustee or agent . . . may be assessed to such trustee or agent in the town where he resides." Held, that these provisions do not prevent securities belonging to a resident of the state, but in the custody of an agent living in a different town, and separately assessable, from being assessed in part to the owner and in part to the agent. If the same securities are assessed to both, the assessment on the owner takes precedence: Curtis v. Richland, 56 M. 478.

201. It is proper to assess lands belonging to a partnership as partnership property instead of to the partners individually as tenants in common: Hubbard v. Winsor, 15 M. 146.

202. Partnership property in the hands of a surviving partner for the purpose of closing up the business is properly assessed in the firm name: Blodgett v. Muskegon, 60 M. 580.

203. Property of plaintiff, the Petrie Lumber Company, was by mistake assessed for taxes to A. H. Petrie & Co., a copartnership which had been merged in the plaintiff corporation. The property was not otherwise assessed, nor was the tax claimed to be invalid on other grounds than the assessment to the wrong party. Held, that under § 84 of the tax law of 1882, the error not being prejudicial, was cured; that the tax was a valid one against plaintiff, and as such could be enforced and collected: Petrie Lumber Co. v. Collins, 66 M. 64.

204. A farm and the stock thereon were assessed in the alternative to a corporation or its agent, naming both; the agent telling the assessor that it made no difference. The tax was paid for one year without objection, but the second year the corporation refused to pay the tax on the stock, though paying that on the land. Held, that under act 153 of 1885, § 89, the assessment could not be held invalid: Michigan Dairy Co. v. McKinlay, 70 M. 574 (June 8, '88).

205. Logs belonging to the firm of James H. Hill & Sons, composed of James H., Wilbur H. and Arthur Hill, were assessed to "James H. & Arthur Hill & Co." The assessment was sustained, it not appearing that the rights of the owners were prejudiced: Hill v. Graham, 72 M. — (Nov. 28, '88).

(e) Description of property.

206. C. L. 1857, § 804, provided that, if the tract were less or other than a subdivision of a section authorized by the United States for the sale of the public lands, it might "be described by a designation of the number of the lot or tract or of other lands by which it is bounded." Held, that a description of the land as "the west half of the southwest fractional quarter of section twenty-eight," etc., containing fifty acres, more or less, was insufficient for an assessment where it appeared that the southwest fractional quarter was not subdivided by government, that it contained 100 acres, was of an irregular shape, somewhat resembling a triangle, and was patented as one parcel: Amberg v. Rogers, 9 M. 332. See infra, § 646.

207. The description must be such that the boundaries and location of the premises can be determined from it; such a description as "Young Men's Society, Gov. & J. P. Jeff. Av, n. 45 feet, w. pt, lot 11, sec. 1, and e. pt, lot 10, sec. 1. B. 2," held void: Detroit Young Men's Society v. Detroit, 3 M. 172.

208. An assessment upon St. Peter's cathedral, the roll not describing the lots nor naming the owners or occupants, is void: Lefevre v. Detroit, 2 M. 586.

209. The description of lands assessed for taxes by the use of initial letters, abbreviations and figures is sufficient (H. S. § 1023): Sibley v. Smith, 2 M. 486.

210. The description of a tract of land as "the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$, sec. 4, less lots sold," is insufficient. Hubbard v. Winsor, 15 M. 146.

211. Where the land in its assessment, instead of being described by the designation of its subdivisions according to the United States survey or by number of lot or tract, etc. (see H. S. § 1023), is described by subdivisions that are not legal or that could not physically exist, such description is uncertain and insufficient: King v. Potter, 18 M. 184.

212. The requirement in the tax law of 1843 (L. 1843, p. 66, § 2), that where a tract is not the subdivision of any section authorized by the United States for the sale of public lands the assessment should state the name or number of the lot or tract, or "by what other lands it is bounded," has reference to those cases in which the tract is not known by name or number, and in which such a description would be most likely to attract the attention of the person interested in the payment of such tax: Gilman v. Riopelle, 18 M. 145.

213. A description as "that part of private claim 61 lying east of the north branch of the River Ecorse in township 8 S. of R. 11 E.," held sufficient under the tax law of 1843, p. 66: Ibid.

214. Under R. S. 1846, p. 105, § 18 (see H. S. § 1023, subd. 4), lots could not be assessed by reference to their numbers merely on an unacknowledged and unrecorded village plat: Johnstone v. Scott, 11 M. 232, 240.

215. The description of land on a village tax-roll as the east half of the southeast quarter of a section, omitting to give the section number, is not so defective as to be void when the village contains but one east half of a southeast quarter of a section: Bird v. Perkins, 33 M. 28.

(f) Valuation.

216. The constitutional requirement that assessments shall be made on property at its cash value means not only what may be put to valuable uses, but what has a recognizable pecuniary value inherent in itself, and not enhanced or diminished according to the person who owns or uses it: Perry v. Big Rapids, 67 M. 146.

217. Assessments must be at the true cash value; intentional undervaluation is illegal: Wattles v. Lapeer, 40 M. 624; Attorney-General v. Sanilac Supervisors 42 M. 72.

218. Const., art. 14, § 12, requiring assessments to be at the true cash value, is as much designed for securing against overvaluation as undervaluation: Avery v. East Saginaw, 44 M. 587.

219. The general tax law requiring all property to be assessed for taxation at its true cash value does not necessarily require the assessing officer to assess a mortgage at the amount it purports to secure; he must ascertain, according to his best information, the true cash value of the mortgage, considering whether it was taken merely as an indemnity or to secure the performance of some act other than the payment of money, whether the land is worth less than the face of the mortgage, whether there are prior mortgages, and other contingencies: People v. Sanilac Supervisors, 71 M. 16.

220. For the purpose of assessment the note or bond and the mortgage that secures it are considered as one value or property: Ibid.

221. Where a library or other similar institution owns under the same roof tenements that are not actually occupied for the purposes of its creation (see supra, § 153), together with others that are so used and are therefore exempt from taxation, the proper mode of assessing such property is to exclude that which is exempt in the estimate of the value of the whole estate; and the tax levied thereon will be laid only upon the value of that which is not exempt, though the description of the property embraces the whole: Detroit Young Men's Society v. Detroit, 3 M. 173.

222. Proof that by a general understanding of the supervisors assessments were made throughout the county on the basis of a uniform reduction of fifty per cent. from the true value was properly excluded in an action of ejectment when offered to invalidate a tax-deed; such assessment would not injuriously affect the tax, since the proportionate burden would be the same: Williams v. Mears, 61 M. 86.

223. Affidavits from supervisors, in answer to an order to show cause, that they had "estimated" the property at its cash value, were not assumed by the court to be evasive: Attorney-General v. Sanilac Supervisors, 42 M. 72.

224. Assessing officers must inform themselves as far as possible of the true cash value of each parcel of land assessed, and must not assess non-residents differently from others; but where the extent and inaccessibility of wild land make personal inspection impossible in the time allowed, it will not be assumed that because the lands were to a great extent valued alike that they were assessed unfairly: Sawyer-Goodman Co. v. Crystal Falls, 56 M. 597; Peninsula Iron, etc. Co. v. Crystal Falls, 60 M. 510.

225. The listing of taxable property is clerical work; but the ascertainment of its value is judicial, and requires the supervisor's judgment under his official oath: Woodman v. Auditor-General, 52 M. 28.

226. The fact that the clerical work of making out an assessment roll was performed by a clerk under the direction of the supervisor, the latter estimating and fixing the valuations without any assistance from the clerk, who simply placed upon the roll the valuations as instructed by the supervisor, does not tend to invalidate the roll: Peninsula Iron Co. v. Crystal Falls, 60 M. 510.

227. The valuation of property for taxation is confided to the judgment and discretion of the supervisor, and the courts cannot interfere with a bona fide exercise of such judgment though they may think he has erred; but equity will restrain the collection of so much of a tax upon land as is caused by a corrupt or intentional overvaluation of the property: Merrill v. Auditor-General, 24 M. 170.

228. Valuations on assessment for taxation are not questions suitable for a court or jury: Mead v. Lansing, 56 M. 601.

(g) Review of assessments.

229. The general tax law allows no change of valuation except on a proper examination; and no valuation is final until there has been an opportunity of investigating it on the taxpayer's part: Avery v. East Saginaw, 44 M. 587.

230. Every tax-payer was entitled, under H. S. § 1020, to an opportunity to see how his property has been assessed and to show that the assessment was illegal or unjust: Woodman v. Auditor-General, 52 M. 28.

231. The tax-payer has "his day in court" before the board of review of assessments; he cannot complain that a subsequent statute cuts off the review in chancery provided for by the act of 1882: Davenport v. Auditor-General, 70 M. 192.

232. If a tax-payer does not have the assessment of his property corrected and perfected when it is in his power to do so he must be assumed to admit its correctness: First National Bank v. St. Joseph, 46 M. 526.

233. Whether an assessment is excessive is not a question for the courts to try where the statute has provided a board of review: Williams v. Saginaw, 51 M. 120.

234. To obtain relief where an assessment of personalty is merely excessive, not void for want of jurisdiction, one should appeal to the board of review; his remedy is not by a suit to recover back the tax after payment: Comstock v. Grand Rapids, 54 M. 641.

235. One who is aggrieved by an assessment, but who fails to appear before the board of review, cannot assail the assessment in the courts unless he can show that the supervisor or the board acted fraudulently: Peninsula Iron, etc. Co. v. Crystal Falls, 60 M. 510.

236. But one is not bound to notice or to appeal from an assessment of personal taxes against him if jurisdiction to assess them did not exist: Williams v. Saginaw, 51 M. 120.

237. The power of the board of review in Bay City, under act 807 of 1869, § 42, to review a valuation of property, arises only where an application is made for that purpose by the party concerned: Griswold v. Bay City School District, 24 M. 262.

238. Sworn evidence is not essential unless called for by the board, which can act upon personal examination or on any evidence it deems satisfactory: Ibid.

239. When a board of review has once acted and reduced an assessment its action becomes final and cannot be changed, if at all, without new notice: Griswold v. Bay City School District, 24 M. 262; Phillips v. New Buffalo, 64 M. 683. Nor need such action be proved intentionally fraudulent to authorize recovery back: 64 M. 683.

240. An assessment cannot be raised by a city board of review without notice to the taxpayer: Avery v. East Saginaw, 44 M. 587.

241. And notice of the review for the general assessment roll will not avail as notice for the review of a special assessment roll that is distinct from the other: Dool v. Cassopolis, 42 M. 547.

242. A notice which by clerical error fixed Sunday as a day for hearing objections to the assessment of a tax is not binding, but the defect can be waived by taking extension of time for payment or by voluntary payment: Louden v. East Saginaw, 41 M. 18.

That the absence from the record of necessary action in regard to posting notices of meeting of board of review may be shown by the testimony of a witness who has examined the records, see EVIDENCE, § 1049.

243. One who has filed a protest with the city board of review against being assessed for logs in transit not destined for the city is not estopped by an inadvertent statement made before the board from showing the facts of the case when seeking to recover his property seized for the illegal tax: Boyce v. Cutter, 70 M. 539.

244. On an appeal under H. S. § 1253 from the auditor-general's assessment of specific taxes, the circuit court is merely an appellate tax tribunal; its conclusion is not a judgment but an assessment, and is not reviewable on error: Auditor-General v. Pullman Palace Car Co., 84 M. 59.

(h) Signing roll; certificate.

245. R. S. 1838, p. 82, § 11, required the assessors to sign the roll when completed. This was mandatory, and if not done the roll was void. The assessors' signatures to the certificate attached to the roll would not suffice, as that certificate is no part of the roll: Sibley v. Smith, 2 M. 486; Lacey v. Davis, 4 M. 140.

246. But under the law of 1842, p. 85, the want of signature to the roll was no objection, the certificate being the only authentication required: Lacey v. Davis, 4 M. 140.

247. A requirement that the board of review should sign the assessment roll after completing it was held complied with where the members signed a communication to the common council certifying that the board had completed the review, correction and approval of the roll, which communication was pasted to the roll: Darmstaetter v. Moloney, 45 M. 621.

248. The presumption that official action has been regular applies to support the supervisor's certificate to an assessment roll as not prematurely signed, though dated upon the last of the three days allowed by statute for reviewing the roll; the roll is open for review until five o'clock in the afternoon of the third day, but the certificate can be signed after that hour: Yelverton v. Steele, 36 M. 62.

249. The fact that a supervisor's certificate to an assessment roll is dated before the day of review, when parties have a right to appear and be heard on their assessments, is not important. The date may be an error, and if not, the review may nevertheless have taken place: Dickison v. Reynolds, 48 M. 158.

250. Where the certificate that the statute requires shall be attached to the assessment roll is attached but not signed, the defect is fatal: Ibid.

251. Where an assessment roll was objected to as wanting a certificate, and it was claimed that the appearance of the roll showed that there had been one or more leaves detached, held, that a question of fact was raised as to whether the roll lacked a certicate when returned to the county treasurer, and whether, when delivered to the supervisor, it was properly certified: Fay v. Wood, 65 M. 390.

And see infra, § 266.

252. Though it may not be necessary that the certificate use the exact words of the statute, a substantial conformity is necessary: Hogelskamp v. Weeks, 37 M. 422; Day v. Cole, 65 M. 129, 154.

253. H. S. § 1025 requires a supervisor, on completing an assessment roll, to certify in effect that he "has set down all the real estate liable to be taxed according to his best information," and that "the roll contains a true statement of the aggregate valuation of the taxable personal estate." A supervisor omitted the italicised words and certified that he had set down the real estate "according to his best [judgment and] information." Held, that these variations from the authorized form did not invalidate the certificate: McCallum v. Bethany, 42 M. 457.

254. A tax-title is invalid if the assessor's certificate attached to the roll under which the tax was levied materially differed from that prescribed by statute at the time the tax was levied. So held where a statutory form permitting the assessor to rely upon the sworn valuation made by the tax-payer was followed after the statute had been amended so as to require the assessor himself to estimate the value of the property: Crooks v. Whitford, 47 M. 288.

255. Where the assessor in Detroit appended to the roll a certificate according to the form required by the general tax law (C. L. 1857, § 806) at the time the city charter went into effect, but omitting the statement added by the later tax law (H. S. § 1025) such certificate was held sufficient; but held further, that no certificate was needed to authenticate the roll to the board of review, as the assessor was himself a member of the board and the official bearer of the roll thereto: Darmstaetter v. Moloney, 45 M. 621.

256. Where a city charter requires special assessments to be made by commissioners, and provides for a return to the common council, they must certify in some way upon the roll the basis upon which the assessment was made; their bare signatures to the roll, or the oath taken by them at the outset, is not enough to sustain the tax: Grand Rapids v. Blakely, 40 M. 367.

Certificate to assessment roll for local improvement must show that assessments have been made in proportion to the benefits: See CITIES AND VILLAGES, § 218.

257. A certificate of the assessors which states that they have estimated the real estate "at a sum which, for the purposes of assessing, we believe to be the true value thereof," instead of "at what we believe to be the true cash value thereof," as required by law, is fatally defective: Clark v. Crane, 5 M. 151.

258. Omission in such certificate of word "cash" from "true cash value" is fatal and avoidstax deed: Hogelskamp v. Weeks, 87 M. 422.

259. A tax is illegal if the certificate to the assessment roll fails to state that the valuation of the property assessed was "not at the price it would sell for at a forced or auction sale:" Silsbee v. Stockle, 44 M. 561; Sinclair v. Learned, 51 M. 335; Daniels v. Watertown, 55 M. 376; Westbrook v. Miller, 64 M. 129.

260. The omission of the italicised words from the required statement "the true cash value thereof, and not at the price it would sell for at a forced or auction sale," avoids the assessment: Gilchrist v. Dean, 55 M. 244.

261. Omission of the words "true" and "auction" avoids the assessment: Dickison v. Reynolds, 48 M. 158.

262. Omission of the word "true" before "cash value" in certifying to land held shown to be a clerical error and not fatal, where, in another part of the same certificate, the personalty was certified to as assessed at its "true cash value as aforesaid:" Ibid.; Fay v. Wood, 65 M. 390.

263. A tax-sale is fatally defective if based on a supervisor's certificate that he had "estimated the property at what he believed to be the cash value thereof, as is customary by assessors:" Hurd v. Raymond, 50 M. 389.

264. Where the proper certificate appears on the roll it cannot, in a collateral proceeding, be contradicted, e. g., to show an undervaluation: Blanchard v. Powers, 42 M. 619; Gamble v. East Saginaw, 43 M. 367.

265. Assessments with the certificate of the assessor or board of review attached are admissible in proof of the regularity of tax-deeds, where the tax or collection roll fails to show that such certificates were made: Fells v. Barbour, 58 M. 49.

266. The tax-roll for 1872 was introduced in evidence, but it contained no certificate of the supervisor. It was claimed that the roll had been mutilated and some of its leaves cut out, but there was no proof that the roll ever contained such certificate or that the missing portions contained it. Held, that there could be no presumption that the roll ever contained such certificate: Newkirk v. Fisher, 72 M. — (Oct. 26, '88).

See supra, § 251.

(i) Equalization.

That duties of board of supervisors as prescribed in H. S. § 324 are sufficiently expressed by statute's title, see CONSTITUTIONS, § 598.

267. The object of the equalization is to obtain a just basis for the apportionment of the state and county tax among the townships: Boyce v. Sebring, 66 M. 210.

268. Equalization under R. S. 1838, p. 83, § 14: Sibley v. Smith, 2 M. 486.

269. The equalization is only between the respective townships; the board has nothing to do with the equalization of real estate as between individuals, and taxes are to be assessed upon the valuation in the roll as they were before the equalization: Tweed v. Metcalf, 4 M. 579.

270. And the equalization is confined to real estate. Valuations of personal estate remain as fixed by the assessors: Case v. Dean, 16 M. 12.

271. But while the statute contemplates an equalization as between the townships with reference to real estate only, it does not assume that the assessments of real and personal estate made by any supervisor are relatively equal or unjust, and therefore it does not change or disturb them, but leaves the burden or benefit of any increase or diminution made in the total assessment of a township to be shared alike by both realty and personalty; and if the supervisor, in apportioning an increase, distributes it upon the real estate only, the tax is excessive and a title based thereon void: Sinclair v. Learned, 51 M. 335.

272. The statute contemplates that the additions or deductions, arising because the relative valuations of real property are disproportionate, will be made to or from the aggregate valuation of all the taxable property, personal as well as real, in the particular township: Silsbee v. Stockle, 44 M. 561; Boyce v. Sebring, 66 M. 210.

273. Under the act of 1848, p. 67, § 20, the aggregate of equalized valuations might be reduced below that of the assessors: Tweed v. Metcalf, 4 M. 579.

274. The board has complete power over the subject of equalization and may adopt its own means of reaching the result: Case v. Dean, 16 M. 12.

275. When the board alters the aggregate valuation of the real estate, the additions or deductions made may be expressed in any form which by calculation may be reduced to percentage: Ibid.

276. Equalization on the basis of a uniform reduction of fifty per cent. from the true value does not vitiate a tax, because the proportionate burden remains the same: Williams v. Mears, 61 M. 86.

277. The valuations of real estate adopted for the year by the equalizing board are conclusive, and cannot be invalidated by showing that the board adopted an erroneous footing or aggregate of the valuations returned by a supervisor; it is no part of a supervisor's duty to foot up or state the aggregate of the valuations as a prerequisite to equalization: Case v. Dean, 16 M. 12.

278. The adoption by the board of an erroneous aggregate valuation of personal property as a basis for the apportionment to the township does not vitiate the tax unless it has the effect to increase, beyond its just proportion, the tax to be borne by the parcels of land in question: Ibid.

279. The board should act on its own judgment, uninfluenced by petitions for reduction of valuations: Attorney-General v. Sanilac Supervisors, 42 M. 72.

280. The courts cannot revise the action of the board of equalization; its duty is political and its power exclusive; and mandamus to compel the board to observe the law will be denied when the board's refusal to do so is not shown: Ibid.

281. The action of the board in the performance of its official discretion in the equalization of taxes cannot be reviewed by the courts; so held on a bill to restrain collection of taxes because of an unfair equalization: McDonald v. Escanaba, 62 M. 555.

282. Where a committee's report on equalization was adopted by the board, the objection that the equalization was not performed by the whole board is of no force: Boyce v. Sebring, 66 M. 210.

283. When the board equalizes in June, as is required every fifth year by H. S. § 324, it is not necessary to equalize again at the October session as required by H. S. § 1027: Silsbee v. Stockle, 44 M. 561; Boyce v. Sebring, 66 M. 210.

284. An equalization by the board is as important as a separate valuation of estates between individuals; and the action of the board in making it must be duly recorded or the tax will be void. An entry under the head of "equalized valuation" of a list of townships with sums set opposite, without anything further in the record to show that this was the result of any action by the board, is not sufficient; it is not such a record as the statute requires: Yelverton v. Steele, 36 M. 62; Maxwell v. Paine, 53 M. 30.

285. The equalization is not defeated by the fact that the report of equalization was not in writing and that there was no written resolution adopting it where the record of the board shows it was performed: Silsbee v. Stockle, 44 M. 561.

286. A particular record relative to equalization examined, and held sufficiently definite: Boyce v. Sebring, 66 M. 210.

287. Under the tax law of 1842, p. 87, § 9, there being no record of any equalization, it was presumed that the valuations by the assessors were such that there was no occasion for one: Lacey v. Davis, 4 M. 140, 155.

288. The certificate of equalization which H. S. § 1029 requires the chairman of the board to make and sign, upon or appended to, the roll of each township, is essential to authenticate the roll, and without it further proceedings are void: Clark v. Azford, 5 M. 182; Maxwell v. Paine, 53 M. 30; Westbrook v. Miller, 64 M. 129.

(j) Re-assessment; rejection.

289. The board of supervisors having authority to re-assess taxes for errors, a re-assessment made by them will be held good until some error therein is shown: Tweed v. Metcalf, 4 M. 579.

290. Where military bounty lands exempt from taxation (see supra, § 150) have been taxed, the auditor-general may reject the taxes on his own motion, and mandamus on the owner's application lies to compel him to do so: People v. Auditor-General, 9 M. 184.

291. The object of charging back taxes is to offset the credit given to the county for the tax on the auditor's books. When so charged back they are to be re-assessed upon the same lands if rejected for mere informality, or upon the whole township if absolutely illegal: Ibid.

IV. LEVY; APPORTIONMENT.

(a) In general.

292. It was lawful to levy taxes for 1885, under act 153 of 1885, which went into effect June 9, upon assessments made in the spring of that year under the law of 1882, which statute, as to assessment and review, was substantially re-enacted by the statute of 1885: Davenport v. Auditor-General, 70 M. 193 (May 11, '88); Fletcher v. Auditor-General, 70 M. 197.

293. Every essential step in the authorizing and assessment of taxes must appear of record. No presumptions can be raised of essential facts not appearing in writing. A parol levy is impossible and void: Palmer v. Rich, 12 M. 414; Moser v. White, 29 M. 59; Taymouth v. Koehler, 35 M. 22; Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Auditor-General, 41 M. 635; Williams v. Mears, 61 M. 86; Michigan Land, etc. Co. v. L'Anse, 63 M. 700; Burroughs v. Goff, 64 M. 464; Michigan Land, etc. Co. v. Republic, 65 M. 628; Rogers v. White, 68 M. 10 (Jan. 5, '88). For illustrations of this principle, see CITIES, §§ 59, 61; DRAINS, §§ 91, 92; HIGHWAYS, §§ 123, 124, 126, 130; SCHOOLS, § 119; TOWNSHIPS, §§ 79-85.

294. A tax cannot be levied for any purpose without express warrant of law: Folkerts v. Power, 42 M. 233; Ryerson v. Laketon, 52 M. 509.

295. It is contrary to our tax system to levy taxes to accumulate funds for the future: Roscommon v. Midland, 39 M. 424; Michigan Land, etc. Co. v. L'Anse, 63 M. 700.

(b) Ascertainment of amount; what may include.

As to determination by city council of amount to be raised, see CITIES AND VILLAGES, §§ 360-363.

As to what sums may be raised by tax for township purposes, see TOWNSHIPS, §§ 30-40.

296. The determination of the amount to be raised by county tax may be made at an adjourned meeting of the October session of the board of supervisors: Hubbard v. Winsor, 15 M. 146.

297. The requirement of H. S. § 1081 relative to the ascertainment by the board of supervisors of the amount of money to be raised by tax for county purposes is mandatory: Boyce v. Sebring, 66 M. 210.

298. Where, instead of fixing a specific sum to be raised by taxation, the board of supervisors directed a percentage on the assessed value, held, that this method was valid, as it left nothing to be done to make it known but a simple computation. It was therefore unnecessary for the court to inquire into the validity of a subsequent statute designed to legalize such method of taxation: Hubbard v. Winsor, 15 M. 146.

299. A county tax is not defeated for want of proper action by the board of supervisors in the amount of money to be raised, where the record of the clerk of the board shows the acceptance of a report of the finance committee and the adoption of a resolution to raise the sums reported: Silsbee v. Stockle, 44 M. 561.

300. Where the proper committee of the board of supervisors reported the amount necessary to be raised for county expenses the coming year, and this was adopted by the board, which subsequently added certain items, held a sufficient ascertainment of the amount under H. S. § 1081: Boyce v. Sebring, 66 M. 210.

301. Where a state tax for a certain year may have included items for extra purposes to an amount sufficient to cover its supposed excess over the then existing statutory limit, it is presumed that it did so: Crooks v. Whitford, 47 M. 233.

302. The mere allowance of illegal demands by the board of supervisors the year preceding the levy of a tax is not sufficient to show that illegal taxes were levied, when there is no evidence to show that the amounts were included in the tax levy, or that there was not money enough on hand to pay them at the time of their allowance: Wright v. Dunham, 13 M. 414.

303. A tax levy for township purposes is not invalid because its amount was necessarily increased by reason of illegal expenditures or unauthorized loans of township funds the preceding year: Peninsula Iron, etc. Co. v. Crystal Falls, 60 M. 510.

304. A finding upon the validity of tax deeds stated that the sum of $1,663.37 for county taxes and a sum of $500 for township contingent fund were duly authorized to be raised, and also that $1,000 was raised on the roll of said township, but failed to state for what; and it also stated there was "no other record of any further sum being raised for 'township expenses.'" Held, that this could not be construed as showing that more money was raised than was authorized: Upton v. Kennedy, 36 M. 215.

305. The direction by a supervisor in his warrant to the township treasurer for the collection of taxes for 1844 to collect for his own compensation four per cent. in addition to the aggregate tax assessed on each person was without authority: Buell v. Irwin, 24 M. 145.

That surveyor's tax included in levy is presumably lawful, see supra, § 75.

(c) Conditions precedent; certification.

306. As condition precedent to levy of tax for county agricultural society, certificate signed by both president and secretary is essential: Hall v. Kellogg, 16 M. 185; Hogelskamp v. Weeks, 37 M. 422.

As to presumption in favor of certificate's existence, see supra, §§ 77-80.

307. The authority to levy a township tax is based upon the previous action of the township—either the electors or the town board, as the case may be—and the supervisor cannot levy a tax at his discretion: Lacey v. Davis, 4 M. 140.

308. To entitle any sum to be raised by tax for use in a township it must be properly certified by the township authorities: Clark v. Axford, 5 M. 182.

309. The supervisor can only assess such taxes as are properly certified to him, and such as the law makes it his personal duty to assess without such certificate: Case v. Dean, 16 M. 12.

310. When regular on its face, the certificate of the township clerk under a statute directing him to certify to the supervisor the amount of the township indebtedness growing out of the payment of bounties, etc., is conclusive on the supervisor, and makes it his duty to assess the tax and issue his warrant for its collection: Smith v. Crittenden, 16 M. 152.

311. Where a township clerk gives a certificate stating that a certain sum has been voted for township expenses at the township meeting, and a larger sum appears to have been placed upon the roll, such certificate raises a presumption that no other or further certificate was given, and consequently that the additional amount on the roll is unauthorized and illegal: Case v. Dean, 16 M. 12.

312. The township clerk's certificate of the amount of township indebtedness to be raised is not invalidated by its bearing date previous to some of the allowances made by the township board, it not being shown that it was not made and delivered before: Wall v. Trumbull, 16 M. 228.

313. The act of 1865 required the township clerk to certify to the supervisor, on or before the first Monday of October, the amount of township indebtedness growing out of the payment of bounties. A certificate was given after the first but before the second Monday of October. Held, that a failure to comply strictly with the law did not invalidate the certificate: Smith v. Crittenden, 16 M. 152.

314. The object of § 23 of the tax law of 1882 (H. S. p. 1272), requiring the township clerk to deliver to the supervisor a certified copy of the vote of the township board raising taxes to defray township expenses, is that it may be delivered by that officer to the clerk of the board of supervisors on or before the second Monday in October, to be passed upon by the supervisors; and such certificate can be executed and delivered after the first Monday in October if in time for such delivery to the county clerk: Peninsula Iron, etc. Co. v. Crystal Falls, 60 M. 510.

(d) The levy; excess.

315. Mandamus lies to compel the board of supervisors to direct the levy of such township statements, duly certified to it, as are legal: Robbins v. Barron, 83 M. 124.

316. It is the duty of the board of supervisors—as in the case of other township taxes—to see that all sums proposed to be raised for drain taxes are authorized by law; and if it errs in such determination the person injured has a remedy by mandamus: Zink v. Monroe County, 68 M. 283 (Jan. 19, '88).

317. If a sum has been lawfully voted by the township authorities for township purposes, the failure of the board of supervisors to direct its levy (H. S. § 1081) does not invalidate the action of the supervisor in spreading it upon his roll: Robbins v. Barron, 83 M. 124; Upton v. Kennedy, 36 M. 215; Boyce v. Sebring, 66 M. 210.

318. Any town, school or highway taxes which the board of supervisors could legally order levied may be levied by the supervisor without such order; and the presumption (H. S. § 1165) that they were legally assessed will support the tax unless it is shown to be illegal: Hunt v. Chapin, 42 M. 24.

319. State and county taxes are not affected by the illegality of city taxes arising from disregard of charter provision requiring votes of aldermen to be entered on minutes: Pontiac v. Axford, 49 M. 69.

320. Nor does such disregard avoid a school tax which the statute requires the council to raise on the vote of the district: Ibid.

321. Where a township board voted a highway money tax upon the town property in addition to the labor rate, held, that it should have been levied upon all the property in the township, including that of an incorporated village lying therein: Ryerson v. Laketon, 52 M. 509.

322. A statute (S. L. 1848, p. 2) confining the limitation (two and a half mills) of taxes for state purposes to levies "for the annual support and ordinary expenses of the state government" was inapplicable to the liabilities and existing obligations of the state in respect to the public debt, and also to such other demands upon the taxing power as did not fall within the sense of the qualification: Crooks v. Whitford, 47 M. 288.

323. A tax deed cannot be held invalid on the ground that the state tax exceeded the regular statutory limit fixed by the statute of 1848, if it appears that during the period within which it was levied extraordinary levies were authorized to which this limitation did not apply, and which might have justified the tax: Ibid.

324. An excessive levy by a city renders void a sale for delinquent taxes and a tax lease given therefor: Edwards v. Taliafero, 34 M. 18.

325. The levy by a city (Lapeer) of a tax exceeding the aggregate amount which the charter permits to be raised in any one year is illegal, and is not aided by the fact that it would not have been excessive had not the assessors undervalued the property on the roll: Wattles v. Lapeer, 40 M. 624.

326. An unauthorized levy of two per cent. on the valuation is no less illegal than one of one hundred per cent.: Ibid.

327. Where the common council of a city (Detroit), being authorized to assess a tax not exceeding one per cent. on the assessed valuation of property in the city for the purposes of certain funds, levied specific sums for each of those funds, which in the aggregate amounted to more than one per cent. on said valuation, the levy was held — on a bill in equity to restrain sale — void to the extent of the excess: Connors v. Detroit, 41 M. 128.

328. Where a township tax levy exceeded the limit of taxation by about $3, a tax deed based thereon was held void: Boyce v. Sebring, 66 M. 210.

329. A tax title based in part on a school tax levied in excess — though by about six cents only — of the amount authorized by law was held invalid: Burroughs v. Gough, 64 M. 464.

330. A general levy for highway purposes that exceeds the legal percentage on the township valuation defeats any sale for taxes the aggregate whereof it forms part: Silsbee v. Stockle, 44 M. 561.

331. A special highway tax exceeding the amount allowed by law is void: Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Auditor-General, 41 M. 635.

332. A tax deed is void if a portion of the taxes for which it was given and for which the lands were sold were excessive and invalid: Hammontree v. Lott, 40 M. 190.

333. When part of a levy appears not to have been duly authorized a sale of land for its proportionate share of such levy is invalid: Rogers v. White, 68 M. 10.

334. The supervisor having, without authority of law, added a certain amount to the tax-roll for township expenses, and that portion of the tax being void, and, from the nature of the case, not distinguishable from the valid part, a sale of premises for such taxes was held void: Lacey v. Davis, 4 M. 140.

335. Collection fees added by the supervisor without authority of law vitiated a sale for taxes of 1844: Buel v. Irwin, 24 M. 145.

336. Where there was no action taken by the township board in the year 1864 to determine the amount to be assessed by the supervisor for collecting expenses, the collection fee, if excessive, and if forming a part of the general levy for that year, invalidated the whole tax: Bailey v. Haywood, 70 M. 188 (May 11, '88).

337. A sale and title based thereon were held void where an illegal allowance voted by the board of supervisors for extra compensation to a judge was included in the assessment and levy. Certain evidence, parol and written, held competent to show that the sum voted was paid out of the levy resolved on: Culbertson v. Witbeck Co., 127 U. S. 326.

338. Where an excessive portion of the taxes of a township is laid upon the land a tax title for that year is invalid: Sinclair v. Learned, 51 M. 335.

339. A tax for highway purposes was held void because in excess of the per cent. ordered to be raised, etc. (see HIGHWAYS, § 125): Seymour v. Peters, 67 M. 415.

340. Any material excess in the state, county or township tax, all of which are blended in one column and indistinguishable, renders all the taxes in that column, and any sale whereof these form a part, void; it seems that an excess of a single cent might be disregarded: Case v. Dean, 16 M. 12.

341. But under a statutory provision that where an illegality affects the amount of a tax only the tax shall be sustained so far as it is just and legal, the rule that a levy illegal in part only is wholly void is inapplicable, at least to suits for the recovery of taxes paid: Lake Superior Ship Canal v. Thompson, 56 M. 498.

(e) Apportionment among townships.

342. The requirements of H. S. § 1081 concerning the apportionment of state and county taxes among the townships are mandatory: Boyce v. Sebring, 66 M. 210.

343. Under said § 1081 it is sufficient if it appears of record that the just share of the amount to be raised for state and county purposes is distributed among the several townships. The calculation that led to the result need not be recorded, nor need the word "apportionment" be used or any particular form adopted: Ibid.

344. The board may make the apportionment by directing a percentage to be raised upon the assessed valuation instead of fixing a definite sum: Hubbard v. Winsor, 15 M. 146.

345. In the absence of competent evidence showing what state tax was apportioned to the township, the objection that the tax on the face of the roll appeared to be excessive was not considered; there being no basis for an estimate: Yelverton v. Steele, 36 M. 62.

346. Where the record of the board of supervisors does not show the amount of the state tax to be apportioned among the several townships, and contains no data from which to determine whether the amount of state taxes apportioned to a particular township is just, a deed based on such apportionment is void: Boyce v. Sebring, 66 M. 210.

347. The apportionment required by H. S. § 1081 may be made at an adjourned meeting at the October session of the board of supervisors: Hubbard v. Winsor, 15 M. 146.

348. The fact that the clerk of the board of supervisors, in certifying the amount of taxes apportioned to be assessed upon the township property, followed the old law which had been repealed, and included only the state and county taxes and not the other taxes, as required by the new law, cannot impair the validity of the state and county taxes which were certified. The objection that the other taxes were not included is merely formal so far as it bears on the taxes certified, which, under H. S. § 1165, cannot be held illegal on such a ground: Pillsbury v. Auditor-General, 26 M. 245.

349. Charter requirement of apportionment among city wards is directory if data are fixed by equalization of the rolls; tax stands if correct amount is assessed by each supervisor: Fay v. Wood, 65 M. 890.

350. If the board of supervisors refuses to apportion and raise the amount due from the county to the state, when properly certified by the auditor-general (H. S. § 1080), that duty may be enforced by mandamus: Auditor-General v. Jackson Supervisors, 24 M. 237; Attorney-General v. St. Clair Supervisors, 30 M. 388.

351. Where the board had adjourned before being served with a writ requiring it to spread such amount upon the tax-rolls, the supreme court declined to compel the board to come together again in order that the amount might be raised by tax during that year; the state's alternative remedy of charging the amount over to the county and causing it to be collected another year was held preferable, as the state would not lose interest: Attorney-General v. St. Clair Supervisors, 30 M. 388.

V. TAX-ROLL AND WARRANT; EXTENSION.

(a) Tax-rolls.

352. A new roll cannot be made under the provisions of H. S. § 1039, by changing or altering the first collection roll delivered to the township treasurer or collector. That roll is required by H. S. § 1037 to be a copy of the original roll in the hands of the collector, and it must remain so. And it seems that no change can be made in the collection roll after its delivery to the collector, at least not unless the board of supervisors should direct it to be done to make the two rolls alike: Ferton v. Feller, 33 M. 199.

353. Questions based upon an unauthorized alteration of the roll by the treasurer after he had received it from the board of review cannot be considered in replevin for property seized for a tax that is prima facie regular and valid: Hill v. Graham, 72 M. — (Nov. 28, '88).

354. The assessment roll and tax-lists delivered to the county treasurer are to be copies of the corrected assessment rolls remaining in the hands of the respective supervisors: Seymour v. Peters, 67 M. 415.

355. The supervisor must extend upon the corrected assessment roll the taxes assessed by him; and the tax-deeds based upon taxes extended on the collection roll only are invalid: Ibid.

356. Not until after the assessment rolls have been equalized and corrected by the board of supervisors can the supervisors respectively extend the tax upon their respective rolls: Tweed v. Metcalf, 4 M. 579.

357. The certificate of the assessor (H. S. § 1025) and that of the chairman of the board of supervisors upon equalization (H. S. § 1029) form no part of the assessment roll, and therefore the tax-roll need not contain copies of such certificates: Ibid; Clark v. Axford, 5 M. 182; Bird v. Perkins, 33 M. 28; Fells v. Barbour, 58 M. 49; Boyce v. Sebring, 66 M. 210.

358. Nor does the insufficiency of the assessor's certificate as copied upon the tax-roll authorize a presumption that the original certificate was defective: Bird v. Perkins, 33 M. 28.

359. A tax is invalid if it appears only upon a roll to which it does not belong, and is omitted from a roll to which the law authorizing it expressly assigned it: Folkerts v. Power, 42 M. 288.

360. The requirement that the several taxes shall be levied in their proper columns is mandatory. If a sum to be raised is not levied in the proper column it will not be presumed to be levied at all: Case v. Dean, 16 M. 12.

361. Where a certain tax is not found in the column where the statute requires it to be placed there is no presumption that it forms a part of the aggregate in another column, though the aggregate in such other column appears to be an equal amount too large: Ibid.

362. And if a tax is wrongfully mingled with a tax in another column it will vitiate any sale for taxes in that column: Ibid.

363. The statute (C. L. 1857, § 2350) requiring the one-mill tax for township, library and school purposes to be placed in the column of school taxes is not so far directory as to permit the amount to be blended with that of state, county and township taxes: Ibid.

364. Moneys voted by a township for general highway purposes are properly levied in the column of highway taxes: Silsbee v. Stockle, 44 M. 561.

365. Where a county tax which the statute required to be levied with the town taxes was placed in a column by itself, headed "township tax," but separate from the column containing the other township taxes, held immaterial, as no one could be injured thereby: Wall v. Trumbull, 16 M. 228.

366. Drain taxes must be so spread upon the assessment roll as to identify the drain for which each is levied; otherwise a warrant for collection is bad: Dunning v. Calkins, 51 M. 556.

367. Each tax in the roll stands on its own basis. The legal taxes are not invalidated by illegal taxes in the same roll if distinguishable and separable from them: Clark v. Axford, 5 M. 182.

368. No illegality in a township tax can, before the land is actually sold, affect the state and county taxes that are separately charged on the roll: Conway v. Waverly, 15 M. 257.

369. State and county taxes are wholly distinct in their object, destination and amount from the other taxes; they stand upon their own necessity, and have no such natural or legal connection with the others as to be necessarily involved in the same fate: Pillsbury v. Auditor-General, 26 M. 245.

370. Taxes that are required to be placed upon the roll in separate columns must, unless the contrary is shown, be presumed to have been so arranged: Ibid.

371. It is not a valid objection to a tax-roll that the figures indicating the valuation of the property on the roll are not preceded by a dollar-mark; and especially not where the tax is properly carried out with the dollar-mark succeeding it: Bird v. Perkins, 83 M. 28.

372. There was no dollar-mark opposite the figures 11,000, indicating the valuation of certain property on the roll, and those figures were written in such a way as to be divided by a red line supposed to indicate the division between dollars and cents. Held, that as the valuations on the roll were obviously made up in even dollars, no attention being paid to the ruling, and as the amounts of taxes were properly carried out and between the right lines, it could not be claimed that the valuation was $110 and not $11,000: First National Bank v. St. Joseph, 46 M. 526.

373. Signature to warrant for collection of highway list held a sufficient signing of the list itself: Hogelskamp v. Weeks, 87 M. 422.

374. Delay beyond the statutory time in completing the roll and appending the warrant held not material where these acts were in fact performed before the time when the roll was required to be handed over to the treasurer for collection: Hubbard v. Winsor, 15 M. 146.

375. Under §§ 19, 47 and 84 of the tax law of 1882, the tax-roll is prima facie evidence of all prior tax proceedings, and of the facts stated therein, and of the assessability of the property therein assessed: Hood v. Judkins, 61 M. 575.

376. The tax-roll is only prima facie evidence of the legality and regularity of the assessment of the taxes therein (H. S. § 1051); hence, their validity may be contested in suits to recover them: Wattles v. Lapeer, 40 M. 624.

(b) The warrant; extension.

377. The supervisor's warrant attached to the tax-roll is not void because not running "in the name of the People of the State of Michigan:" Tweed v. Metcalf, 4 M. 579; Wissner v. Davenport, 5 M. 501.

378. A warrant for the collection of taxes is not fatally defective for being addressed to the treasurer of the township of —, if it is properly signed by a supervisor of a specified township, and is annexed to its tax-roll: First National Bank v. St. Joseph, 46 M. 526.

379. The warrant is void if it lacks signature: Tweed v. Metcalf, 4 M. 579.

380. The warrant must be signed and dated: Westbrook v. Miller, 64 M. 129.

381. Whether, where the warrant lacked signature, such warrant had been mutilated, was held to be a question of fact which the supreme court would not pass upon: Tweed v. Metcalf, 4 M. 579.

382. Commissioner's signature to attached warrant for collection held a sufficient signing of highway list: Hogelskamp v. Weeks, 37 M. 422.

383. An extension of time granted by a township board for the collection of taxes is not invalidated by the fact that, in the absence of the township clerk, a justice of the peace summoned to act as a member of the board was appointed to act as secretary: First National Bank v. St. Joseph, 46 M. 526.

384. Act 8 of 1885, extending the time for collection of taxes, held not to revive warrants that had expired before its passage: Phillips v. New Buffalo, 68 M. 217.

385. Where the charter (here, of Bay City) gives a city council power to extend a warrant for the collection of taxes, a resolution to extend is a valid extension without formal notification to the officer holding the warrant: Griswold v. Bay City Union School District, 24 M. 262.

386. Where a new tax warrant is issued to an officer after the old one has been extended and while it is still in force, the new one is nugatory. If either is valid, it is enough for his protection: Bird v. Perkins, 33 M. 28.

VI. COLLECTION AND ITS INCIDENTS.

(a) Tax-collectors.

387. Township and city collectors are not necessarily entitled to collect new taxes levied by the state. The statute may authorize the sheriff to collect liquor taxes, and when he does so he acts in behalf of the municipalities: Youngblood v. Sexton, 32 M. 406.

388. If the township treasurer files bond as collector before the time for delivering the roll to the treasurer though after the day required by H. S. § 1035, it is sufficient: Hubbard v. Winsor, 15 M. 146.

389. And if it appears that he actually filed his bond and received the tax-roll, his acts as de facto collector are valid, and cannot be attacked collaterally for failure to file such bond in due season: Stockle v. Silsbee, 41 M. 615.

390. The sureties on a sheriff's official bond held not liable for his defaults as collector of liquor taxes, against which H. S. § 1062 provides independent security: White v. East Saginaw, 43 M. 567.

391. The statement of the collector under oath of the moneys received by him as collector being required for the purpose of securing an accurate accounting by him, and having no connection with the return of lands for delinquent taxes, the failure to make it will not invalidate a tax sale: Tweed v. Metcalf, 4 M. 579.

392. The collector's authority to collect is not derived from the roll but from the warrant; if that is fair upon its face he has the power and is protected by it; if not, it affords him no protection: Ibid.

393. If his warrant is fair on its face he is protected though there is an excess in the amount of a tax that the supervisor had a right to assess: Byles v. Genung, 52 M. 504.

394. Warrant for collection of liquor tax protects collector if fair on its face: Wood v. Thomas, 38 M. 686.

395. A tax assessment is in the nature of a judgment and cannot be assailed for fraud or irregularity in a suit against an officer who enforces it under process which on its face is valid: Moss v. Cummings, 44 M. 359.

396. A village marshal who collects a tax is protected against any illegalities but his own by a roll and warrant fair on their face; and the fact that he was a member of the village board when the tax was imposed does not charge him with notice of illegalities: Bird v. Perkins, 33 M. 28.

397. Nor does he become a trespasser ab initio by keeping a horse levied on a little longer than was necessary for giving notice and making sale: Ibid.

398. A warrant fair on its face protects a tax-collector to the extent of preventing liability as trespasser for wrongful taking thereunder; but he may be sued in replevin: Le Roy v. East Saginaw R. Co., 18 M. 233.

399. If the warrant is void on its face the amount of the property levied on for the tax may be recovered in trespass against the collector: Smith v. First National Bank, 17 M. 479.

400. Or in trover: Hagenbuch v. Howard, 34 M. 1.

401. Where a tax-warrant is void on its face, it being issued under and referring expressly to a special statute which is unconstitutional, an officer who executes it and obtains money under it is liable in an action to recover back the money, although he has already paid it over to the treasury; no relationship of principal and agent can exist under a law that is null: First National Bank v. Watkins, 21 M. 483.

402. The tax-collector is not at liberty to disregard private interests in collecting taxes; he is by implication forbidden to seize the property of others than those whom the law holds liable and whose property may be levied on, and if he acts otherwise and causes special injury he is not protected by his commission: Raynsford v. Phelps, 43 M. 342.

403. A tax-collector by whose false return nulla bona a tax became established as a lien on the land was held liable in an action on the case brought by a mortgagee of the land who had to redeem from the tax-sale: Ibid.

404. But if the tax was void no wrong was done and no recovery can be had: Raynsford v. Phelps, 49 M. 315.

As to fees of tax-collectors, see OFFICERS, §§ 315-320.

As to warrant against township treasurer for not paying over taxes collected, see OFFICERS, §§ 102-106.

(b) Interest and penalties.

405. No interest can be charged upon a tax that has never been levied and is not in default: Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. People, 46 M. 193.

406. A penalty of ten per cent. added to taxes remaining unpaid up to a certain period is not excessive, and may be lawfully imposed by statute: Lacey v. Davis, 4 M. 140.

407. The imposition, under the name of interest, of heavy penalties for non-payment of taxes, criticised: Silsbee v. Stockle, 44 M. 561, 571.

Presumption against penalty's having been discharged, see supra, § 83.

408. The provision of the tax law of 1869 which made thirty per cent. the rate of interest on delinquent taxes does not apply retrospectively so as to increase the rate upon taxes assessed before the act took effect: Smith v. Auditor-General, 20 M. 398.

409. C. L. 1871, § 1036, requiring thirty per cent. interest on taxes not paid within a certain time after their assessment, was valid; and a tax-title including such interest was held good: Drennan v. Herzog, 56 M. 467.

410. The amount formerly required by C. L. 1871, § 1059, to be paid into the state treasury on redemption from tax sales, was not in the nature of interest, though called so, but was rather a penalty or an exaction for the privilege of redeeming, which the state could release, as the only party interested in enforcing it: Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Saginaw County Treasurer, 32 M. 260.

(c) Liens for taxes.

411. No express provision making a tax upon land a lien thereon has ever been necessary under our system, so far as concerns the rights of the state or public; this being the direct and necessary result of the system itself: Harrington v. Hilliard, 27 M. 271.

412. State, county and township taxes upon real estate become a lien upon the land on the first from the first Monday in December of the year in which they are assessed, and not before. (So held in 1873; under the tax laws of 1882 and 1885 taxes become a lien upon lands on the first day of December): Ibid.

413. Act 228 of 1875, postponing all liens to the lien of the liquor tax, did not apply to liens created before the statute: Finn v. Hayes, 37 M. 63.

414. Taxes are not a lien upon personal property until levy is made thereon; so held, although the Detroit charter of 1869, ch. 5, § 22, subd. 64, provides that city taxes shall be liens upon the property assessed until paid: Lyon v. Guthard, 52 M. 271.

415. A lien for taxes on the interest acquired under a certificate of purchase of state swamp lands is not released by a deed to the vendor from the state: Robertson v. State Land Office Commissioner, 44 M. 274.

416. Taxes upon mortgaged lands are as much a lien upon the mortgage interest as upon the equity of redemption: Horton v. Ingersoll, 13 M. 409.

As to lien for taxes paid, see infra, §§ 489-491.

As to lien of defeated owner of tax-title for amount paid, see infra, §§ 760-766.

(d) Payment.

1. In general.

Payment or non-payment, as showing character of possession, etc., see EVIDENCE, §§ 86, 804; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, §§ 115, 118-121; SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE, § 71.

417. Whose duty to pay; who liable. Where lands are assessed to a resident owner or occupant, it is the duty of the person assessed to pay. If unoccupied, or assessed as non-resident, the owner owes the duty. The obligation to the state is fixed by the assessment, and if that depends upon possession it must be a possession then or previously existing: Blackwood v. Van Vleet, 30 M. 118.

418. One in possession of land claiming it as his own is bound to pay the taxes imposed thereon and becoming due during such possession: Dubois v. Campau, 24 M. 860; Lacey v. Davis, 4 M. 140; Tweed v. Metcalf, 4 M. 579.

419. It is the duty of any person owning lands to pay all taxes regularly assessed thereon: Robbins v. Barron, 32 M. 36.

420. The duty to pay taxes on land springs from ownership, and not from the relation subsisting between two or more owners: Cooley v. Waterman, 16 M. 366.

421. The burden is cast upon those who hold land in common to pay the taxes assessed against it: Page v. Webster, 8 M. 263. But the duty of each is limited to paying his share: Ibid.; People v. Detroit Treasurer, 8 M. 14; Conn. Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Bulte, 45 M. 113.

422. As between each other, it is the duty of a tenant in common having the possession and use of the whole land to pay the taxes. But if not in possession he owes no duty to the others to pay their shares: Dubois v. Campau, 24 M. 860.

423. The estate of a deceased partner is liable for its proportionate share of the taxes upon the firm's real estate until the business is wound up; and on the administrator's accounting his payment of such share is allowed in his favor: Loomis v. Armstrong, 63 M. 355.

424. One who purchases lands after the first Monday in May and before the first Monday in December does not become personally liable for the tax assessed thereon that year, although his personal property is subject to seizure during the life of the warrant: Raynsford v. Phelps, 43 M. 342.

425. The mere taking of possession by one person with claim of title before a tax is actually levied is not inconsistent with the existence of such a state of facts as would impose on some other person (as between the two) the duty of paying the tax: Blackwood v. Van Vleet, 30 M. 118.

426. The provision in H. S. § 1041 making a tax a charge against the person owning the land on the first Monday of May is in favor of the public only; it creates no liability against him in favor of an owner purchasing after that date, and does not enable the latter to compel him to pay it. And as between the grantor and grantee in a warranty deed, the latter is bound to pay the taxes for the current year where the conveyance is prior to the first Monday (under the present statute, the first day) in December, and upon the former where the conveyance is subsequent: Harrington v. Hilliard, 27 M. 271.

427. A vendee in possession whose contract binds him to pay taxes is legally and equitably bound to pay them. The circumstances of a particular case considered in determining vendee's liability to reimburse vendor's grantee: Day v. Cole, 65 M. 129.

428. One who goes into possession under an arrangement with an executory vendee obligated to pay taxes assumes the latter's obligation: Bertram v. Cook, 32 M. 518.

As to whether a particular contract of sale of land required vendee to pay taxes, see VENDORS, § 26.

Failure of vendee to pay, see SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE, §§ 125, 188.

429. Where land is successively mortgaged, neither mortgagee owes any duty to the other or to the mortgager to pay the taxes; as between the parties the primary duty is upon the mortgager, and if he makes default either mortgagee may pay: Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Bulte, 45 M. 113.

430. It is a mortgager's duty to pay taxes while he owns the property, and one who acquires his interest is bound to discharge the unpaid taxes standing against such property: Fells v. Barbour, 58 M. 49.

431. The lessee of land for mining purposes was held liable under the agreement in his lease to pay taxes on the land and improvements as well as upon the ore: Gribben v. Atkinson, 64 M. 651.

432. Who may pay. A mortgagee can pay the taxes to protect his interest and may have the amount added to his claim: Payne v. Avery, 21 M. 524; Vaughn v. Nims, 36 M. 297; Conn. Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Bulte, 45 M. 113; Walton v. Hollywood, 47 M. 385.

433. But a mortgagee or other person having a lien on land has no right to intervene to pay a tax before it has been returned unpaid: Pond v. Drake, 50 M. 302.

434. One who had taken conveyances of government lands in his own name by way of security, agreeing in writing to sell them to one who had requested him so to take them, was allowed to recover from the vendee the amount of taxes paid by himself thereon for his own protection, even though there was doubt as to the legality of such taxes (see ASSUMPSIT, §§ 93, 94; CONTRACTS, § 149): Congdon v. Preston, 49 M. 204.

435. Apportioning. A tenant in common of land may pay his proportion of tax, and thus relieve his interest from the lien: Page v. Webster, 8 M. 263. So, under the charter of Detroit (L. 1857), an owner of a part interest, whether separately assessed or not, may pay his share to the collector before sale: People v. Detroit Treasurer, 8 M. 14.

436. Where lands have been assessed in one body and at one sum, a particular share of the whole tax cannot be apportioned arbitrarily to a specific parcel and payment be received therefor and the rest returned unpaid: and a tax-title originating in such proceedings is invalid: Wyman v. Baer, 46 M. 418.

437. Sec. 36 of the tax-law of 1848 (L. 1848, p. 72) provided that the township treasurer, while the roll remained in his hand, should "receive the tax" or any one of the several taxes on a part of every lot or parcel of land, or an undivided share or interest which is clearly defined by the person paying the tax, or any other interest which the tax-payer will clearly define;" and § 51 (p. 77) of the same law provided that after the delinquent lands were returned "the tax shall be received on any interest in any parcel of land the same as as if paid to the township treasurer under § 36." Held, that the word "interest," as employed in § 51, was designed to cover not merely an undivided interest in the whole of the parcel taxed, but also any exclusive interest in any portion of such parcel, and that the county treasurer and auditor-general had the same power to receive the tax upon any portion of the parcel assessed as the township treasurer had before return: Wright v. Dunham, 13 M. 414.

438. As to the provisions of the tax-law of 1853 (C. L. 1857, §§ 831, 851, 878), authorizing payment of the tax on any portion of a description which the tax-payer should clearly define, or a redemption of any such portion after sale, see Amberg v. Rogers, 9 M. 832.

439. Payment after return. The right to make payment after the tax has been returned delinquent is the same as before, though payment is made to a different officer: Drennan v. Beierlein, 49 M. 272. Payment may then be made to the county treasurer or to the auditor-general: Houghton County v. Auditor-General, 36 M. 271.

440. What receivable in payment for taxes. Taxes are due to the public and not to the collector, and claims against him are not a legal tender for or offset against taxes; therefore a collector cannot receive in payment of taxes a draft drawn on him by a creditor and accepted by himself: Elliott v. Miller, 8 M. 132.

441. A township treasurer cannot receive for school taxes anything which the law has not authorized to be so received; and where he accepted local orders instead of money, he was obliged to make good the amount: Jones v. Wright, 34 M. 371.

That dealer's note is not receivable in payment of liquor tax, see INTOXICATING LIQUORS, § 104.

442. What constitutes payment or satisfaction. Where a town treasurer has received from a tax-payer worthless highway orders in part payment of his taxes (the rest being paid in cash), receipting the taxes and returning them as paid, and in his settlement with the township board is allowed the amount thereof, the taxes are thereby paid; and any suit which is brought for the amount of the orders must be a private controversy between the treasurer and the party who paid them to him and not a township action: Staley v. Columbus, 36 M. 88.

443. Payment over by a city treasurer. in advance of collection, of state and county taxes to the county treasurer, is not a satisfaction of the tax, and the party assessed is still liable: Pontiac v. Azford, 49 M. 69.

444. A levy upon personalty for tax assessed on land is prima facie a satisfaction of the tax and presumptively removes a cloud from the title to such land, so that a bill will no longer lie to remove such cloud: Henry v. Gregory, 29 M. 68.

445. A purchase by a second mortgagee at a tax sale operates as a payment of the tax at the option of the first mortgagee, but the latter must repay the cost if he adopts the payment: Conn. Mut. Ins. L. Co. v. Bulle, 45 M. 118.

446. So far as a mortgagee or his assigns is concerned, the purchase, by one who has acquired by virtue of an execution sale the mortgager's interest, of bids under sales made for taxes, operates as a payment of the taxes: Fells v. Barbour, 58 M. 49.

447. But a mortgager cannot be compelled against his will to treat as a payment of the taxes the purchase by an agent of the mortgagee of the land at a sale made thereof for such taxes: Maxfield v. Willey, 46 M. 252.

448. A purchase of a tax-title by one who orally agrees to hold it for the vendee in a land contract cannot be considered as a payment by such vendee of the taxes for the vendor's benefit: Jones v. Wells, 81 M. 170.

Collection of tax out of tenant's property held a sufficient payment to meet requirements of lease, see LANDLORD, ETC., § 144.

449. Evidence of payment. The collector's receipt (H. S. § 1063) for taxes is prima facie evidence of payment even in suits between third persons: Johnstone v. Scott, 11 M. 232. Payment may also be proved by parol, whether a receipt was given or not: Hammond v. Hannin, 21 M. 374.

450. Application of payment. Where a payment is expressly made to satisfy a particular assessment, the collector, if he receives it, must apply the money to the purpose specified and no other: Fuller v. Grand Rapids, 40 M. 395.

2. Recovery back of payment; duress; protest.

Recovery under common counts of tax paid by vendee for vendor, see PLEADINGS, § 117.

451. An illegal tax, involuntarily paid under protest, or under stress of existing process, may be recovered back in an action for money had and received against the collecting officer or the municipality for which the collection was made: First National Bank v. Watkins, 21 M. 488; Nickodemus v. East Saginaw, 25 M. 456; Henry v. Gregory, 29 M. 68; Gebhart v. East Saginaw, 40 M. 386; Grand Rapids v. Blakely, 40 M. 367; Loudon v. East Saginaw, 41 M. 18; Moss v. Cummings, 44 M. 359; Daniels v. Watertown, 55 M. 376; Fletcher v. Alcona, 71 M. -- (Oct. 19, '88).

452. The statutory provision that suits to recover taxes paid under protest must be brought within thirty days after payment does not apply where the money paid is not upon any assessment made against plaintiff or his property: Babcock v. Beaver Creek, 65 M. 479.

453. Where an assessment for local improvement has been illegally exacted by the marshal under color of city authority, and has been paid by him to the city, the latter cannot escape liability by reason of the special object of the tax: Grand Rapids v. Blakely, 40 M. 367.

454. A township is liable for all moneys collected for taxes by its treasurer which are to be retained in its treasury, including even school and highway taxes that have been paid out before suit begun to recover back such moneys; and township orders received for collection are to be treated as money: Byles v. Golden, 52 M. 612.

455. Nor can a township escape liability for its treasurer's illegal action because the state and county taxes have been paid over to county: Babcock v. Beaver Creek, 65 M. 479.

That a township cannot be sued to recover back the amount of drain taxes illegally levied and paid to its treasurer, see DRAINS, § 97.

456. An action against a city to recover back money involuntarily paid lies although the warrant upon the assessment roll had expired when the payment was made and had been irregularly extended by the common council: Nickodemus v. East Saginaw, 25 M. 456.

457. In an action against the city of East Saginaw to recover back an assessment paid under protest, it was held that, in view of the conditions imposed by the charter on refunding and re-assessments, plaintiff should before suit and without unreasonable delay have laid his objections in an intelligible form before the council and made demand so as to put that body in the wrong by any refusal to refund: Louden v. East Saginaw, 41 M. 18.

458. Before suing the city of Lansing to recover a tax paid under protest a verified claim for refunding should be presented to the council: Mead v. Lansing, 56 M. 601.

459. One is precluded from seeking to recover back the amount of a tax which, as a member of the board of supervisors, he voted to impose without objecting to its levy: Wood v. Norwood, 52 M. 82.

460. One whose assessment has been raised without notice by the board of review, and who has paid, under protest, the tax as increased, can recover the excess in an action against the city: Avery v. East Saginaw, 44 M. 587.

461. Where an insolvent firm has assigned its stock for the benefit of creditors, a personal tax against the firm cannot be satisfied from the stock in the hands of the assignee upon any other terms than any other claim; and if the assignee pays the tax under protest in order to avoid seizure of the stock, he can bring suit against the officer collecting it to recover it back, so long as it remains in the officer's hands: Lyon v. Guthard, 52 M. 271.

462. In an action to recover a city tax compulsorily paid, payment by the city marshal to the city treasurer of the money collected by him is presumed: Grand Rapids v. Blakely, 40 M. 367.

463. A township's liability to refund the amount of an illegal tax collected by the township treasurer is fixed by proof that he took the money in his official capacity: Daniels v. Watertown, 55 M. 376.

464. When the assessment of a particular class of property is clearly identified and separable, the question of the liability of such property to the assessment can be raised in an action to recover back the amount of the tax after paying it under protest: Herrick v. Big Rapids, 53 M. 554.

465. In a suit to recover the amount paid under protest of a tax properly levied but excessive, the excess only will be refunded:

Lake Superior Ship Canal Co. v. Thompson, 56 M. 493.

466. Where one is assessed for the whole of a lot whereof he has previously conveyed part, he is only entitled, in a suit to recover back the tax paid under protest, to have such part refunded as is proportioned to the value of what he no longer owns: Mead v. Lansing, 56 M. 601.

467. A payment made on the demand of an officer under legal process is not voluntary although made before any levy; a party is not bound to await an arrest or seizure, but may assume that the officer will execute the process on which he makes demand: Atwell v. Zeluff, 26 M. 118.

468. A payment to a public officer in compliance with a demand, accompanied by a threat of immediate and effectual enforcement, is in no sense a voluntary payment: First National Bank v. Watkins, 21 M. 483.

469. Payment under pressure of a threatened levy is not voluntary: Louden v. East Saginaw, 41 M. 18.

470. Payment of a personal tax is not voluntary when made under protest and for the purpose of avoiding the immediate seizure of goods to satisfy it: Lyon v. Guthard, 52 M. 271.

471. A demand of payment by an officer having a warrant involves an implication that payment will be enforced if not made; and to render the payment involuntary an actual levy or proof that a levy could be made on tangible property is not required: Babcock v. Beaver Creek, 64 M. 601.

472. Where payment of a tax is made in consequence of a threat to enforce it, it must be considered voluntary if no seizure of goods or of the person has been made or threatened or authorized, and if the collecting officer has no authority to compel payment otherwise than by a sale of the land, which could injure no one: Detroit v. Martin, 84 M. 170.

473. A purchaser from one whose land has been irregularly assessed is not obliged to pay the tax on account of his vendor, nor is he personally liable to seizure of his goods for failure to pay; therefore if he pays before the amount becomes a lien on the land the payment must be considered voluntary: Louden v. East Saginaw, 41 M. 18.

474. A payment of land taxes in December, under the general tax law of 1882, is voluntary: Peninsula Iron Co. v. Crystal Falls, 60 M. 79.

475. Where A.'s personal property had been seized by the township treasurer and advertised for sale for a tax on lands which were not listed to nor owned by A., who then paid the tax under oral protest, held, that the payment was involuntary, and was recoverable by A. although the amount paid for state and county taxes had been paid over to the county: Babcock v. Beaver Creek, 65 M. 479.

476. Payment of a tax assessed on personalty under act 153 of 1885 was made under protest prior to Jan. 1, 1886, without any demand therefor or actual or threatened levy under § 81 of said act. Held voluntary and not recoverable: Baker v. Big Rapids, 65 M. 76.

477. To prevent threatened sale of his land which had been assessed — under a charter provision afterwards declared unconstitutional — for a street opening, the owner made payment under protest. Held, that sale would not have clouded the title, and that the payment was voluntary and not recoverable back: Detroit v. Martin, 84 M. 170.

478. The general tax law (H. S. p. 1277, sec. 42), in providing for written protest upon payment of a tax, refers only to taxes on real property: Lyon v. Guthard, 52 M. 271.

479. No protest is necessary where the entire exaction is illegal on its face and payment is enforced by process: First National Bank v. Watkins, 21 M. 483.

480. No protest is necessary to authorize an action to recover money paid on the illegal demand of an officer under a legal process; but where payment is made without protest, no interest can be claimed until demand is made or suit brought: Atwell v. Zeluff, 26 M. 118; Detroit v. Martin, 84 M. 170.

481. Where an illegal tax is paid under stress of process, the payment is involuntary, and no specific protest is required: Cox v. Welcher, 68 M. 263.

482. While no technicality of averment is required in a protest against the payment of taxes, there should be something to point out the true cause of complaint: Peninsula Iron Co. v. Crystal Falls, 60 M. 79.

483. Under a statute providing that a person may, under protest, pay taxes in advance of the time they can be enforced, the protest must be specific as to reasons of illegality, or the payment cannot be recovered: Cox v. Welcher, 68 M. 263.

484. A protest on payment of taxes alleging that they are illegal for certain reasons stated merely determines the time from which the taxes may be recovered, and when the limitation of the right to bring the action begins to run for the causes mentioned therein. It does not make the payment involuntary when there has been no effort to collect or demand for payment made; and there can be no recovery where the reason assigned in the protest for the illegality of the tax is not sustained by the evidence: White v. Millbrook, 60 M. 532.

485. A protest "on the ground that the lands are unequally and unjustly assessed, and that the township and highway taxes are illegal and unjust," is too general to be the foundation of an action to recover taxes paid: Peninsula Iron Co. v. Crystal Falls, 60 M. 79.

486. Where the protest was not under the statute, but was on a payment claimed to have been involuntary, and therefore, if not due, liable to be demanded back, the fact that the plaintiff set up that the tax was bad because laid upon property largely in excess of what he owned does not prevent his relying on any other ground: Babcock v. Beaver Creek, 64 M. 601.

487. In an action to recover back a tax payment made under protest which would have been voluntary and not recoverable except by force of the protest, the tax must be shown to be invalid for the reason specified in the protest: Peninsula Iron Co. v. Crystal Falls, 60 M. 510.

488. A notice of protest after service thereof has been shown is provable by copy without notice to produce the original or proof of loss thereof: Michigan Land, etc. Co. v. Republic, 65 M. 628.

3. Lien for taxes paid.

489. A mortgagee's lien for taxes paid to protect his mortgage is not independent of the latter, but falls when that is satisfied or foreclosed: Vincent v. Moore, 51 M. 618.

490. Whether H. S. § 1137, providing that any person having a lien upon lands returned for non-payment of taxes may pay the taxes thereon and have an additional lien therefor, applies to mortgagees who became such after the taxes had already been returned, quere: Pond v. Drake, 50 M. 302.

491. Said H. S. § 1137 makes no provision concerning liens created by redemption certificates; and in a particular case such a certificate obtained by a mortgagee was held to give him no equities as against a purchaser from the mortgagor: Ibid.

(e) Seizure for tax; warrant and return.

That replevin will not, as a rule, lie for property seized, see REPLEVIN, §§ 79-87.

492. Where lands are assessed as non-resident, the collector has no power to levy upon any property for the tax: Tweed v. Metcalf, 4 M. 579.

493. S. L. 1853, p. 140, § 40, authorizing levy of tax by distress and sale of goods in possession of, even though not owned by, person on whom tax was imposed, held valid, though it allowed the owner no redress but an action against him for whose tax seizure was made: Sears v. Cottrell, 5 M. 251.

494. The auditor-general's warrant to a sheriff to collect a railroad company's debt for specific taxes is in the nature of an execution and cannot be levied upon property that the company has conveyed away to third persons; and such levy will be enjoined. Any right based on a lien for the taxes in such case must be worked out in suit in chancery by the state against the company and its grantees: Hackley v. Mack, 60 M. 591.

495. Levy for a specific tax cannot be made upon the track or road-bed of a railway company; if any levy can be made upon the corporate property otherwise than goods and chattels, it must be on the franchise of earning tolls, as provided by the corporate laws: Ibid.

496. Goods assigned for the benefit of creditors are exempt from levy to satisfy a personal tax during the ten days allowed to the assignees for filing their bond: Lyon v. Harris, 52 M. 271.

497. A tax-collector is bound to take notice of a general statute which exempts corporations from any except specific taxes; and if he levies upon the property of a corporation for taxes, it may be replevied from him: Le Roy v. East Saginaw C. R. Co., 18 M. 233.

498. Holding live animals levied on a little longer than may be actually necessary before selling will not make the collector a trespasser ab initio. The reasonable expenses of keeping the animals while lawfully held for sale are proper charges to be collected with the tax: Bird v. Perkins, 38 M. 28.

499. Warrant for collection of liquor tax by distress is sufficient if it contains the recitals required by act 228 of 1875, § 8: Wood v. Thomas, 38 M. 686.

500. Return of levy for non-payment of liquor tax need not set forth demand, which is provable by parol and is presumed in absence of evidence to the contrary: Ibid.

501. In replevin for property seized for taxes, where plaintiffs do not claim that the tax had been paid by them or by any one for them, the warrant of the county treasurer under § 47 of the act of 1882 is admissible as evidence without a showing that a return had been made by the township treasurer stating that the taxes upon personal property remain unpaid, as required by § 44: Hood v. Judkins, 61 M. 575.

(f) Actions for unpaid taxes.

502. A township cannot sue for unpaid taxes except in the case provided for by H. S. § 1049, where taxes on personalty have been returned unpaid for want of property to levy on: Staley v. Columbus, 86 M. 88.

503. The treasurer's warrant for collection must be exhausted before suit: McCallum v. Bethany, 42 M. 457.

504. In the absence of express provision a city cannot sue for an unpaid tax on personalty if the city charter gives a specific remedy by process from the receiver and by levy on goods within the city: Detroit v. Jepp, 52 M. 458.

505. A city's right of action against a party assessed for state and county taxes is not defeated by its treasurer's having paid over the amount, in advance of collection, to the county treasurer in making his return to the latter: Pontiac v. Axford, 49 M. 69.

506. H. S. § 1051 makes a tax-roll prima facie evidence only, not conclusive evidence, of the legality and regularity of the assessments; hence their validity may be contested in suits to collect them: Wattles v. Lapeer, 40 M. 624.

(g) Enjoining collection.

1. Jurisdiction; when injunction granted.

507. The tax law of 1885, § 107, provides that "no injunction shall issue to stay the proceedings for the assessment or collection of taxes under this act." Held, that this provision, if valid at all, does not apply to proceedings for sale for taxes assessed before the act took effect: Auditor-General v. Iosco Circuit Judge, 58 M. 845.

508. Said provision is constitutional; § 42 of the act provides a sufficient remedy in permitting the tax to be paid under protest and recovered by action if illegally assessed. But asking an injunction does not preclude other relief; e. g., declaring the tax illegal: Eddy v. Lee, 72 M. — (Nov. 28, '88).

509. Equity has jurisdiction (but see supra, § 508) to restrain the collection of a tax upon land which constitutes an apparent lien on the land and might result in a sale of it by a deed that would be prima facie evidence of title: Palmer v. Rich, 12 M. 414; Schofield v. Lansing, 17 M. 437; Bristol v. Johnson, 84 M. 123; Thomas v. Gain, 85 M. 155; Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Marquette, 85 M. 504; Folkerts v. Power, 42 M. 293.

510. So held, enjoining taxes for drains illegally laid out, etc.: Palmer v. Rich, 12 M. 414; Kinyon v. Duchene, 21 M. 498; Frost v. Leatherman, 55 M. 83.

511. So held as to assessments for local improvements in cities, without reference to the question whether there was or was not personalty from which collection might be made: Schofield v. Lansing, 17 M. 437; Hoyt v. East Saginaw, 19 M. 89.

512. Jurisdiction to enjoin sale for an illegal tax depends not on the amount of the tax, but on the value of the land affected: Fuller v. Grand Rapids, 40 M. 395.

513. Equity will not enjoin the collection of a tax on land that has been prima facie satisfied by a levy upon personalty, for presumptively such a levy removes the cloud caused by the tax: Henry v. Gregory, 29 M. 68.

514. Equity has no jurisdiction to restrain the collection of a tax from goods and chattels: Ibid.; Thomas v. Gain, 85 M. 155. In the absence, at least, of any showing that the property possessed any peculiar value not capable of compensation in damages the remedy at law is ample: Henry v. Gregory, 29 M. 68.

515. So the court refused to enjoin the collection from personalty of an assessment for paving a street: Williams v. Detroit, 2 M. 560.

516. Equity has no jurisdiction to restrain the collection of a mere personal tax on the ground of illegality alone: Youngblood v. Sexton, 82 M. 406.

517. Where a tax is on persons in respect of their business, an allegation in a bill to restrain its collection that the enforcement of the tax will work irreparable injury to complainants does not confer jurisdiction, as irreparable injury is not to be predicated of the mere enforcement of a money demand: Ibid.

518. Where personal property sufficient in amount has been levied upon to satisfy a tax on bank stocks that was claimed to be illegal and void, an injunction against further proceedings to collect the tax or enforce the levy was refused; complainant's remedy at law by trover for the value of the goods seized or by an action to recover back the tax paid under protest being ample. And a charge in the bill that the supervisor acted fraudulently in making and in refusing to correct the assessment will not confer jurisdiction in such a case: Hagenbuch v. Howard, 34 M. 1.

519. Where complainant's personal property had been assessed in the wrong township, notwithstanding his effort to secure a proper assessment, an injunction to restrain collection was refused, the remedy at law being ample: Mears v. Howarth, 34 M. 19.

520. Although a tax upon personal property is no ground for equitable interference, yet relief may be given against such a tax where jurisdiction has been obtained to restrain collection of the tax as charged against land: Folkerts v. Power, 42 M. 283.

521. Where, under the statute, a bank is not liable at all to taxation on its personalty, and a levy is made in such a way as directly to interfere with its business, the enforcement of the tax may be restrained by injunction: Lenawee County Savings Bank v. Adrian, 66 M. 273.

522. The sale for school taxes of lands unlawfully included within the district was enjoined: Simpkins v. Ward, 45 M. 559.

523. The collection of a tax upon land was enjoined where the opportunity to ascertain the amount of the assessment, and to be heard as to its fairness, had been withheld under circumstances that operated as a legal fraud: Woodman v. Auditor-General, 52 M. 28.

524. If a supervisor fraudulently assess the property of an individual above its value, and relatively above the other assessments on his roll, the party aggrieved may have an injunction to restrain the collection of the excessive tax: Merrill v. Auditor-General, 24 M. 170.

525. Where lands belonging to a non-resident were assessed at three times their value, and disproportionately with the lands of residents, a sale for taxes will be restrained: Auditor-General v. Iosco Circuit Judge, 58 M. 345.

526. The naked charge that the lands of non-resident complainants are assessed higher relatively than the lands of residents is not alone sufficient to afford a ground for equitable interference: Pillsbury v. Auditor-General, 26 M. 245.

527. The collection of a tax will not be enjoined where the sole ground of complaint is that the statute annexing the lands taxed to the municipality which levied the taxes was unconstitutional; if the law was valid the tax was good, and if void the invalidity was patent and could not cloud title: Curtis v. East Saginaw, 35 M. 508.

528. The collection of taxes on lands will not be enjoined on the ground of mistaken and erroneous description where the owner himself furnished the description to the assessor: Hubbard v. Winsor, 15 M. 146.

529. An injunction against a sale for taxes was refused when asked merely on the ground that a proper assessment roll was not ready for review on the third Monday of May as required by law, the roll used being the roll of the year before with alterations penciled by the supervisor, but a proper roll being made out later and no excessive valuation or unauthorized levy being charged: Albany & Boston Mining Co. v. Auditor-General, 37 M. 391.

530. The sale of lands for delinquent taxes will not be enjoined merely for the neglect of a municipal board of review to attach their certificate to the tax-roll, and of the chairman of the board of supervisors to sign the certificate of equalization: Burt v. Auditor-General, 39 M. 126.

531. A bill will not lie to set aside taxes or a tax-sale on the ground that the supervisor's certificate to the assessment roll did not comply with the statute, because such an irregularity would not injure complainant, and his case would therefore be without equity: Sinclair v. Learned, 51 M. 335.

532. An injunction to restrain collection of assessments for repaving is unnecessary where the city has admitted the invalidity of such assessments and where a statute has been passed requiring re-assessment: Byram v. Detroit, 50 M. 56.

As to effect of petitioning for improvement, or of acquiescence or laches in preventing injunction against collection of assessment, see CITIES, ETC., §§ 235-240; DRAINS, §§ 72-74, 102.

2. Parties.

533. An individual has no right as a tax payer, either in his own name or on behalf of himself and the other tax-payers, to file a bill to enjoin proceedings in advance of the actual levy of a tax. He cannot seek redress until his own tax can be ascertained, and he cannot then proceed in equity except to protect his individual interests from injuries not remediable otherwise: Miller v. Grandy, 13 M. 540.

534. One who has conveyed land in trust to secure a debt is still the owner in fee and may seek relief against an illegal tax: Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Auditor-General, 41 M. 635.

535. An old school district may maintain a bill to enjoin the assessment and collection of a tax to satisfy the amount apportioned as its share of a valuation of school property on the formation of a new district where the proceedings were taken at a meeting held without notice: Everett School District v. Wilcox School District, 63 M. 51.

536. Several complainants cannot join in a bill to restrain the collection of a personal tax assessed against them separately in respect to the business in which each is individually engaged (so held of the tax on liquor dealers): Youngblood v. Sexton, 82 M. 406.

537. Parties owning distinct parcels of land fronting upon a street may join in a bill to restrain collection of a tax upon their several parcels for grading the street, if the illegality of the tax proceedings or other common cause is alleged as the ground of relief: Scofield v. Lansing, 17 M. 437.

538. Individual tax-payers of a township may join in seeking to have collection of an illegal tax on land restrained: Bristol v. Johnson, 84 M. 128.

539. Where the objection to an assessment is that each parcel of land separately owned was assessed an aliquot part of a general charge instead of for the particular benefits conferred upon it, it seems that the different owners cannot, their interests being hostile, join in a bill to restrain collection: Brunner v. Bay City, 46 M. 236.

540. Parties complaining of tax proceedings that do not affect all alike must sue severally or not at all; so, where drain charges have become individual assessments on the roll for sale, owners of lands severally affected cannot join in a bill to set them aside: Barker v. Vernon, 68 M. 516.

541. A husband may properly join with his wife in a bill to restrain the collection of an illegal tax upon lands belonging to her but occupied as a home by both: Henry v. Gregory, 29 M. 63.

542. Counties and townships are necessary parties to a bill to vacate taxes assessed, where a decree would make it necessary to charge the taxes back to the county or to spread them upon the township's land: Adams v. Auditor-General, 43 M. 458.

543. To a bill to enjoin or vacate a drain-tax, the township should not be made a defendant: Emerson v. Walker, 63 M. 483; Barker v. Vernon, 68 M. 516.

544. The school district is a necessary defendant to a bill to restrain the collection of a school-tax irregularly assessed; the district was allowed to be added as a formal party before entering final decree when tax was found to be absolutely illegal: Folkerts v. Power, 42 M. 288.

545. The city is a necessary defendant to a bill to enjoin the collection of a sewer tax; but where this objection was not seasonably made to a bill filed against the city marshal alone, it was obviated by amendment at the hearing: Thomas v. Gain, 35 M. 155.

546. After drain taxes are returned to the office of the auditor-general he is a necessary party to a bill to set them aside or to restrain a sale for their collection. Leave granted on appeal to add him by amending in court below. The contractors for making the drains held not necessary parties: Palmer v. Rich, 12 M. 414.

547. The township treasurer and drain commissioner are proper defendants to a bill to vacate a township drain-tax, even though the tax has been returned as unpaid to the county treasurer: Frost v. Leatherman, 55 M. 33.

548. To a bill against a city to enjoin enforcement of a paving tax the contractor for the paving was held not a necessary defendant: Wilkins v. Detroit, 46 M. 120.

3. Pleading and practice.

549. A bill by a railroad company, seeking to have the collection of a tax levied upon its lands restrained on the ground that such lands were exempt from taxation under the statute sufficiently shows that the lands were such as the statute exempts if it alleges that the lands taxed are necessary for the proper operation of complainant's road and have been for a year past: Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Marquette, 85 M. 504.

550. The bill shows a case within the jurisdiction where it alleges the tax to be "about $150:" Palmer v. Rich, 12 M. 414.

551. The bill must set forth a description of the land affected: Conway v. Waverly, 15 M. 257.

552. A bill to restrain the collection of an assessment must expressly point out the irregularities relied upon as vitiating the proceedings: Williams v. Detroit, 2 M. 560.

553. A bill seeking to have the collection of an assessment for improving a street restrained because the estimate of its cost as submitted to the council was in gross cannot be aided by any presumption against the correctness of official action, and should clearly negative the submission also of detailed information: Cuming v. Grand Rapids, 46 M. 150.

554. As to necessary averments in bill for relief against drain-tax, see Barker v. Vernon, 68 M. 516. See DRAINS, § 104.

555. Relief will be refused to one who asks to have the collection of his taxes restrained on a showing that a portion of his taxes are illegal, without distinguishing the legal from the illegal: Conway v. Waverly, 15 M. 257; Palmer v. Napoleon, 16 M. 176.

556. If legal and illegal taxes are separable, an injunction will not be granted except upon payment or an offer to pay the legal part: Palmer v. Napoleon, 16 M. 176.

557. Where complainant denies the validity of a particular tax, without giving a reason for contesting it, he should, in his bill, offer to pay it: Connors v. Detroit, 41 M. 128.

558. If a bill to restrain the collection of such part only of a tax as is claimed to be illegal points out definitely the part and amount complained of, it need not offer payment of that part not sought to be enjoined: Clement v. Everest, 29 M. 19.

559. Where a bill to enjoin the sale of lands for taxes states in round numbers the total sum assessed against each parcel for state, county, town, highway and school taxes, without distinguishing the amounts of each, it will not be sustained if the complainant fails to show that all these several taxes were irregularly assessed, or that he had made payment or tender. The legal charge will not be enjoined to cut off what may be illegal: Pillsbury v. Auditor-General, 26 M. 245.

560. Where city levies for certain funds exceeded the statutory limit of taxation it was held that complainant could not claim that collection of the whole city tax should be restrained. He should offer to pay what the common council might legally assess as to those funds and the whole of the remainder; and where he fails to do this costs should be awarded against him, but his bill should be sustained to the extent of what he ought equitably to pay: Connors v. Detroit, 41 M. 128.

561. Where one seeks to restrain the collection of an alleged excessive tax, the injunction master should require him, as a condition to the allowance of the injunction, to pay to the proper officer so much of the tax as he concedes to be fair, and if his estimate errs in his own favor, the court has power to impose costs upon him or to deny him costs. If personal taxes are involved, the amount disputed should be required to be paid into court, or security exacted for its payment, if the court so decrees: Merrill v. Auditor-General, 24 M. 170.

562. A sale of land for unpaid taxes should not be perpetually enjoined without making it a condition that complainant should pay the sum lawfully demandable and which he had previously tendered; e. g., where the authorities had demanded an illegal rate of interest on the taxes, the legal rate having been tendered and refused: Smith v. Auditor-General, 20 M. 398.

563. Where, on a bill to restrain the collection of taxes a part only of which were alleged to be illegal, an injunction was allowed on condition that complainants paid into court the amounts assessed against them, which they did, and the bill was afterwards dismissed on demurrer, held, that the court could not properly direct the money deposited to be paid over by the register to the township treasurer, there having been no issue or hearing that could enable the court to determine that the parties had no defense against the enforcement of collection in whole or in part: Conway v. Waverly, 15 M. 257.

564. The dismissal on demurrer for want of equity of a bill to enjoin the collection of taxes does not affect any legal defences which any of the complainants may set up against the levy of the taxes: Ibid. See infra, § 748.

565. Where, upon a bill to restrain a sale for taxes, the assessment or levy is found to be excessive, the decree should not cancel the whole tax but should give relief against the excess only: Merrill v. Auditor-General, 24 M. 170; Connors v. Detroit, 41 M. 128.

566. On affirming a decree restraining the sale of land for an illegal tax, costs cannot be awarded against the state, but may be allowed to complainant to be collected on the appeal bond: Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Auditor-General, 41 M. 635.

(h) Return of delinquent taxes.

567. A township treasurer's return of delinquent state and county taxes before the statutory time avoids a tax-deed based on a sale of property therein reported: Bailey v. Haywood, 70 M. 188.

568. An extension of time for making return of taxes is for the benefit of the tax collector, and if he makes return before the expiration of the extension no legal wrong is done to tax-payers, their right to make payment being the same as before: Drennan v. Beierlein, 49 M. 272.

569. A return by the treasurer or collector that the tax has not been paid is necessary to justify a sale of the land upon which the tax was levied: Rowland v. Doty, H. 3.

570. A tax-deed is void if based on a sale for taxes for a year in which the property was not returned: Newkirk v. Fisher, 72 M. — (Oct. 26, '88).

571. All subsequent proceedings for the sale of the land for the unpaid taxes are founded upon this return: Tweed v. Metcalf, 4 M. 579.

As to necessity of return of delinquent labor tax, see HIGHWAYS, § 135.

572. It is the treasurer's duty to make an effort to collect taxes assessed to residents before he can lawfully return them unpaid: Rayner v. Lee, 20 M. 384.

573. A township treasurer's return of delinquent taxes is good if in the statutory form: and it will be presumed, if necessary to sustain it, that personal demand was made for taxes assessed upon residents: Dickison v. Reynolds, 48 M. 158.

574. Under R. S. 1838, p. 87, § 9, the oath on returning taxes unpaid could, in the absence of the county treasurer, be administered by his deputy: Malony v. Mahar, 2 D. 432, 1 M. 26.

575. A return by the township collector of the failure to pay taxes which is neither signed by him nor verified by his oath is unofficial and of no legal value: Upton v. Kennedy, 36 M. 216; Seymour v. Peters, 67 M. 415.

576. A failure of the overseer of highways to verify his return of unpaid highway labor—even as to resident lands—held to defeat a deed for taxes of that year: Hogelskamp v. Weeks, 37 M. 422.

577. The description, in the township treasurer's return, of the land as in "town seven of range seven" instead of town seven north of range seven west, is sufficient where the names of the township and county are given, and there is only one town seven of range seven in that township: Wright v. Dunham, 13 M. 414.

578. Sending the township treasurer's original return to the auditor-general instead of the transcript required by H. S. § 1069 will not invalidate a subsequent sale: Stockle v. Silsbee, 41 M. 615.

579. The county clerk is not required to certify to the township treasurer's return to the county treasurer, but to the proceedings had on extending the time for collecting taxes, and to the accuracy of the county treasurer's transcript to the auditor-general: Hunt v. Chapin, 42 M. 24.

580. H. S. § 1069, requiring transcripts of the collectors' returns to be forwarded to the auditor-general by the first day of March, if mandatory in cases where there is no extension, does not apply to cases of extension; and if by reason of extension the returns are not made in time, the county treasurer should forward transcripts as soon as practicable thereafter: Houghton Supervisors v. Rees, 34 M. 481.

581. But the auditor-general cannot be compelled to receive returns and credit the counties with delinquent taxes when such returns are made after the first day of March; but he may do so, in his discretion, if the returns reach him in time to advertise and sell the lands the same year: Houghton County v. Auditor-General, 36 M. 271, 41 M. 28.

VII. APPROPRIATION; ACCOUNTING.

As to expenditure of local taxes raised in unorganized county, see COUNTIES, §§ 118, 119.

As to adjusting, between old and new counties, equities as to taxes previously levied, see COUNTIES, § 120.

582. H. S. § 1225 is a standing appropriation of one-half the specific taxes arising from mining companies to the counties respectively: People v. Auditor-General, 9 M. 141.

583. A county clerk drew an order on the state treasurer, payable to the order of the county treasurer, for specific tax moneys due the county. This order was indorsed over by the county treasurer to an attorney appointed by the board of supervisors to receive the money, and the attorney presented it to the auditor-general and applied for his warrant on the state treasurer for the amount. Held, that the order was sufficient: Ibid.

584. The right of a township, city or village to a liquor tax collected therein becomes vested at the date at which the law requires the tax to be paid, and is not divested by subsequent detachment of territory before actual payment: Springwells v. Wayne County Treasurer, 58 M. 240.

585. Where a township has collected and used liquor taxes which an incorporated village within its limits had a right to assess and receive, the village may sanction the collection and claim the money: Decatur v. Decatur Township Board, 33 M. 385.

586. A city from which the county treasurer has withheld liquor-tax moneys cannot on that account refuse to pay over moneys collected for county taxes: Marquette v. Ishpeming City Treasurer, 49 M. 244.

As to township's liability to county for its treasurer's default, see TOWNSHIPS, §§ 65, 66.

587. A county treasurer cannot refuse, on the ground that the county claims moneys to be due it from the state, to pay over taxes which he has collected for the state; and in a mandamus proceeding against him by the auditor-general he cannot, though under instructions from the board of supervisors, make a counter-claim or set-off of the county's demands; this would, in effect, be a suit against the state: Aplin v. Van Tassel, 72 M. — (Nov. 28, '88).

588. Under the tax laws the auditor-general cannot open accounts with the township or with the particular funds of a township, but only with the county; and so long as the county is indebted to the state he may withhold from the former amounts collected within it upon taxes assessed for township, school and highway purposes: Ottawa Supervisors v. Auditor-General, 69 M. 1 (March 2, '88).

589. It is only in cases where taxes have been illegally assessed and rejected, or otherwise set aside according to law, that they can be charged back to the counties; mere delay in collections, caused by the pendency of injunctions, is not sufficient: Auditor-General v. Monroe Supervisors, 86 M. 70.

590. Section 124 of the tax-law of 1869 (C. L. 1871, § 1090, repealed Aug. 8, 1875) provided that lands remaining unsold for five years after they were bid off to the state should then be sold for what they would bring, crediting the county for any excess over the amount charged by the state against any parcel, and debiting the county for any deficiency. Held, that the title of the statute precluded any retrospective effect—even if such effect could lawfully be given—and that § 124 did not apply in cases where lands were bid off to the state prior to its passage: Auditor-General v. Monroe Supervisors, 86 M. 70; Auditor-General v. Saginaw Supervisors, 62 M. 579.

591. The state cannot be charged with the amount of tax-bids upon a sale not authorized by law—e. g., a sale made after an unauthorized postponement: Houghton County v. Auditor-General, 41 M. 23.

592. Where the manner of dealing adopted by state and county shows that there has been no settlement, but at most an account stated, a mistake of fact will be corrected if great injustice has been done: Auditor-General v. Saginaw Supervisors, 62 M. 579.

593. In accounting with the state a county should receive credit for all the lands bid off by the state, and whatever interest and other charges have been made at the auditor-general's office on account of the same: Ibid.

594. The interest on amounts bid by the state for tax lands should cease against the county when the land is redeemed at either office. If, for convenience or necessity in keeping the account, interest is charged on state bids when the land is returned for the whole period in which redemption is allowed, and payment of the tax is made before that period expires, the amount of interest collected from that time should be credited back to the county: Ibid.

595. It seems that the auditor-general can cancel and charge back to the county illegal state tax purchases: Ibid.

596. Under H. S. § 1140, a county is responsible to the state for the county treasurer's default in accounting for moneys received by him in conducting tax-sales; he does not act in such sales as the mere agent of the state, and separately from his official duties as county treasurer; nor is it optional with him whether he will conduct such sales or not: Attorney-General v. St. Clair Supervisors, 80 M. 388.

597. By taking from the county treasurer the bond required by H. S. § 1098 to account for moneys received at tax-sales, the state does not confine itself to the remedy thereon in case of his default: Ibid.

598. The board of supervisors may be compelled by mandamus to levy the amount of the loss and reimburse the state. The state loses nothing by laches in delaying to press payment: Ibid.

Board of supervisors compelled to apportion amount due state from county, see supra, §§ 350, 351.

VIII. SALES.

(a) Power to sell, in general.

As to presumptions in favor of validity, see supra, §§ 85-93.

That a levy exceeding statutory limit, or tax including a sum illegally added, defeats sale and tax-deed, see supra, §§ 324-339.

599. Statutes with reference to tax-sales should not be construed more strictly or more loosely than is the rule with statutes generally; the intent governs: Clark v. Mowyer, 5 M. 462.

600. Sales cannot be made under § 70 of the general tax-law of 1882 (H. S. p. 1285) for taxes assessed under the former tax-law, because the title of the tax-law of 1882 confines it to future proceedings, and because act 11 of 1882 (subsequently passed), which repeals former laws relating to taxation, leaves them in force for the sale of lands for taxes levied under them: Thomas v. Collins, 58 M. 64; Ball v. Busch, 64 M. 836; Busch v. Nester, 70 M. 525 (June 8, '88); Nitz v. Bolton, 71 M. — July 11, '88).

601. The tax-law of 1885 (act 153) was confined by its title to a prospective operation, and sales for delinquent taxes of previous years could not be made thereunder: Humphrey v. Auditor-General, 70 M. 292; Hall v. Perry, 72 M. — (Nov. 1, '88); McNaughton v. Martin, 72 M. — (Nov. 1, '88).

602. Act 17 of 1887, providing for the collection under the tax-law of 1885 of unpaid taxes assessed prior to the passage of the act of 1885, authorizes a sale of land for unpaid taxes assessed in 1884 under the tax-law of 1882, and therefore requires a reversal of a decree in proceedings pending when the act of 1887 took effect enjoining the collection of such taxes under the law of 1885: Humphrey v. Auditor-General, 70 M. 292.

603. But the provision of § 2 of said act 17 of 1887, which attempts to validate sales theretofore had under the provisions of said act of 1885 for delinquent taxes of years previous to 1885, is unconstitutional: Hall v. Perry, McNaughton v. Martin, cited supra, § 601.

604. A statutory amendment allowing sale to pay marshal's fees is not, unless plainly so intended, applicable to assessments previously made: Fuller v. Grand Rapids, 40 M. 395.

605. Land might be sold by the county for delinquent school-taxes under the law of 1848: Tweed v. Metcalf, 4 M. 579.

606. The auditor-general cannot postpone the sale of lands to another year, either directly or by accepting delinquent returns from the counties at too late a date for a sale the same year. A sale so postponed is void: Houghton County v. Auditor-General, 41 M. 28.

607. A sale for taxes for a year in which it is shown the land was twice assessed and the tax once paid is invalid: Rayner v. Lee, 20 M. 384.

608. A sale of land for taxes is wholly unwarranted if the tax has been paid, and the deed given thereon will convey no title to the purchaser: Rowland v. Doty, H. 3; Johnstone v. Scott, 11 M. 232; Rayner v. Lee, 20 M. 384.

(b) Decree; notice.

609. An invalid decree of sale for taxes should be annulled by reversal instead of being permitted to stand as a null decree. And both parties should be placed in the condition in which they would have been if no proceedings in court had been taken: State v. Eddy, 58 M. 318.

610. Under R. S. 1846 it was not necessary that the auditor-general should specify in his notice of tax-sales the particular place at the county seat where the sales would take place. A notice which stated that the sale would take place at such public and convenient place as the county treasurer should select at the county seat was sufficient (overruling Miles v. Walker, 4 M. 641): Clark v. Mowyer, 5 M. 462; Wisner v. Davenport, 5 M. 501.

611. And a notice by the county treasurer of the place where the tax-sales would be made, posted at the court-house, county treasurer's office and other public places at the county seat a week before the day of sale, was a reasonable and sufficient notice by him if any was required: Ibid.

(c) The sale; description.

612. There is no limitation by statute of the amount of land that may be sold from any parcel for the taxes assessed thereon: Sibley v. Smith, 2 M. 486. And where the whole is sold no presumption of fraud can arise from that fact: Tweed v. Metcalf, 4 M. 579.

613. The description by which sale is made may differ from that of the assessment where there are statutory provisions for payment on part of an entire description: Amberg v. Rogers, 9 M. 332. So, it may differ from the description returned where payment on part can be made after return: Wright v. Dunham, 13 M. 414.

614. Whether a tax-sale of a town lot, as such, is valid where the town plat has never been recorded, quere: Johnstone v. Scott, 11 M. 232.

615. The land sold may be described by initial letters, abbreviations and figures: Sibley v. Smith, 2 M. 486.

As to descriptions in tax-deeds, see infra, §§ 642-647.

That sales-book of county treasurer is evidence, see EVIDENCE, § 494.

(d) Fraud of officers and bidders.

616. If a county treasurer, having charge of sales of land for taxes, become a purchaser himself, the sale is a nullity; and he cannot be allowed, under the statute, for improvements made by him on the lands purchased: Clute v. Barron, 2 M. 192.

617. Fraudulent combinations of bidders at tax-sales to prevent lands being sold to others will not vitiate a purchase by one not a party to the combination: Case v. Dean, 16 M. 12.

(e) Effect of sale; certificate; assignment.

618. Every tax-sale is a sale of the complete title; and, if legal, when it matures takes precedence of all other titles: Sinclair v. Learned, 51 M. 335; Westbrook v. Miller, 64 M. 129.

619. A sale, unless cancelled by some proper authority, extinguishes the tax: Auditor-General v. Monroe Supervisors, 86 M. 70; Auditor-General v. Saginaw Supervisors, 62 M. 579.

620. The state purchases and holds under tax-sales in the same manner as individuals: Ibid.

621. And it cannot, by selling an old tax-bid, avoid the bar of the statute of limitations arising meantime from adverse possession: Chamberlain v. Ahrens, 55 M. 111.

622. A state tax-bid transferred to a private purchaser is in his hands the same in all respects as if the land had been bid off by him originally: Auditor-General v. Monroe Supervisors, 36 M. 70.

623. One who had bought lands at a tax-sale, but had not yet become entitled to a deed when it was sold for another year's tax, was not the owner within the meaning of R. S. 1838, so as to be entitled to a surplus received on the last sale, even though such surplus was deposited in the state treasury and remained there until he had obtained his deed: People v. Hammond, 1 D. 276.

624. A tax certificate gives no right of entry on land prior to execution of tax-deed: Busch v. Nester, 62 M. 381.

625. A certificate of tax purchase clouds title if the deed to be issued thereon will be prima facie evidence of title; and, therefore, the assignment of such certificate is a valuable consideration for a promise to pay money: Stoddard v. Prescott, 58 M. 542.

626. A quitclaim to a third person from a tax purchaser who has as yet no deed can operate at most merely as an assignment of the certificate of sale: Nitz v. Bolton, 71 M. — (July 11, '88).

Assignment of tax certificate provided for in decreeing foreclosure, see MORTGAGES, § 647.

(f) Redemption.

627. A legislative intent to cut off all right of redemption as to sales made prior to a new statute on the subject will not be inferred, being contrary to the uniform course of state policy in that regard, and also affecting injuriously the rights of those who before were entitled to redeem: Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Saginaw County Treasurer, 83 M. 260.

628. Act 17 of 1875 (H. S. § 1094) takes the place of and repeals C. L. 1871, § 1059, and being the only act in force providing for redemption it applies to sales previously made; the twenty-five per cent. interest or penalty required by the earlier act to be paid to the state is released: Ibid.

629. Under the charter of Detroit of 1857 the owner of an undivided interest in land assessed as a whole was allowed to redeem his share from a city tax-sale by paying a proportionate amount: People v. Detroit City Treasurer, 8 M. 14.

630. Where the county treasurer's sale-book of lands delinquent for taxes of 1844 showed an erasure opposite the land in question, it was held that no legal presumption of redemption by payment was raised, and that the question was one of fact to be decided in the trial court: Tweed v. Metcalf, 4 M. 579.

631. In a particular case where the owner of land sold for taxes let the time for redemption, which he would otherwise have made, elapse, relying on the purchaser's assurance that he would assign the tax certificate to him on payment of his bid with interest, the purchaser having taken a deed was compelled to reconvey to the owner: Laing v. McKee, 18 M. 124.

IX. THE DEED; TAX-TITLES.

Conveyance of tax-title by quitclaim deed, see CONVEYANCES, § 266.

(a) Validity; execution.

That tax-deeds based on excessive levies or on taxes wholly or partly unauthorized, are void, see supra, §§ 324-339.

632. The auditor-general cannot convey lands sold for taxes unless express authority is conferred on him by statute: Sibley v. Smith, 2 M. 486.

633. Sections 76, 64 and 65 of the tax-law of 1843 held to authorize the auditor-general to execute deeds to purchasers at sales for delinquent taxes of 1841: Ibid.

634. The auditor-general will not be compelled by mandamus to give a deed where, under the statute (S. L. 1843, p. 8, § 69), the giving or withholding thereof depends upon his judicial discretion; the remedy of a dissatisfied party is by certiorari: People v. Auditor-General, 8 M. 427.

635. Under H. S. § 283, and under the presumption in favor of official action, held, that the deputy auditor-general has power to execute and acknowledge tax-deeds: Westbrook v. Miller, 56 M. 148; Drennan v. Herzog, 56 M. 467; Fells v. Barbour, 58 M. 49.

636. The tax-deed need not recite the proceedings prior to the sale. The recitals need not show more than the capacity in which the officer acts: Sibley v. Smith, 2 M. 486.

637. A second tax-deed, issued by the auditor-general on the loss or destruction of the first, is void unless it recites such loss or destruction, and the date, if possible, of the first deed: Burroughs v. Goff, 64 M. 464.

638. A deed given for state tax-lands may be based on the separate sales of different years, and will be good if any one of the sales was valid: Hunt v. Chapin, 42 M. 24.

639. A deed from the auditor-general based upon a tax-sale made by the county treasurer to himself is a nullity, and the grantee cannot recover for improvements: Clute v. Barron, 2 M. 192.

640. A tax-deed executed after redemption from the sale, or, what is in legal effect the same thing, after the lien of the tax has been transferred to the owner of the property and merged in his general title before the sale has become absolute, confers no title: Gould v. Day, 94 U. S., 405.

641. Recording is not essential to the validity of a tax-deed: Fells v. Barbour, 58 M. 49.

That circuit court commissioners cannot be empowered to try tax-titles, see COURTS, § 47.

(b) Description of the land.

642. The interest or title intended to be conveyed must appear from the deed: Groesbeck v. Seeley, 13 M. 329.

643. As between himself and the owners of adjacent lands the tax-purchaser must take notice at his peril of the description in his own deed to know what lands it describes, if any, and whether it sufficiently describes any land: King v. Potter, 18 M. 134.

644. Where a tax-sale is made for an undivided interest the burden is on the purchaser to show what it covers; he must identify his interest: Butler v. Porter, 18 M. 292.

645. This description in a tax-deed was sustained: "The following described land, situated in the county of Wayne, to wit, that part of private claim 61 lying east of the north branch of the river Ecorse, in township 3 S. of R. 11 E., containing 20 $\frac{7}{11}$ acres, be the same more or less;" and as the deed gave definite and permanent boundaries it conveyed all the land within those boundaries, although there were in fact about eighty acres: Gilman v. Riopelle, 18 M. 145.

646. Under a statute containing provisions whereby part of a parcel assessed as an entirety may be cleared by payment or redemption, a description may be good for the purpose of sale and conveyance although insufficient for the purpose of an assessment; it cannot, therefore, be presumed that the description for assessment was the same as that in the tax-deed; and it will be presumed, in aid of such a deed, that a tax instead of being assessed on the description by which sale was made was assessed on the whole parcel, and that payment or redemption took place as to part: Amberg v. Rogers, 9 M. 382; Wright v. Dunham, 13 M. 414.

647. A description in a tax-deed which designates the land not by governmental survey subdivision or by number of lot or tract, but by subdivisions that are not legal or that cannot physically exist, is insufficient: King v. Potter, 18 M. 134.

As to description for assessment, see infra, §§ 206-215.

(c) Operation and effect.

648. The title acquired by tax-sale has nothing to do with the previous chain of title; it breaks up and destroys all prior titles: Lacey v. Davis, 4 M. 140.

649. A tax-title, if legal, takes precedence of and extinguishes all prior titles: Van Aiken v. Monroe, 88 M. 725; Sinclair v. Learned, 51 M. 385; La Coss v. Wadsworth, 56 M. 421; Westbrook v. Miller, 64 M. 129.

650. A valid tax-title cuts off all liens and encumbrances resting on the land, including homestead and dower rights: Robbins v. Barron, 32 M. 86.

651. Yet ownership of a tax-title does not necessarily prevent one from seeking relief on the basis of antecedent equities: La Coss v. Wadsworth, 56 M. 421.

652. A tax-deed gives no right but such as comes from the tax proceeding itself; it does not estop the state from claiming a previous escheat; the state gives no warranty: Crane v. Reeder, 25 M. 303.

653. The state does not guarantee tax-titles except as statutes may provide; and in all other cases the purchaser must be content with such interests as he gets under his purchase: Rice v. Auditor-General, 30 M. 12.

654. As an illegal tax-title is a nullity it cannot of itself divest or affect the true title in any way, and the true owner cannot be compelled to incur expense or take active measures to get rid of it: Groesbeck v. Seeley, 13 M. 329.

655. A tax-deed cannot relate back to the time of the sale for the purpose of making parties trespassers by reason of acts done on the land before the deed was given: Hess v. Griggs, 48 M. 397.

656. A tax-title relates back from the time it becomes absolute to the time of the tax purchase for all purposes of substantial justice, but not otherwise; and it cannot be used to divest rights acquired since the period to which it would relate: Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Bulte, 45 M. 113.

657. A defendant in ejectment who after issue joined acquired tax-titles from a third party, but did not set them up in defence, was not estopped by the judgment against him from afterwards asserting them; in such a case they do not relate back: Hemmingway v. Drew, 47 M. 534.

658. Tax-deeds that are not valid cannot relate back to protect the acts of one who has entered under mere tax certificates before the deeds have issued; such entry cannot be treated as color of title: Busch v. Nester, 62 M. 381.

659. One who cuts timber under a void tax-title is liable as a trespasser: Safford v. Busto, 4 M. 406.

660. A tax-deed, though shown by evidence to be void, affords color of title to one who has gone into possession thereunder: Hoffman v. Harrington, 28 M. 92.

661. A tax-deed offered to show good faith of a defendant charged in trover for cutting timber was excluded where good faith was immaterial: Grant v. Smith, 26 M. 201.

662. Whether, in view of the notorious fact that tax-deeds are generally found to be invalid, a person who cuts timber relying solely on a tax-deed, beyond which he has made no examination to ascertain whether it is really valid, can, where it turns out to be void, claim that he acted in good faith, quere: Winchester v. Craig, 33 M. 205, 222.

663. Hearsay evidence that tax-title relied on to show good faith was investigated and pronounced valid by counsel excluded: Tuttle v. White, 49 M. 407.

664. Where a party claiming to have been in possession of land when he cut logs thereon brings replevin for them against one claiming title to the land, and where plaintiff attempts to prove title and consequent right of possession by tax-deeds that are void on their face, no conflicting titles remain for the jury to try, and defendant is entitled to judgment: Busch v. Nester, 70 M. 525.

665. Tax-titles, though held by third persons, are admissible in defence to an action of trespass brought by a plaintiff who shows no actual possession: Tolles v. Duncombe, 34 M. 101.

666. A tax-title held by a third party may be shown as divesting plaintiff's title in ejectment by a defendant who is under no estoppel: Lee v. Clary, 38 M. 223.

667. A mortgage is not merged in a tax-title acquired by the mortgagee to protect his interest: Baker v. Clark, 52 M. 22.

668. A tax-title that inures to a mortgagee's benefit is no consideration for abating the mortgage debt: Baird v. Randall, 58 M. 175.

669. A tax-title obtained by one who has no right to use it adversely to the regular title simply inures to the protection of the latter: Horton v. Ingersoll, 13 M. 409.

670. A purchase-money mortgage given back by grantees who bought with warranty and took possession could not be resisted, on foreclosure, on the ground of an outstanding tax-title fifteen years old whereunder no claim had been made against such mortgaggers: Smith v. Fiting, 37 M. 148.

671. Whether record of a tax-title is constructive notice that the holder claims the land, quere: La Coss v. Wadsworth, 56 M. 421.

672. Recording tax-deed to unoccupied land asserts title and warrants ejectment: Hoyt v. Southard, 58 M. 432.

When holder of tax-title can be made defendant in foreclosure, see MORTGAGES, § 553.

As to the statute protecting improvements made under tax-titles, see EJECTMENT, §§ 231-235.

(d) As evidence; presumptions.

673. A statute making tax-deeds prima facie evidence of the proceedings to the date of the deed is valid; so held of § 124 of the tax-law of 1858: Groesbeck v. Seeley, 13 M. 329.

674. The provision of the tax-law of 1858 (L. 1853, p. 151, § 89) under which a tax-deed five years recorded was to be "positive evidence" of a title in fee-simple in the grantee cannot avail a party to whom sale was made after the amendment in 1855 (C. L. 1857, § 871) striking out such provision: Blackwood v. Van Vleit, 80 M. 118.

675. The provision in § 124 of the tax-law of 1858 making a tax-deed two years recorded conclusive is void: Quinlon v. Rogers, 12 M. 168; Case v. Dean, 16 M. 12.

676. Section 135 of the tax-law of 1858 held invalid so far as it makes absolute and indefeasible after five years the title to lands bid off by the state for taxes: Groesbeck v. Seeley, 13 M. 329. See Case v. Dean, 16 M. 12.

677. The objection that the grantee in a tax-deed offered in evidence was in possession when the tax accrued only goes to the validity of the deed as a conveyance of the title, and not to its admissibility in evidence; for the statute makes the deed prima facie evidence of the correctness of all previous proceedings: Gilman v. Riopelle, 18 M. 145.

678. An objection to the introduction of a tax-deed in evidence is untenable if it assumes as established facts that would be mere matter of defence to the deed: Crane v. Reeder, 25 M. 303.

679. The admission in evidence of a city tax-deed for an unpaid paving-tax, without first proving regularity of proceedings prior to sale, involves simply the order of proof and is not error: Dubois v. Campau, 24 M. 360.

680. Where defendant in ejectment relies upon tax-deeds, one of which is found to be valid, the exclusion of evidence showing the others to be invalid is immaterial: Drennan v. Herzog, 56 M. 467.

681. Where evidence tending to invalidate a tax-deed is admitted, and goes to the jury without any ruling upon it, the supreme court cannot consider the alleged defects: Sands v. Davis, 40 M. 14.

682. A tax-deed is presumptively valid; its invalidity is not to be inferred from ambiguous facts or from any failure to find facts: Stockle v. Silsbee, 41 M. 615.

683. The policy of our tax-laws favors the stability and repose of tax-titles, and discourages their being brought into question by collateral proceedings: Blanchard v. Powers, 42 M. 619.

684. A tax-title cannot be collaterally attacked by contesting in an ejectment suit the lawful acts of a de facto tax collector: Stockle v. Silsbee, 41 M. 615.

685. The validity of a tax-title, especially if it be of long standing, cannot be impeached in an action of ejectment against the holder by evidence showing the falsity of the supervisor's certificate of valuation attached to the assessment roll: Blanchard v. Powers, 42 M. 619; Gamble v. East Saginaw, 48 M. 367.

686. Under the codes of 1827 and 1833 the county treasurer's deed of lands sold for taxes was evidence only that the sale made by him was regular. The party claiming under the deed must show the regularity of the prior proceedings: Rowland v. Doty, H. 3; Scott v. Detroit Young Men's Society, 1 D. 119; Lattimer v. Lovett, 2 D. 204; Ives v. Kimball, 1 M. 308.

687. A tax-deed acquired in 1840, under statutes that did not make such deeds prima facie evidence of regularity, fails to show title unless evidence is given of the correctness of the proceedings: Farmers', etc. Bank v. Bronson, 14 M. 361.

688. Under the statute of 1843, and subsequent tax-laws, a tax-deed from the state is prima facie evidence of the regularity of the proceedings to date of deed and of title in the grantee, and throws the burden of proof upon the party contesting it: Sibley v. Smith, 2 M. 486; Amberg v. Rogers, 9 M. 332; Groesbeck v. Seeley, 13 M. 329; Wright v. Dunham, 13 M. 414; Tolles v. Duncombe, 34 M. 101; Van Auken v. Monroe, 38 M. 725; Crooks v. Whitford, 47 M. 283; Busch v. Nester, 62 M. 381.

689. Where lands are sold for taxes which include taxes assessed under the drainage law of 1859, the deeds given by the auditor-general are prima facie evidence of regular proceedings in the assessment and subsequent steps to a sale: Palmer v. Rich, 12 M. 414.

690. The saving clause of C. L. 1871, § 1133, repealing prior tax-laws, which provides that the repeal "shall not affect any act done, sale made or right acquired," etc., is construed in the light of the state policy of the subject to save the prior enactment making a state tax-deed prima facie evidence of title in the grantee: Blackwood v. Van Vliet, 30 M. 118.

691. Where a tax-title has been assailed for defects in the proceedings, the party claiming under it is entitled to rest upon the prima facie showing made by the production of his deed until evidence assailing it has been given, and then he may go into affirmative evidence of its regularity: Taff v. Hosmer, 14 M. 309, 313.

692. To obviate the effect of the statute making the deed prima facie evidence of the regularity of all proceedings, the party objecting should produce such evidence as will exclude reasonable presumption of regularity. It should be such evidence of irregularity, not pertaining to mere directory requirements, as to demand explanation. Some specific defect, the insufficiency of some particular act, or the non-performance of some requisite duty, should be shown: Lacey v. Davis, 4 M. 140.

693. Where under the statute the tax-sales were to commence on the first Monday of October and to continue from day to day, etc., and the tax-deed recited a sale made on the eleventh of October, it was held incumbent on the party disputing the validity of the deed to show a non-compliance with this statute: Ibid.

694. Until a reasonable presumption to the contrary has been raised by proof, it is to be presumed that everything has been done which the statute authorizes to be done to render the sale valid: Amberg v. Rogers, 9 M. 332.

695. As against the presumption of correctness in favor of a tax-deed it is not sufficient to prove facts from which an inference of irregularity might be drawn, if such facts are consistent with the existence of others which would make the proceedings regular: Wright v. Dunham, 13 M. 414.

696. As the burden of showing invalidity rests upon the party assailing a tax-deed, it is incumbent upon one who relies to defeat such deed on the illegality of a tax levied for township purposes to introduce the township records to show that the amount levied by the supervisors was excessive: Boyce v. Sebring, 66 M. 210.

697. When such evidence is given as, in the absence of all counter-testimony, will afford reasonable ground for presuming the proceedings anterior to the deed to be irregular, the burden of proof is thrown upon the holder of the tax-title; but the irregularity must be a substantial error, affecting injuriously the interests of the owner of the land: Case v. Dean, 16 M. 12.

698. Where, to show that a tax was erroneously assessed upon a part instead of the whole of a parcel of land, the collector's return was put in evidence, which showed a tax against a part of the land only, but it was consistent with this return that a tax might have been correctly levied upon the whole, and a part of the land then cleared of the tax by payment before the return, it was held that the court, in support of the deed, must presume such payment: Wright v. Dunham, 13 M. 414.

699. A tax-deed invalid on its face is properly excluded from evidence. H. S. §§ 1092, 1165, making tax-deeds prima facie valid, cannot apply to papers that bear on their face evidence showing them to be void: Ball v. Busch, 64 M. 836.

700. So held of tax-deeds issued on a sale, under act 9 of 1882, of lands for the tax of 1881, showing on their face such infirmity: Ibid.; Busch v. Nester, 70 M. 525 (June 8, '88); Nitz v. Bolton, 71 M. — (July 11, '88).

(e) Who can rely upon.

701. Prior to the enactment of H. S. § 1184, it was held that it was not competent for one to acquire a cumulative title to lands by allowing them to be sold for delinquent taxes: Tweed v. Metcalf, 4 M. 579.

702. Nor could a person in possession of land, claiming title thereto, acquire any additional right or title to the land by purchase at sale for taxes levied thereon either before or after he took possession. So held where a deed for taxes of 1842 was offered to strengthen title claimed under a deed for taxes of 1839: Lacey v. Davis, 4 M. 140.

703. But, criticising Lacey v. Davis, supra, it was held, with reference to a deed for tax of 1854, that there can be no estoppel against purchasing tax-titles except against one whose duty it was to pay the tax or remove the burden: Blackwood v. Van Vleit, 30 M. 118. Followed in Sands v. Davis, 40 M. 14. See Jeffery v. Hursh, 45 M. 59.

704. Even prior to H. S. § 1184, a person making a second purchase before the time for redemption from his first purchase had expired could claim under both: Tweed v. Metcalf, 4 M. 579.

705. Whether one in possession of land and neglecting to pay the taxes on it can rely on a title derived from a sale of such taxes for the purpose of defeating a conveyance which he had previously made but has not perfected by delivery of possession, quere: Jeffery v. Hursh, 45 M. 59.

706. If one cannot rely upon a tax-title purchased by himself, he cannot make use of one purchased by another: Ibid.

707. One who takes possession of lands under tax-titles previously acquired, who cuts timber thereon, claiming to own such lands, and who tells the supervisor to assess the lands to him, cannot purchase and hold tax-titles for that year: Day v. Cole, 65 M. 129, 154.

708. The owner of a distinct parcel of lands assessed as a whole cannot suffer sale to be made for the tax and then acquire a title as against the owner of the rest: Cooley v. Waterman, 16 M. 366.

709. A tenant in common cannot acquire a tax-title so as to cut off his co-tenants' interests: Page v. Webster, 8 M. 263. Whether he is in possession or not: Butler v. Porter, 18 M. 292; Dubois v. Campau, 24 M. 360; Conn. Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Bulte, 45 M. 113.

710. So, if such co-tenant procure another person to bid in the property for him, and take the deed, this will give him no greater right: Dubois v. Campau, 24 M. 360.

711. As to what would be the rule where a stranger should bid in the land on his own account and get a deed, which a co-tenant not in possession should afterwards purchase, quere: Ibid.

712. An heir of a deceased tenant in common who derives title solely from decedent stands in his ancestor's shoes with reference to a tax-title suffered to arise during his ancestor's life and transferred to himself after such ancestor's death: Ibid. And see the dictum to like effect in Lacey v. Davis, 4 M. 140.

713. A tax-title that arose from the default of a tenant in common may nevertheless be set up against the other tenants by one who takes a quitclaim from such tenant, and who enters as a stranger to their claims and claiming the whole title: Sands v. Davis, 40 M. 14.

714. Where one has sold land with warranty, taking back a mortgage thereon for the purchase price, his devisees cannot, by purchasing at a sale for a tax that their devisor was bound to pay, being a lien on the land when he conveyed, use the tax-title to defeat the title of their devisor's grantee and mortgager; nor would such tax-title cut off the mortgager's equity of redemption so as to dispense with foreclosure: Taylor v. Snyder, W. 490.

715. A tax-title against which a mortgagee is indemnified cannot be set up against his foreclosure title by the party who indemnified him: Wyman v. Baer, 46 M. 418.

716. A second mortgagee who allows the land to be sold for taxes and obtains a tax-deed cannot use such deed adversely to the first mortgage: Horton v. Ingersoll, 13 M. 409.

717. But where a second mortgagee had obtained a tax-title on the premises, it was held that he could use it as a defence in ejectment brought by the first mortgagee after foreclosure unless the latter should repay the cost of the tax purchase: Conn. Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Bulte, 45 M. 118.

718. Where the holder of a tax-title having a second mortgage goes into possession under the mortgagee, the tax-title is no answer to a claim by the first mortgagee (whose mortgage was prior to 1843) that he should account for the rents and profits to be applied on their mortgage: Farmers', etc. Bank v. Bronson, 14 M. 361.

719. Tax-deeds obtained by an execution purchaser on sales for taxes that the defendant in the execution who had mortgaged the land before the execution should have paid do not cut off the mortgagee's rights: Fells v. Barbour, 58 M. 49.

720. Tax-titles acquired by a tenant do not cut off his landlord's title: Bertram v. Cook, 32 M. 518; Conn. Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Bulte, 45 M. 118; Williams v. Towl, 65 M. 204.

721. A person who erects a building on the leased premises which is thereafter included in the assessed valuation, and taxes levied accordingly, cannot acquire tax-titles issued on the sale of the property for the non-payment of such taxes: Williams v. Towl, 65 M. 204.

722. One who, by arrangement with a person in possession of land under contract of purchase, obtains possession of the premises, cannot permit the land to be sold for taxes on the ground that it was the vendee's — not his own — duty to pay; nor can he either directly or indirectly become the purchaser, and if he does so he holds for the vendor's benefit the title thus acquired: Bertram v. Cook, 32 M. 518.

723. One who buys at a tax-sale under an oral agreement to hold the title in trust for another who should have paid the taxes may nevertheless rely on the tax-title as cutting off all claims: Jones v. Wells, 31 M. 170.

Tax-title taken in attorney's name, resulting trust: See ATTORNEYS, § 52.

As to recognition of agency in making tax purchase, see AGENCY, § 102.

(f) Who may attack.

724. H. S. § 1166, restricting the right to contest the validity of tax-deeds, was prospective only, and did not apply to sales made before the act of 1869 took effect: Clark v. Hall, 19 M. 356; Seymour v. Peters, 67 M. 415 (Oct. 27, '87).

725. Under H. S. § 1166, limiting to one having "title" the right to question the title acquired by the auditor-general's deed, a mere claim for taxes paid is not enough: Robbins v. Barron, 34 M. 517.

726. H. S. § 1166 does not prohibit a party having a title prima facie sufficient under common-law rules from contesting the validity of a tax-deed. Such a title is presumed to have been "acquired from the United States or from this state," although the owner may not be able to trace it back to the state or general government by a connected line of conveyances: Gamble v. Horr, 40 M. 561.

727. A prima facie case at the common law — where it was only necessary to show actual possession under a claim of title — is all that is required to enable defendants in ejectment to make defence against a tax-title: Maxwell v. Paine, 53 M. 30.

(g) Limitation of actions with reference to tax-titles.

728. The act of Feb. 17, 1842 (L. 1842, p. 138), fixing the period wherein ejectment by or against claimants under tax-deeds should be brought, applied only to conveyances on sales for taxes thereafter assessed: Porter v. Van Dyke, 31 M. 176.

729. The benefit of the ten-year limitation in § 2 of said act of 1842 did not apply in favor of a party who was in possession under some other claim at the time of obtaining the tax-title; he must have entered into the actual possession under the tax-deed: Gilman v. Riopelle, 18 M. 145.

730. Said § 2 of said act of 1842 was continued in force as to all rights accrued before the taking effect of R. S. 1846, by § 9, ch. 189, R. S. So ejectment brought in 1853 for land whereupon defendant entered in August, 1842, under color of a tax-title, was barred: Perry v. Hepburne, 4 M. 165.

731. In order to create a bar under the provisions of H. S. § 8698, subd. 2, there must have been an adverse holding by the claimant under the tax-deed for the period named — ten years: Yelverton v. Hilliard, 38 M. 355; Yelverton v. Steele, 40 M. 538; Sparrow v. Hovey, 44 M. 63; Perkins v. Nugent, 45 M. 156.

732. It seems unnecessary to use the word "hostile" in defining to the jury adverse possession under a tax-deed; possession by claim of title under such a deed being, perhaps, necessarily hostile to the title of the original owner: Sparrow v. Hovey, 44 M. 63.

733. All that H. S. § 8698, subd. 2, requires is that a claim consistent with the face of the tax-deed be asserted for ten years with possession; so held where all the land was claimed under two tax-deeds, each for an undivided half, but not defining which: Chamberlain v. Ahrens, 55 M. 111.

734. It is sufficient that the claim was under a tax-title only a part of which vested in the party holding adverse possession: Cook v. Clinton, 64 M. 309.

735. The statute protects parties claiming under tax-titles, whether good or bad, after ten years' occupancy: Chamberlain v. Ahrens, 55 M. 111; Reilly v. Blaser, 61 M. 399; Cook v. Clinton, 64 M. 309.

736. And it makes no difference that the tax-deed arose from a tax which the grantee therein was bound to pay: Reilly v. Blaser, 61 M. 399.

737. The state in 1882 conveyed a state tax-purchase of land for taxes of 1858, which land had meantime been adversely occupied under tax-titles for more than ten years. Held, that ejectment was barred: Chamberlain v. Ahrens, 55 M. 111.

(h) Quieting title under.

738. H. S. § 1168, providing that any person holding a deed of lands executed by the auditor-general for non-payment of taxes might commence a suit in chancery to quiet his title thereto, without taking possession of such lands, was repealed by act 11 of 1882; and the saving of rights in the latter act does not aid one whose deed was executed after the repeal: Goodman v. Nester, 64 M. 662.

739. Under act 281 of 1865 (p. 576, § 4), containing provisions similar to said H. S. § 1168, it was held that a claimant not in possession could file a bill only when the lands were vacant: Tabor v. Cook, 15 M. 322.

740. Without any reference to the validity of his tax-deed, an occupant's title under a tax-sale was quieted after an adverse possession for more than twenty years: Hardy v. Powell, 40 M. 413.

As to when party claiming under tax-deed should bring ejectment instead of seeking to have his title quieted, see EJECTMENT, § 72.

(i) Relief against tax-title.

741. The owner of land may maintain a bill to clear his title from a cloud set up by a city as purchaser at a sale under special assessment for a lateral sewer laid through certain land adjoining his, which seems to have been intended to make a part of an ultimate alley, but which is not legally an alley: Chaffee v. Detroit, 53 M. 573.

742. Owners in severalty of distinct parcels of land sold for a tax cannot join in a bill to set aside the tax-sale as illegal where they have no common grievance: Brunner v. Bay City, 46 M. 236.

743. Relief against void tax-titles acquired by a tenant in common may be had on a bill for partition filed by his co-tenant: Page v. Webster, 8 M. 263. See EQUITY, § 769.

744. A bill to annul the title of the state obtained at a tax-sale cannot be upheld against the auditor-general: Burrill v. Auditor-General, 46 M. 256; Auditor-General v. Saginaw Supervisors, 62 M. 579.

745. The grantee of one who has conveyed lands with warranty need not be made a party to a bill filed by the grantor to set aside a fraudulent tax-purchase that might affect his covenants: Taylor v. Snyder, W. 490.

746. One who files a bill in equity to vacate a tax-sale because the tax is excessive must offer to pay what is equitable: Sinclair v. Learned, 51 M. 385.

747. No formal tender is necessary before filing a bill to set aside an invalid tax-title as a cloud on complainant's title; but an allegation of an offer to pay $25 for a release, where it greatly exceeds the sum for which the lands were sold, is an averment of an offer to do all that equity requires: Hanscom v. Hinman, 30 M. 419.

As to averments in bill to quiet title against parties claiming under tax-titles, see EQUITY, § 832.

As to averments in bill to clear title clouded by tax-sales, see EQUITY, § 830.

748. Absolute dismissal of a bill to clear a title clouded by tax-sales does not prevent any defence at law against the tax-titles: Gamble v. East Saginaw, 43 M. 367. See supra, § 564.

(j) Reimbursement of defeated purchaser; lien as for taxes paid.

749. The auditor-general cannot refund any money upon the failure of a tax title except as some statute requires it: Rice v. Auditor-General, 30 M. 12.

750. Under act 136 of 1863 (S. L. p. 196), a tax-title purchaser's right to reimbursement only arises where (1) the land had not been subject to taxation at all, (2) the taxes had been actually paid in due time, or (3) a certificate had been given in due time by the proper officer that no taxes were charged on the land; it does not apply where the land was subject to taxation and taxes had been actually, even though irregularly, assessed, and no attempt had been made to ascertain and pay them: Ibid.

751. Act 82 of 1858 (§ 103), providing for the refunding of the purchase money and interest in case a tax-title has been "annulled pursuant to law," and a copy of the judgment annulling it presented to the auditor-general, does not authorize such repayment where the tax-title has merely been introduced in evidence in an ejectment suit and held defective; the judgment to which it refers is one which by the statute acts in direct analogy to a bill to quiet title. The system inaugurated by this statute having been held unconstitutional (see COURTS, § 47), the section becomes inoperative: Ibid.

752. If a tenant in common whose interests are taxed inseparably from those of his co-tenants purchases the land on their neglect to pay the taxes he takes as trustee for them, but they must refund their proportion of what he has paid: Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Bulle, 45 M. 113.

753. A subsequent tax-title which, under H. S. § 1208, would preclude the holder of a prior one from possession unless he had first paid or tendered to the owner of the later title the amount of the tax for which the subsequent deed was given, was not necessarily a legal tax-title, though the tax whereon it was based must have been one that had some warrant in law; therefore, a tax-title that was invalid because an excessive portion of the taxes of a township was laid upon the land might be relied on as entitling the holder to repayment under said § 1208: Sinclair v. Learned, 51 M. 335.

754. Said H. S. § 1208 does not make it necessary for a plaintiff in ejectment claiming under a tax-title to show as a part of his case that he has paid all taxes assessed against the land subsequently to such deed, or has paid or tendered to defendant any taxes he has paid subsequently thereto; his failure to do so is matter of defence to be interposed by defendant, and plaintiff may contest the question whether defendant has paid such taxes: Beard v. Sharrick, 67 M. 321.

755. The proper practice as to the verdict, payment or tender, and entry of judgment in such cases, indicated: Ibid.

756. Under act 281 of 1865 (p. 575, § 1, similar to H. S. § 1167), it was held that the holder of a tax-deed set aside for irregularity could recover—on failing in ejectment—so much only of the taxes paid by him as were legally chargeable on land: Hart v. Henderson, 17 M. 218.

757. And under said act of 1865 it was also held that on failure of a tax-deed the judgment for that and other taxes paid by the holder could be rendered only against the owner of the land, whose duty it was to pay the taxes, or those claiming under him, and not against the owner of a valid tax-title acquired after such deeds and payments: Robbins v. Barron, 32 M. 36.

758. Such subsequent valid tax-title extinguishes the claim of the holder of the prior invalid deed against the person holding the land when it was acquired for the amount of the tax for which it was given: Id., 32 M. 36, 33 M. 124.

759. And where two persons hold invalid tax-deeds on the same land, the prior holder not being permitted under H. S. § 1165 to question the validity of the subsequent deed, his claim for reimbursement for taxes paid will be subordinate to the claim of the holder of the subsequent deed: Robbins v. Barron, 34 M. 517.

760. A plaintiff in ejectment cannot, when the tax-titles whereon his action is based are held invalid, recover judgment in the same action for the amount of the taxes paid by him and for which H. S. § 1167 gives him a lien; he must take steps in equity to enforce such lien: Weimer v. Porter, 42 M. 569; Ellsworth v. Freeman, 43 M. 488.

761. But the remedy in chancery cannot be invoked until the rendition of a judgment against the party claiming under the tax-titles for the recovery of the land: Ibid.; Nester v. Busch, 64 M. 657.

762. And this is so even though it conclusively appears by other means that the tax-deed is not good; the lien is purely statutory, and must be enforced as directed by the statute: Nester v. Busch, 64 M. 657.

763. Whether the remedy under H. S. § 1167 by way of a lien for taxes paid was not destroyed by the repeal of the tax-law of 1869 by act 11 of 1882, quere: Ibid.

764. The title of act 153 of 1885 being entirely prospective, the provisions of § 118 thereof, enforcing a lien upon lands in behalf of the grantees in tax-deeds issued in pursuance of the tax law of 1882, is void as in violation of Const., art. 4, § 20: Ibid.

765. Tax-receipts are not evidence to prove a lien for taxes paid on land held under a tax-title; the fact to be proved calls for the assessment rolls: Weimer v. Porter, 42 M. 569.

766. A finding upon the validity of the taxes on which a title is based should distinguish such taxes as are so assessed by authority of law as to be a lien on the land from those levies which are illegal, so that the court may determine such questions of lien as may be raised under H. S. § 1167: Stockle v. Silsbee, 41 M. 615.

X. TAX-LEASES.

767. The term of a tax-lease in Detroit begins when the time for redemption expires: Murphy v. Campau, 38 M. 71.

768. A tax-lease is invalidated by a showing that an unlawful excess, a portion of which entered into the amount of taxes for which the property was sold, was spread upon the roll: Edwards v. Taliaferro, 34 M. 13.

769. Tax-leases afford color of title to one who goes into possession thereunder, though they are in fact invalid: Hoffman v. Harrington, 28 M. 90.

770. One whose title is derived from an execution sale of mortgaged land cannot cut off the mortgagee's title by acquiring tax-leases for taxes which the mortgagor should have paid: Fells v. Barbour, 53 M. 49.

TELEGRAPH COMPANIES.

1. In the absence of statutory provision telegraph companies are not common carriers, nor are obligations and liabilities measured by the rules that govern such carriers: Western Union Tel. Co. v. Carew, 15 M. 525.

2. Nor are they insurers against all errors in the transmission and delivery of messages except in so far as by their rules and regulations, or by contract or otherwise, they assume that position; H. S. ch. 101 imposes no such liability: Ibid.

3. Where a person writes a message under a printed notice which requests the company to send such message according to the conditions of the notice, such notice must be regarded as a general proposition by the company to all persons to send messages on the terms and conditions specified therein; and by writing the message and delivering it to the company the party must be held to accept the proposition, which thereby becomes a contract: Ibid.

4. A condition in such case that the company shall not be responsible for errors in transmitting messages over connecting lines is valid, and relieves the company from liability: Ibid.

5. As to telegrams in evidence, see Gregory v. Wendell, 40 M. 432.

Telegram, when an insufficient memorandum: See STATUTE OF FRAUDS, §§ 4, 7.

TENANTS FOR LIFE.

As to CURTESY and DOWER, see those titles.

Creation of life estate by will, see WILLS, §§ 240-246, 249, 252, 274.

Widow's life estate under statute of descents, see ESTATES OF DECEDENTS, § 475, WILLS, § 274.

Life estate by entirety, see HUSBAND AND WIFE, § 24.

1. The devisee of a life estate is entitled to possession, rents, issues and profits: Pitcher v. Douglas, 37 M. 339.

2. The right of the owner of a life interest to control and possess the property during his life is not affected by a levy upon and sale of the remainder-man's interest: Storrs v. Storrs, 59 M. 55.

3. A widow had a life estate in the west half of a building. The reversioner also owned the east half of the building. Held, that the reversioner would not be enjoined from removing a stairway that had been used in common by the two halves, and closing the communication, the stairway not being a way of necessity or a permanent appurtenance, and the proposed change tending to increase the value of the estate as a whole, and the benefit to the reversioner being greater than the injury to the life tenant; such a tenant must make the property available to his profit at his own expense: Scott v. Palms, 48 M. 505.

4. The life tenant is bound to keep the premises in repair, and is not permitted to commit waste; and any improvement such tenant makes of a permanent character inures to the benefit of the remainder-man: Curtis v. Fowler, 66 M. 696.

As to life tenant's liability for waste, see WASTE.

5. As between the owners of the fee and of a life estate in the same encumbered property, the life estate is to keep down the interest and the fee is to be charged with the principal. Interest due at the death of the ancestor, as between the tenants for life and in fee, will be treated as principal: Campbell v. Campbell, 21 M. 438.

6. The owner of a life estate in personal property has the power to make it available according to circumstances. If it consists of securities the estate is not an estate in each particular security, but in the aggregate; and an assignment of a security cannot be complained of unless it would tend to diminish the estate at the life tenant's death: Sutphen v. Ellis, 35 M. 446.

7. If, in such case, the estate is wasted by the life tenant, the party in whose behalf the limitation order is made has a remedy, but the personal representatives cannot interfere: Ibid.

8. In a particular case it was held that, even on the supposition that a widow's right was limited by will to a life estate, she was entitled to possession of securities and could foreclose them, especially as the co-executor acquiesced: Proctor v. Robinson, 35 M. 284.

9. Payments on deceased vendor's contract to sell land held good where made to his widow, to whom he left life estate in all his property, and where there was no administration: Lamore v. Frisbie, 42 M. 186.

10. As the deed of a tenant for life conveys the present freehold, rescission on the ground of a complete failure of consideration cannot be claimed by tenant's purchaser with warranty, who maintains that he bought the land believing that tenant's title was in fee: Leal v. Terbush, 52 M. 100.

11. Where a life estate becomes vested in or is transferred to the owner of the fee without any intervening estate it is merged in the fee: Ryder v. Flanders, 80 M. 836.

That partners do not hold as tenants in common, see PARTNERSHIP, § 132.

As to partition and its incidents, see PARTITION.

I. OF REAL PROPERTY.

(a) In general.

Homestead may be claimed, see HOMESTEAD, § 26.

As to payment of taxes by a tenant in common and as to right to acquire tax-titles, see TAXES, §§ 421, 422, 709-718.

That a tenant in common not ousted cannot bring ejectment against his co-tenant, see EJECTMENT, § 22.

1. Husband and wife, to whom lands are conveyed by the same deed, are not tenants in common, or strictly joint tenants: Fisher v. Provin, 25 M. 347; Ætna Ins. Co. v. Resh, 40 M. 241; Manwaring v. Powell, 40 M. 371; Roediger v. Drain Commissioner, 40 M. 745; Jacobs v. Miller, 50 M. 119; Vinton v. Beamer, 55 M. 559.

2. Where lands are conveyed to persons named in fixed proportions, this shows them to be tenants in common so far as the documentary title goes, although such persons are copartners: Godfrey v. White, 48 M. 171, 177.

3. Where lands are conveyed or devised to two or more persons, and the instrument is silent as to the interest which each is to take, the presumption is that their interests are equal: Campau v. Campau, 44 M. 31; Jacobs v. Miller, 50 M. 119.

And see infra, §§ 49, 50.

4. But where the interests of each are not thus made apparent there can be no presumption that they are equal: Campau v. Campau, 44 M. 31.

5. A tenant in common cannot, as such, have any peculiar interest in any specific portion of the entire tract held in common: Tharp v. Allen, 46 M. 389.

6. Nor can one tenant in common, without the assent of his co-tenants, select a part of the tract held in common and hold it as his share: Campau v. Godfrey, 18 M. 27.

7. A woman repaired certain buildings that were the joint property of decedent and of her husband, but no express authority was shown from decedent to the husband to repair or to authorize the wife to repair. Held, that she could not recover from the estate for the repairs: Stackable v. Stackable, 65 M. 515.

8. Tenants in common of the whole estate can join in summary proceedings to recover possession: Moody v. Seaman, 46 M. 74.

9. Land whereon there was a hotel was sold by contract to C. and W., the latter of whom, while both were holding as tenants in common, transferred to defendant his interest under the contract and also a half interest in the hotel furniture, defendant agreeing to perform the original contract. W. assigned to C. his interest in the contract of assignment made with defendant, and also his interest in the original contract, and C. assigned to a party who tried to recover possession from defendant, though the latter was not in default upon the original contract, but had merely failed to pay for the furniture assigned by W. to him. Held, that defendant was rightfully in possession under the original contract by virtue of W.'s assignment and that he had never forfeited his right: Woods v. Burke, 67 M. 674.

10. Whatever a tenant in common takes by partition he takes practically as a purchaser from the aggregate tenancies: Tharp v. Allen, 46 M. 389.

11. A tenant in common whose interest becomes severed by partition is a purchaser for value of the interests of his co-tenants in the lands set apart to him: Campau v. Barnard, 25 M. 381.

(b) Use and occupation; rents; accounting.

12. One tenant in common of lands cannot, in the absence of any express promise, recover of his co-tenant for the use and occupation by the latter of the lands claimed in common; the right of each to occupy is one of the legal incidents of such tenancy, and it pervades the whole land; and one is not excluded by the failure of the other to occupy, but whatever he occupies in such case is in his own right and not under his co-tenant: Everts v. Beach, 31 M. 136; Wilmarth v. Palmer, 34 M. 347.

See, also, ASSUMPSIT, § 39.

13. Nor would an adverse holding by one tenant enable his co-tenants to recover for the use of the land; for such a holding is always fatal to recovery of rent: Wilmarth v. Palmer, 34 M. 347.

14. One in possession as tenant in common, in privity and full recognition of the title to the undivided interest not owned by himself, is bound to account to the owner of it; a promise by such tenant to pay rent to another on the assumption that the promisee has the outstanding interest cannot be enforced without proof that he has it. In an action on such a promise the burden is on the promisee of showing that the defendant's possession is in privity with himself or his predecessors in the title: Fuller v. Sweet, 30 M. 237.

15. As tenants in common are equally entitled to possession, one cannot be called on to account for the use of the land where no previous demand has been made by the other: Davis v. Filer, 40 M. 310.

16. As against the lessee, one of two joint lessors can collect and receipt for the entire rent, and apply it to the payment of the lessors' joint mortgage on the leased property; but he cannot, without authority, apply rent so collected to the payment of his co-lessor's indebtedness to the lessee, a company in which both are stockholders; and if he does so he must account for the rent as received: Miner v. Lorman, 70 M. 173.

17. A. and B., being tenants in common and joint lessors, A. conveyed part of his interest to C. Held that, until agreement between all the parties as to what share of the rent should be paid to C., A. and B. could collect the whole, and B. having received the rent must account to A. for half, it not appearing that C. had laid claim to his part: Ibid.

18. If a tenant in common in charge of property objects, in partition proceedings, to the appointment of a receiver, he cannot, pending further proceedings, charge for his services: Pierce v. Pierce, 55 M. 629.

(c) Ouster and adverse possession.

19. One tenant in common can oust another: Campau v. Dubois, 39 M. 274; Sands v. Davis, 40 M. 14.

20. A purchaser from one who holds merely an undivided interest in patented lands is not estopped from setting up an adverse claim which originated before his purchase against the remaining co-tenants of the other undivided interests: Sands v. Davis, 40 M. 14.

21. A tenant in common already rightfully in possession was held not estopped to deny the title of a wrongful claimant to the remaining interest, from whom he had as a supposed co-tenant taken a lease which had been regularly terminated by proper notice: Fuller v. Sweet, 30 M. 237.

22. A tenant in common who has entered upon half of the premises is not precluded from claiming the whole; such a tenant may buy the rest of the title: Chamberlain v. Ahrens, 55 M. 111.

23. The actual possession of a tenant in common will not be presumed adverse to that of his co-tenants: Campau v. Campau, 44 M. 31.

24. And his constructive possession in like manner is limited to his interest as tenant in common: Ibid.

25. Sole possession by one tenant in common is not presumed to be adverse to his co-tenant's rights; and those rights will not be affected unless such sole possession is under a claim of exclusive right, which claim must be clear and distinct and must be brought home to the knowledge of the co-tenants either by express notice or by implication; and if the latter, all doubt growing out of the nature and character thereof should be against an ouster: Ibid.: 45 M. 367.

26. Where one in occupation of land claiming under tax-titles takes a conveyance of an undivided portion of the original title, thus becoming a tenant in common with the other owners of such title, any presumption against an adverse holding by him thereafter may be overcome by evidence that the possession he then had continued under claim of exclusive right with the intention to exclude the other owners of such title from any right or interest: Cook v. Clinton, 64 M. 309.

27. On the facts as appearing in particular cases the hostile possession of a tenant in common was held to have continued so long as to bar a recovery against him by his co-tenants: Dubois v. Campau, 28 M. 304; Campau v. Dubois, 39 M. 274.

28. Where the grantee of one tenant in common receives a warranty deed of the entire land, and enters into possession in good faith, actually believing that he owns the land, such possession if continued for the statutory period will operate as an ouster of his grantor's co-tenants: Hightstone v. Burdette, 61 M. 54.

29. In ejectment between grantees of tenants in common, where defendant claimed title by adverse possession and that his entry under a warranty deed was an ouster of the co-tenants, it was held that the fact was for the jury to determine: Hightstone v. Burdette, 54 M. 329.

30. In ejectment between tenants in common it was held incumbent for plaintiff to prove ouster within the period of the statute of limitations, and that if he introduced evidence tending to that effect then the burden was shifted upon defendant to prove an actual ouster anterior to that period: Ibid.

(d) Conveyances and contracts.

31. A tenant in common cannot restrain his co-tenant from disposing of his interest to absentees or irresponsible persons: People v. Detroit City Treasurer, 8 M. 14.

32. Where an inheritance consists of several distinct freeholds, a tenant in common may convey his undivided interest in any one or more of them, and it may be sold on execution without reference to any of the other parcels: Butler v. Roys, 25 M. 53.

33. Without his co-tenants' consent one tenant cannot convey by metes and bounds a particular part as his share of the tract held in common: Campau v. Godfrey, 18 M. 27.

34. A conveyance by one tenant in common of a certain specified portion of the joint estate held in common is, at the furthest, voidable only as to the co-tenants, while it operates as an estoppel against the grantor and those claiming under him: Draper v. Williams, 2 M. 536.

As to effect of one tenant's grant to railroad of right of way as to his interest over the common estate, see RAILROADS, § 126.

35. A conveyance by one of two tenants in common of his interest in a tract of land will not necessarily terminate an authority derived from his co-tenant to sell timber on the tract: Wetherbee v. Green, 22 M. 311.

36. A contract whereby one tenant in common employs a person to cut timber on the common property is not on its face void because not showing the consent of the other owners. It will be presumed, if necessary to sustain it, that the consent of the others was had or was expected to be obtained: Barton v. Gray, 48 M. 164.

37. A minor son, occupying land as tenant in common with his mother and sister, has no right in himself, without their authority, to give, sell or otherwise transfer the timber on the land to a stranger or assent to his entry on the land to remove it. And for such entry the tenants in common can maintain trespass: Richey v. Brown, 58 M. 435.

38. A tenant in common sold his undivided interest to a third person, taking back a mortgage for the purchase money. His vendee and the co-tenant then made a voluntary partition, the vendee taking half and quitclaiming the other half which the co-tenant took, giving to the vendee a warranty deed of the first half and paying him $75 as the difference in value of the two parcels. Held, that no liability to pay the mortgage arose from the covenant in such warranty deed, but that the lien was simply transferred to the mort-gager's half of the premises, which thus became the primary security for the payment of the debt, and should have been first sold for that purpose: Webb v. Rowe, 35 M. 58.

39. An agreement whereby property owned in common is put in the name of one of the owners, to be held by him as trustee for the benefit of all parties, "subject to such decisions as the party may direct from time to time," gives him no right to sell the whole without the consent of all the owners; and a sale to a purchaser with notice conveys no more than the trustee's personal interest: Palmer v. Williams, 24 M. 328.

40. The fact that one acting in the sale of lands for himself and his co-tenants was instructed by the latter not to sell by the acre does not affect the right of a purchaser who bought that way to hold him liable for fraud in misrepresenting the quantity: Starkweather v. Benjamin, 32 M. 305.

(e) Mortgages.

41. A tenant in common of real estate can mortgage his interest to secure his individual indebtedness unless the real estate is partnership property: Ruppe v. Steinbach, 48 M. 465; Gordon v. Gordon, 49 M. 501.

42. And where the record title of two or more persons in the same land is that of tenants in common simply, a mortgagee from one without actual notice that the land is partnership property, or was bought with partnership funds, is not affected by undisclosed partnership equities or arrangements, even though a firm composed of the co-owners is using such land in a way, however, not inconsistent with the individual ownership of each as tenant in common: Hammond v. Paxton, 58 M. 393; Reynolds v. Ruckman, 35 M. 80; Adams v. Bradley, 12 M. 346.

43. Mortgages placed by tenants in common upon lands of which a partnership composed of such tenants has the use only do not cover trade fixtures set up by the partners: Robertson v. Corsett, 39 M. 777.

44. Where one of two tenants in common has paid his share of a joint mortgage, and the other has mortgaged his portion a second time, the former is entitled to a discharge, and the later mortgagee cannot have the first mortgage satisfied from the joint property, or postponed to his own on the ground that the release is in fraud of his right: Southworth v. Parker, 41 M. 198.

45. A mortgage given by two tenants in common was assigned, and the assignee, in collusion with one of the mortgagors, so foreclosed it by advertisement as to deprive the other of his opportunity to redeem. Held, that the latter would be entitled to relief in chancery had he not barred himself by laches and by receiving his share of the surplus: Norton v. Tharp, 53 M. 146.

II. OF PERSONAL PROPERTY.

(a) In general.

46. Part owners of a vessel are tenants in common: Sheehan v. Dalrymple, 19 M. 239; Wetherell v. Spencer, 3 M. 123.

47. Successive mortgagees agreeing that their liens shall stand on an equal footing become, after default and taking possession, tenants in common of the securities and the mortgaged chattels, and may jointly bring trespass for interference: Densmore v. Mathews, 58 M. 616.

48. Where securities are taken by husband and wife in their joint names, each having invested equally, the wife on her husband's death does not take by survivorship: Wait v. Bovee, 35 M. 425.

49. A conveyance of a chattel interest to two persons does not necessarily give them equal rights therein, and their actual interests as between themselves may be shown: Harrison v. Ingersoll, 56 M. 36.

50. A sale to two persons is presumed to inure to them equally, in the absence of a showing; and any one who knows of such an interest must know that it can only be transferred by its owner or by some one acting by the owner's authority: Keables v. Christie, 47 M. 595.

51. Where an owner of an undivided interest in goods mortgages them, an agreement by the other owner to pay the mortgage or an actual part payment will not of itself bring his own interest within the mortgage: Ibid.

52. The mixture, by consent, of grain of the same kind and value does not affect the right of property of either owner in his aliquot portion as against the other: Erwin v. Clark, 18 M. 10.

And further as to confusion of goods, see ACCESSION, ETC., §§ 4-21.

53. The authority of one co-tenant to make affidavit for civil warrant for wrongful conversion is presumed: Deitz v. Groesbeck, 33 M. 308.

(b) Ouster and conversion; remedies.

54. The assertion by a tenant in common in possession of the right of possession merely does not constitute a conversion; but a disinct claim of entire ownership, coupled with a refusal to recognize his co-tenant's rights amounts to an ouster and conversion and sustains trover: Bray v. Bray, 30 M. 479; Grove v. Wise, 39 M. 161.

55. If one tenant in common disposes of the property to his own use it is a conversion, and he is liable in trover for the value of his co-tenant's share: Webb v. Mann, 3 M. 189; Ripley v. Davis, 15 M. 75.

56. One J. put in wheat on shares on defendant's lands, and was to have possession of the land, and do other farm duties upon shares of other produce. As there was no proof that it was agreed that J.'s rights in the crops should be forfeited by non-fulfilment of any other conditions, and no evidence of damages from any such non-fulfilment, it was held, in a controversy between defendant and plaintiffs, to whom J. had mortgaged the crops while growing, that J. was clearly tenant in common of the crops: Fiquet v. Allison, 12 M. 328.

57. When the crops were ripened plaintiffs harvested them, but defendant threshed them, put them in his granary and refused to recognize any rights of plaintiffs therein. Held, that he was liable to plaintiffs for the value of their share in assumpsit: Ibid.

58. Where, after cancellation of a lease, the landlord told the tenant to put in and harvest wheat, promising that he should have his lawful share, they were tenants in common of the wheat, and if the landlord harvested and kept the wheat the tenant could maintain assumpsit on the common counts for his share: McLaughlin v. Salley, 46 M. 219.

59. One who has let a farm upon the lessee's agreement to deliver half the produce as rent is a tenant in common in respect to such produce, and can bring replevin for his share if the lessee refuses to deliver it after it is in condition: Sutherland v. Carter, 52 M. 471.

60. Where a farm was let on shares so that the parties were tenants in common of a crop of wheat, and where the lessee denied any right of the lessor to the harvested wheat about to be threshed, and refused to divide according to his agreement, it was held that the lessor could bring replevin for his share even though it was not threshed, and that the number of bushels named in the writ must be construed as referring to the quantity to be taken and not to the condition the grain was in after harvesting: Wattles v. Dubois, 67 M. 813 (Oct. 20, '87).

61. Tenants in common being equally entitled to possession, one cannot replevy from another a specific chattel: Wetherell v. Spencer, 8 M. 123; Kindy v. Green, 32 M. 810.

62. Especially where plaintiff has mortgaged his undivided interest to his co-tenant and has made no offer to redeem: Kline v. Kline, 49 M. 419.

63. Where A. and B. own lands in undivided interests one cannot maintain replevin against the other for logs cut from those lands: Busch v. Nester, 70 M. 525.

64. Where the defendant in replevin does not have or claim any interest in the other undivided portion of the personalty sued for he cannot raise the question that it was not divided before the writ issued: Crapo v. Seybold, 36 M. 444.

65. And a tenant in common who is entitled to the possession of an undivided interest may bring replevin against a wrong-doer who is a stranger to the title: McArthur v. Oliver, 60 M. 605.

66. One cannot maintain replevin for timber cut from lands to which he shows title to an undivided half only and does not show possession: Hess v. Griggs, 43 M. 397.

67. A tenant in common can bring trespass against a co-tenant who has wrongfully converted the common property: McClure v. Thorpe, 68 M. 33.

68. Where the lessor deprives the lessee of the use of the crop the latter may recover the crop, less the lessor's share under the lease; if the crop is depreciated through the lessor's negligence, the lessee may recover the amount of the depreciation less the lessor's labor in caring for and harvesting the crop: Ibid.

69. One tenant in common cannot bring trespass for a partial injury by his co-tenant to the common property: Wells v. Hollenbeck, 37 M. 504.

III. EFFECT OF TENDER.

IV. TENDER AFTER SUIT BROUGHT.

I. WHEN NECESSARY.

1. A party who declares positively, when another offers to pay him an alleged claim on behalf of a third person, that nothing is due him and that he will accept no money, thereby excuses any tender, and cannot afterward object that money was not particularly counted out and presented to him: Lacy v. Wilson, 24 M. 479.

2. Where a landlord elects to renew a lease, tender of a new lease is unnecessary if the tenant has declared that he will not accept a renewal: Darling v. Hoban, 58 M. 599.

3. In suit for the price of land conveyed to defendant by quitclaim, tender of reconveyance is unnecessary to admit defence that plaintiff falsely and fraudulently represented that he owned the land, whereas he had no title: Reeves v. Kelly, 30 M. 132.

4. Tender of performance by the vendee in a land contract is unnecessary prior to suit to recover back money paid on the contract where the vendor cannot make out title: Wright v. Dickinson, 67 M. 580.

5. A grantee by quitclaim need not tender reconveyance before suing his grantor for obtaining grantee's money by false representations as to title: Stockham v. Cheney, 62 M. 10.

6. But reconveyance must be tendered before one to whom land has been conveyed in exchange for goods can seek to repudiate the bargain for fraud and replevy the goods: Wilbur v. Flood, 16 M. 40.

7. Boot-money need not be tendered back before suing for breach of the implied warranty in a contract for the exchange of property: Hunt v. Sackett, 31 M. 18.

8. Before one who claims to have been defrauded by a compromise can sue upon the original contract he must tender back what he has received upon such compromise: Pangborn v. Continental Ins. Co., 67 M. 683 (Jan. 5, '88).

9. In a particular case plaintiff's omission to tender back money received from a benefit fund before suit in repudiation of a release and discharge was held unimportant: O'Neil v. Lake Superior Iron Co., 68 M. 690.

10. Tender back of amount received by principal from agent on sale to latter, who concealed facts, held unnecessary before suit to recover from latter excess received on sale to third party: Moore v. Mandlebaum, 8 M. 483.

11. Neglect to tender a reward offered for lost goods does not prevent replevying them from the finder: Wood v. Pierson, 45 M. 313.

12. Vendee's failure to tender performance before filing bill for specific performance of land contract affects costs only: Morris v. Hoyt, 11 M. 9.

13. Delay beyond a reasonable time by the vendor in a land contract in tendering deed is unimportant where the vendee retains general control of the land and makes no attempt to rescind: Curran v. Rogers, 35 M. 221.

14. Tender of the amount of a lien for keeping a horse need not be made before replevin by the holder of a valid prior chattel mortgage: Reynolds v. Case, 60 M. 76.

15. No formal tender to the holder of an invalid tax-title is required before filing a bill to remove such title (allegation of a certain offer held sufficient, see EQUITY, § 811): Hanscom v. Hinman, 30 M. 419.

That one who seeks equitable relief against excessive tax should tender what is just, see TAXES, §§ 556-562.

Waiver of tender of unearned premium to cancel policy, see INSURANCE, § 107.

Costs denied complainant for failure to make tender, see COSTS, § 234.

II. SUFFICIENCY.

(a) In general.

16. A tender must be of the full amount due; a partial tender is operative only when the creditor consents to receive it: Coots v. McConnell, 39 M. 742.

17. An insufficient tender is of no avail: Montague v. Dougan, 68 M. 98.

18. A tender in United States treasury notes is good if no objection is taken at the time to their being regarded as money: Fosdick v. Van Huse, 21 M. 567.

19. A tender made in greenbacks and fractional United States currency is sufficient, especially where no objection is made to it at the time: Beebe v. Knapp, 28 M. 53.

20. Evidence that tender was made in legal-tender greenbacks cannot be objected to on the score that the only proper course was to produce the thing tendered: Ibid.

21. One dollar in money is in law equivalent to any other dollar, and in tendering back money in rescinding a transaction it is immaterial whether or not the bills tendered back are the identical ones received: M. C. R. Co. v. Dunham, 30 M. 128.

22. A tender partly in money which is not a legal tender need not be accepted: Richards v. White, 44 M. 622.

23. A tender partly in bank-notes cannot be insisted on if rejected for that reason: Waldron v. Murphy, 40 M. 663.

24. A tender of current bank-bills to a constable holding an execution would protect the defendant in the execution against the creditor, unless they were refused as not being constitutional money: Welch v. Frost, 1 M. 30.

25. A tender need not be divided to meet separate claims where they are all held by one person. Where more is demanded than is due the person making the tender cannot be put in the wrong by requiring him at his peril to separate just from unjust charges: Johnson v. Cranage, 45 M. 14.

26. A tender for the purpose of cancelling a judgment should include both damages and costs. A tender of damages with the clerk's receipt for the costs is not sufficient: Thurber v. Jewett, 8 M. 295.

27. A mere offer to pay whatever shall be ascertained to be necessary to discharge a litigated demand without taking any steps to find out beyond preparing a receipt in blank purporting to discharge the judgment when in fact none has been entered is no proper tender of payment: Chase v. Welsh, 45 M. 345.

28. A tender of simple interest is not necessarily sufficient after default in payments on land contract: Richards v. White, 44 M. 623.

29. One who seeks to obtain the discharge of a chattel mortgage or an assignment thereof or subrogation to the mortgagee's rights must tender not only the amount due on the mortgage but the expenses already necessarily incurred towards foreclosing it: Shutes v. Woodard, 57 M. 213.

30. Where a mortgagee of chattels after abating his claim assigns the mortgage to a third person who pays him what he demands, and the assignee holds the mortgage for the amount that he has paid with interest, a tender of that amount will discharge the lien and give the mortgager plenary right of possession, which will not depend on keeping the tender good: Stewart v. Brown, 48 M. 383.

31. A tender by one tenant in common was held insufficient on a bill in equity to avoid a collusive foreclosure, because it did not include the whole amount of the surplus but only his share: Norton v. Tharp, 53 M. 146.

32. The evidence in support of a tender should be very clear and satisfactory, and should place the other party distinctly in the wrong where the discharge of a mortgage is demanded on the ground thereof: Potts v. Plaisted, 30 M. 149; Engle v. Hall, 45 M. 57.

33. And in such cases the tender should be fair and distinct, without mystery or ambiguity, and should not be so made as to lead the mortgagee to believe that the purpose is to buy up the security: Proctor v. Robinson, 35 M. 284.

34. Tender of performance of an agreement will not operate to extinguish the lien by which the agreement is secured if it is not unequivocal and reasonably capable of being understood by the other party as a bona fide tender of the requisite thing, act or service; and the offer itself should be accompanied by circumstances fairly implying control of the necessary means, and possession of the necessary ability to fulfill it: Selby v. Hurd, 51 M. 1.

35. Leaving deed at agreed place and time, other party not appearing, held a sufficient tender (see SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE, § 155): Daily v. Litchfield, 10 M. 29.

As to sufficiency of tender to boom company, see LIENS, § 108.

(b) By and to whom.

36. A tender is properly refused if made by one who is a stranger to the transaction between the parties, who has no rights therein and who does not act in the interest or at the request of the debtor or obligor: Sinclair v. Learned, 51 M. 335.

37. So a mortgagee may refuse a tender made by one who merely holds by a tax-deed not subject to the mortgage: Ibid.

38. A creditor cannot lawfully refuse a tender by an agent duly authorized, if he has reasonable opportunity to learn the agent's authority: Eslow v. Mitchell, 26 M. 500.

39. The tender of a title which satisfies in other respects the requirements of a stipulation in a land contract is not objectionable because coming not directly from the party to the contract but from a third person: Kimball v. Goodburn, 32 M. 10.

40. A tender to be valid must be made to the creditor or some one authorized to act for him. It is insufficient if made to a mere servant of the creditor: Thurber v. Jewett, 8 M. 295.

41. Where two persons are both interested, a tender to either is sufficient, especially if both are present. The question whether such a tender was to one or the other or both may go to the jury if material: Beebe v. Knapp, 28 M. 53.

(c) Time and place.

42. A person to whom a tender is made is allowed a reasonable time to ascertain his rights and to compute the amount due: Potts v. Plaisted, 30 M. 149; Proctor v. Robinson, 35 M. 284; Root v. Bradley, 49 M. 27; Post v. Springsted, 49 M. 90.

43. A tender made without notice at an unfit place may be properly declined until the creditor can have reasonable time to examine the account: Waldron v. Murphy, 40 M. 668; Parks v. Allen, 42 M. 482.

44. A tender to satisfy a claim in litigation is not good if made in the street without any computation or means of computation that would not require delay, and on the idea that the claim is in judgment, when no judgment has been entered, and when no costs have been or could regularly have been taxed: Chase v. Welsh, 45 M. 345.

(d) Conditions.

45. A tender may be coupled with such conditions as the party making it has a right to impose; such as that he shall receive what a payment or tender legally made would entitle him to: Johnson v. Cranage, 45 M. 14; Brink v. Freoff, 40 M. 610, 44 M. 69.

46. But a tender coupled with an improper condition does not operate to put the other party in fault: Wilson v. Wagar, 26 M. 452.

47. And such a tender cannot destroy a security accompanying the debt sought to be paid: Dodge v. Brewer, 81 M. 227.

48. A tender coupled with a claim of an allowance not lawfully demandable will not discharge a security: Sager v. Tupper, 35 M. 184.

49. A tender of payment of a mortgage should be absolute and unconditional, not dependent on the mortgagee's first executing a receipt or discharge: Potts v. Plaisted, 30 M. 149.

50. Where a tender, sufficient in amount to discharge a mechanic's lien for the repair of personal property, was made on condition that the property be delivered up, and the only objection made to the tender was that the amount was insufficient, held, that the tender was not vitiated by the condition: Moynahan v. Moore, 9 M. 9.

(e) Keeping tender good.

51. One who sends a check in payment, which is rejected by the other party, and who thereupon receives it back, cannot claim the benefit of a formal tender, even though previous payments in the same matter were made in the same way and were received without objection; and this is especially so where nothing was done afterwards that would have kept good a formal tender had one been made: Browning v. Crouse, 40 M. 339.

52. When a vendee, under a land contract, tenders money in performance of his obligation, the vendor has no right to the money except upon the condition of a simultaneous delivery of the deed; and therefore, in an action against the vendor for the breach of such a contract, it is not necessary to show that the tender has been kept good: Allen v. Atkinson, 21 M. 351.

53. One who makes a sufficient tender to discharge a mechanic's lien for the repair of personal property, and then brings replevin for the property, is not obliged, in order to keep the tender good, to bring the money into court. The lien being discharged by the tender the lien-holder must thereafter rely upon his employer's personal responsibility: Moynahan v. Moore, 9 M. 9.

54. A sufficient tender of the amount due upon a mortgage having been made, it need not be kept good in order to discharge the mortgage and to defeat foreclosure: Caruthers v. Humphrey, 12 M. 270; Van Husan v. Kanouse, 18 M. 308; Potts v. Plaisted, 30 M. 149.

55. The right to the production in court of a money tender is presumed to have been waived if it was not called for; and in a case made, where only so much of the record is given as the parties see fit, its non-production will not be presumed for the purpose of establishing error in the proceedings: Wetherbee v. Kusterer, 41 M. 359.

56. Where a second mortgagee on seeking to redeem from a prior mortgage tendered the proper amount on demanding an assignment of the mortgage, and renewed the tender when the senior mortgagee began foreclosure proceedings, it was held that he was not justly chargeable with costs for omitting to keep good the tender in a bill to enforce his right to redeem: Lamb v. Jeffrey, 41 M. 719, 47 M. 28.

(f) Objections.

57. Objection to the mode of tender must be made at the time of the tender: Browning v. Crouse, 40 M. 339.

58. The holder of a security upon which a party authorized makes a tender is not concerned where or on what terms the person tendering the money obtained it so long as he could have got payment by accepting the tender: Eslow v. Mitchell, 26 M. 500.

59. Where the tender of security required by a contract was refused upon some other ground than that it was not made payable at the proper time, it was presumed, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, that the time of payment was according to the contract: Wilson v. Wagar, 26 M. 452.

60. Where a tender was made upon a chattel mortgage of an award and a stated amount in money, and the amount in money, through an error in computation, was too small, but the mortgagee supposed it to be correct and refused the tender, not on that ground, but because he claimed that he was not bound to receive the award, the fact of the deficiency in money was not allowed to prejudice the mortgager when the award was held good on bill to redeem: Flanders v. Chamberlain, 24 M. 305.

III. EFFECT OF TENDER.

61. When tender is regular and is completed by payment into court a verdict for the amount of it is not proper: Wetherbee v. Kusterer, 41 M. 359.

62. Tender of payment to creditor of money due on note discharges a guarantor: Sears v. Van Dusen, 25 M. 851.

63. Tender to a carrier of the freight, less damage done to the goods, discharges the lien for freight: Bancroft v. Peters, 4 M. 619.

64. A tender, regularly and lawfully made, discharges a lien, and while the debt is not thereby discharged without payment, yet the security is destroyed at once: Fuller v. Parrish, 3 M. 211; Moynahan v. Moore, 9 M. 9; Caruthers v. Humphrey, 12 M. 270; Van Hulan v. Kanouse, 13 M. 308; Flanders v. Chamberlain, 24 M. 305; Eslow v. Mitchell, 26 M. 500; Potts v. Plaisted, 30 M. 149; Sager v. Tupper, 35 M. 134; Fry v. Russell, 35 M. 229; Stewart v. Brown, 48 M. 383.

65. A mortgagee's lien is lost by evading tender of payment: Ferguson v. Popp, 42 M. 115.

66. If the refusal to accept a tender is not absolute or unreasonable does not necessarily discharge a security: Waldron v. Murphy, 40 M. 668.

67. A tender stops interest, but does not discharge the debt: Cowles v. Marble, 87 M. 158.

68. A sufficient tender stops interest: Jones v. Shaw, 56 M. 332.

69. By tender and payment into court defendant admits that he owes the sum tendered and paid, and that plaintiff is entitled to it; and defendant cannot regain it though it should turn out that he was not indebted at all: Thompson v. Townsend, 41 M. 346.

70. Tender by defendant of an amount actually due is not an admission of indebtedness to a larger amount claimed by plaintiff: Kennedy v. Nims, 52 M. 153.

71. In an action for the price of running logs it appeared that a third person not a party to the action bought the greater part of the logs from defendant, and that it was arranged between plaintiffs and defendant that such third person should pay plaintiffs, retaining the amount out of the purchase money due defendant. Held, that a tender by such third person to plaintiffs was a tender by and on behalf of defendant and would not make such third person plaintiff's debtor or discharge defendant's liability: Keystone Lumber, etc. Co. v. Jenkinson, 69 M. 220.

72. One who bases his claim to relief on a tender made and kept good must keep to his offer and cannot raise the question of usury: Canfield v. Conkling, 41 M. 371.

73. Where a chattel mortgagee has wrongfully sold the goods and parted with their possession, a tender by the mortgager of the amount due, together with a demand for return of the goods, is a mere idle ceremony and does not affect the position of the parties: Brink v. Freoff, 40 M. 610, 44 M. 69.

74. Where a tender of the amount due on a purchase-money mortgage was refused because it did not include the amount of an attorney fee claimed to be due, but afterwards the party waived such fee and offered a discharge which was accepted, the mortgager saying he would take his own time to pay in, held, that this was a recognition of the mortgagee's right to payment, and that the amount was recoverable under the common counts: Fry v. Russell, 35 M. 229.

75. Where defendant had tendered the difference between the claim against him and a set-off to which he was entitled, and had kept his tender good, costs of all courts were deducted from the judgment against him: Smith v. Curtiss, 38 M. 398.

76. Refusal by the owner of lands sought to be condemned for railroad use to accept a tender does not put him in fault so as to deprive him of costs or subject him to costs: Toledo, A. A. & G. T. R. Co. v. Dunlap, 47 M. 456.

77. The tender of money as rent, after a dispute as to the existence of an agreement to lease, does not tend to prove the agreement: Gilbert v. Kennedy, 22 M. 117.

Effect of tender as discharging ATTACHMENT, see that title, § 119.

IV. TENDER AFTER SUIT BROUGHT.

78. Whether in an action for the breach of a contract and not for a sum certain the defendant may tender a sum in satisfaction under the statute after suit brought, quere. Where he offered evidence of such a tender which the court excluded, and the jury returned a verdict for a larger sum, held, that whether the evidence was admissible or not, yet as the verdict showed he was not injured by its exclusion the judgment would not be disturbed: Hollister v. Brown, 19 M. 163.

79. Where in a suit in a justice's court for unliquidated damages the defendant has made a tender of a sum of money on the trial, and on its being refused has paid it into court, the acceptance of this money from the justice by the plaintiffs after judgment and appeal is not a bar to a recovery of a larger sum under the pending issue upon the appeal on the basis of an accepted tender in court; and where by the rulings the defendant is allowed the benefit of the money so received by plaintiffs as payment in the claim in suit, he is not damnified: McKercher v. Curtis, 85 M. 478.

80. The effect of a tender made during suit or before judgment must always depend more or less on the views of the court, and rarely affects anything but the liability for costs. It cannot discharge the debt until paid: Chase v. Welsh, 45 M. 345.

81. Tender after suit brought must conform to H. S. §§ 7764-65, which does not allow it to bar further prosecution, but only to stop interest and costs and subject the plaintiff to subsequent costs, and contemplates that it may be shown on the trial: Snyder v. Quarton, 47 M. 211.

82. Plaintiff sued in the circuit court for $175. Defendant tendered and paid into court and plaintiff took out of court the sum of $155. Held, that if plaintiff failed to prove herself entitled to more than $155, defendant should have full costs; but if she proved a right to more than that sum she should have full costs: Thompson v. Townsend, 41 M. 846.

83. Tender of amount due before a particular inquisition in chancery justifies deduction of the costs of such inquisition from the amount found: Tucker v. Tucker, 27 M. 204.

TIME.

1. Fractions of a day are not as a general rule regarded in computing time: Sherlock v. Thayer, 4 M. 355; Draper v. Tooker, 16 M. 74; Blanck v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 44 M. 98; Griffin v. Forrest, 49 M. 309; Angell v. Pickard, 61 M. 561; People v. Cox, 70 M. 247 (May 11, '88).

2. Yet the law recognizes parts of a day in a question of fact involving the possession of property: Angell v. Pickard, 61 M. 561.

3. Where a date is given both as a day of the week and a day of the month, and the two are inconsistent, the day of the month must govern: Ingersoll v. Kirby, W. 27.

4. When time is to be computed "from" or "next after" a date or act done the day of the date or act is not to be counted: Sallee v. Ireland, 9 M. 154; Gorham v. Wing, 10 M. 486; Warren v. Slade, 23 M. 1; Everts v. Fisk, 44 M. 515.

5. If an act is to be done a certain number of days before a given day, that day is not to be counted: Sallee v. Ireland, 9 M. 154.

6. Where a statute prescribes that a process or notice shall be served a certain number of days before the return day or before the day of hearing, both the day of service and the day of the return or hearing must be excluded in computing the time: Dousman v. O'Malley, 1 D. 450; Sallee v. Ireland, 9 M. 154; Arnold v. Nye, 23 M. 286; Powers' Appeal, 29 M. 504; Platt v. Highway Commissioner, 88 M. 247; Taylor v. Burnap, 39 M. 739; Lane v. Burnap, 39 M. 736; Everts v. Fisk, 44 M. 515.

7. The mode of computing time under rules of practice is always exclusive of the first day, unless the peculiar wording of the rule would include it: Warren v. Slade, 23 M. 1.

8. The general rule in regard to notices includes the day of performance and excludes the day from which notice begins to run. So, where publication for twelve weeks is required, the day of the first publication is not counted, while that of sale is: Gantz v. Toles, 40 M. 725.

9. A statutory requirement of a notice "at least ten days before the making of the application" means only that notice shall be given as early as the tenth day before the application is made. The computation excludes the first and includes the last day, taking no notice of fractions: Arnold v. Nye, 23 M. 286; Eaton v. Peck, 26 M. 57.

10. Where, by court rule, a writ may be made returnable in not less than twenty days, the date of issue is excluded and that of return included; a writ issued August 30 is properly made returnable September 19: Doyle v. Mizner, 41 M. 549.

11. Where the statute requires an act to be done within a certain number of days (not less than a week) Sunday must be reckoned as one day though it happens to be the last day; and action that must be taken within forty days cannot be taken on the forty-first day though the fortieth is Sunday: Drake v. Andrews, 2 M. 203.

12. In the construction of rules of court in relation to pleading and other mere matters of practice, if the last day falls on Sunday it seems the party has the whole of the next day to perform the act required: Ibid.

13. Where by statute an act is required to be done in any number of days less than a week, it seems that an intervening Sunday is to be excluded: Ibid.

14. So, an intervening Sunday is not to be counted in the two days that must intervene between the issue and the return of a justice's short summons: Simonson v. Durfee, 50 M. 80.

15. But where the statute requires a justice to render judgment within four days, a judgment on the fifth day is void though the fourth day was Sunday: Harrison v. Sager, 27 M. 476.

16. And where an appeal from a justice is to be taken within five days after judgment, the fact that the fifth day is Sunday does not authorize an appeal on the sixth: Dale v. Lavigne, 81 M. 149.

17. In notices required by the rules of court, when Sunday is an intervening day it is to be included in computing the time: Anderson v. Baughman, 6 M. 298; Corey v. Hiliker, 15 M. 314.

18. An order of court requiring payment of money within a stated number of days means so many days after service, and it should be so stated: Davis v. Davis, 39 M. 221.

19. Where no time is prescribed in which an act required by statute is to be done, it must be done within a reasonable time: Attorney-General v. Bank of Michigan, H. 315.

Further as to time, reasonable time, Sunday, see those headings in the Index.

VIII. ACTIONS BY AND AGAINST.

Townships as factors in organizing new counties, see COUNTIES, §§ 1-6.

As to DRAINS and HIGHWAYS in townships, see those titles.

I. ORGANIZATION, DIVISION, ETC.

1. The legislature cannot deprive qualified voters of a county of the right of suffrage by organizing townships in a portion thereof only, leaving the remainder unorganized: People v. Maynard, 15 M. 463.

2. A township is not completely organized for the assessment, levy and collection of taxes until the election of its proper officers: Comins v. Harrisville, 45 M. 442.

3. The constitutional power of the board of supervisors to organize new townships is subject to legislative restrictions; and the legislature in organizing a township may or may not authorize the board of supervisors to act; but in conferring authority upon the board it does not deprive itself of its original power, and any legislation inconsistent with the action of the supervisors avoids such action: Attorney-General v. Marr, 55 M. 445.

4. Therefore act 394 of 1879, discontinuing the township of Sherman, which was composed of four cornering sections taken from four cornering townships in Wexford county, was enough to invalidate the contemporaneous action of the board of supervisors in establishing the township of Concord, to consist in part of the former township of Sherman: Ibid.

5. The constitutional power of the board of supervisors to divide towns or to erect new ones, although such action would have the effect to change or alter the boundaries of a school district having a union school, is not abridged by a statute declaring that the boundaries of such districts shall not be changed without the written consent of the majority of the district board of the district: People v. Ryan, 19 M. 203.

6. Where, after the passage of an act organizing a township, the board of supervisors undertook to organize two other townships out of that organized by the legislature, on a petition which showed on its face that no freeholders of the township organized by the legislature joined in it, held, that such action could not stand in the way of the legislative organization: Attorney-General v. Rice, 64 M. 385.

7. The power of the board of supervisors to divide a township depends on the performance of the conditions of H. S. §§ 486, 487, without which there is no jurisdiction; and the board's action is void unless the statutory requirements as to the application—which must be signed by at least twelve freeholders of the township or townships to be affected—and as to the notice of such application are strictly complied with: Scrafford v. Gladwin Supervisors, 41 M. 647.

8. The notice must be posted and published during the four weeks immediately preceding the week in which the meeting of the board is held; and it must state the time and place of the meeting, at least if the meeting is a special one. The proof of posting must state the time and place when and where the notices were posted: Ibid.

9. The "notice in writing" required by H. S. § 487 to be posted may be printed, and so, if properly authenticated, may the names attached thereto: Pelton v. Ottawa Supervisors, 53 M. 517.

10. In proceedings before boards of supervisors for organizing new townships, the strict rules of law governing the introduction of evidence in courts cannot be insisted upon. An affidavit of publication of notice of the application, made by the person who posted such notice, held sufficient if acted upon by the board: Matthews v. Otsego Supervisors, 48 M. 587. See EVIDENCE, § 880.

11. Where notices of the hearing of an application to alter township boundaries are shown to have been seasonably given, it is immaterial that an affidavit showing that the notices were posted on different specified days does not show on which day the first was posted: Pelton v. Ottawa Supervisors, 52 M. 517.

12. The map which petitioners for a change in township boundaries are required by H. S. § 486 to furnish to the board of supervisors need not show the full topography of all the townships to be affected; it is enough to give the boundaries and sections or parts of sections for each, together with the place and course of any natural boundaries, if any, that are to be established as limits: Ibid.

13. If a petition for the organization of a township is regular on its face, and is presented with due notice and in compliance with all legal requirements, the action of the board of supervisors upon it is political and final: Attorney-General v. Page, 38 M. 286.

As to review of organization, see CERTIORARI, §§ 86, 127, 128; QUO WARRANTO, §§ 14, 51.

14. An organization effected under a valid statute by the proper body of electors or officers is to be presumed regular where there has been a substantial compliance with the policy of the law: Clement v. Everest, 29 M. 19.

15. Where under a statute townships have been organized, and have acted and been recognized by the authorities for several years, it is too late to inquire into the validity of the statute providing for their organization: People v. Maynard, 15 M. 463.

16. When a corporate existence, irregular in its origin, becomes regular by lapse of time and public acquiescence, it cannot be disputed: Scrafford v. Gladwin Supervisors, 41 M. 648.

17. But the state cannot be estopped by long acquiescence in the action of a board of supervisors establishing a township, no matter how regular such action, if in the original instance the board did not have the power to establish the particular township: Attorney-General v. Marr, 53 M. 446.

18. A township wholly within the limits of another, and illegally organized by the board of supervisors, can hardly be even a corporation de facto, since two corporations de facto cannot occupy the same ground at the same time, and all the authorities within the county have notice of the public acts of the board of supervisors: Scrafford v. Gladwin Supervisors, 41 M. 648.

19. A township continues in existence notwithstanding a part of its territory is detached by the division of the county in which it lies: but the territory cut off, until newly organized or attached to some other township, ceases to have any township existence: People v. Maynard, 15 M. 463.

20. Where the legislature, in setting off a new county from an old one, divided a township, but passed an act impliedly recognizing its continued existence in one of the counties and attaching the rest to a township in the other county, it was held that the township organization was not destroyed: Bay County v. Bullock, 51 M. 544.

21. A township's legal identity and property rights and liabilities remain unchanged after its division, so far as corporate existence is concerned, unless otherwise provided by statute: Board of Health v. East Saginaw, 45 M. 257; Courtright v. Brooks Township Clerk, 54 M. 182.

22. An unorganized county attached for judicial purposes to a township in an organized county is to be deemed a part of such township for all legal purposes: Johnston v. Cathro, 51 M. 80.

22a. Judicial notice is taken of a statute organizing a township and of the existence of a particular township: Ives v. Kimball, 1 M. 308; La Grange v. Chapman, 11 M. 499; Wright v. Dunham, 18 M. 414; People v. Maynard, 15 M. 463; Bouchard v. Bourassa, 57 M. 8; People v. Waller, 70 M. 237 (May 11, '88).

II. POWERS.

23. Towns are mere political organizations, created wholly by statute, for certain purposes of local government. They are vested with no franchises or special privileges for their own benefit. They have only such powers as the statute confers, and are subject to no obligations except such as are derived from statutory provisions: Niles Highway Commissioners v. Martin, 4 M. 557.

24. Townships can exercise no powers except such as are expressly granted to them, or such as are fairly implied in or incident to those expressly granted, or such as are essential to the declared objects or purposes of the corporation: Attorney-General v. Burrell, 81 M. 25.

25. Under our constitution each township is a separate municipality, whose officers are elected by town residents and are themselves residents. One town or its officers cannot interfere with the management of public affairs in others, or levy taxes against them or their people; and power to do so cannot be inferred from general language in a statute: Drain Commissioner v. Baxter, 57 M. 127. And see DRAINS, §§ 6-8.

26. Where one township is set off from another it seems that the latter is entitled to assess, levy and collect township and school taxes until the organization of the former is completed by electing officers: Comins v. Harrisville, 45 M. 442.

27. One township is not authorized to bind another which has been set off from it in any proceeding upon a cause of action which arose before the division; and the latter township is not bound if it is not a party to the judgment: Pierson v. Reynolds, 49 M. 224.

28. In any proceeding for contribution between townships, one of which has been set off from another, the inquiry must always involve the actual existence and binding character of the obligation as existing at the time of the division: Ibid.

29. Where railroad aid-bonds were voted by a township with a condition precedent to their delivery that the road should not only be in running order, but an equivalent amount of the company's stock should be delivered to the township treasurer, and before this was done a new township was set off from the one which voted the bonds, it was held that until this exchange there were no contract relations with the company, and that, even if the bonds had been valid, a judgment against the old township for the amount could not bind the new township: Beeman v. Black, 49 M. 598.

30. The electors of a township voted at their annual meeting to raise a tax to buy land for a public common; it does not appear that any opposition was made — the tax was levied and collected without objection, and the land was conveyed to the township on the faith of these proceedings and of an order of the township board for the amount of the purchase price. Held, that where a portion of the money has been paid over on such order, and the rest is in the hands of the township treasurer ready to be paid over, an injunction cannot lawfully be issued to restrain the payment of the residue, whether or not the electors were authorized to vote the tax, or the officers to levy it. The abuse of corporate power should be very clear to justify the state's exercise of its visitatorial authority upon a complaint made at so advanced a stage of the proceedings: Attorney-General v. Burrell, 81 M. 25.

31. The power conferred upon townships by H. S. § 670 to buy and hold land "for the public use of the inhabitants" is not confined to cases of absolute necessity for governmental purposes; under it the township may purchase and hold grounds for a public park, even within an incorporated village within the township. The enforcement of village police regulations over the grounds would not interfere with township control: Ibid.

32. The act of March 18, 1865, did not authorize the townships of Jackson county to refund advances for military bounties made by individuals on their own account and not in reliance upon some formal or informal action of the township or its authorities: Miller v. Grandy, 18 M. 540; People v. Blackman, 14 M. 336.

33. And, independently of statutory authority, any vote to refund such individual advances, or to assume individual undertakings to pay such bounties, is unauthorized and void: Ibid.

34. A township meeting cannot by vote of the electors audit private claims against the township: People v. Onondaga Supervisor, 16 M. 254.

35. The electors cannot vote money to reimburse the township treasurer for moneys stolen from him; nor can the legislature authorize the raising of money for that purpose: Bristol v. Johnson, 84 M. 128.

36. Under the statutes of 1838, townships had authority to vote to raise money for building bridges upon the report of the highway commissioners; also to raise money for the destruction of Canada thistles; also to raise a sum for contingent expenses generally, without specifying for what particular purposes: Tread v. Metcalf, 4 M. 579.

37. Act 98 of 1867, in empowering townships to raise money by tax or loan for repairing bridges, does not warrant resorting to both methods at one time to raise the full amount which both together would produce. And if any voter votes for both modes of levy his ballots neutralize each other: Loomis v. Rogers, 53 M. 135.

38. The payment by the township authorities of money to employ a night-watchman in an unincorporated village forming part of the township, containing ten or twelve saloons, such payment being made from the liquor tax derived from such saloons, is not an illegal expenditure of township money: Peninsula Iron Co. v. Crystal Falls, 60 M. 510.

III. LIABILITIES.

39. A township charge is any fixed amount that is a fixed liability of the township and entitled to be paid. But the charges that the inhabitants of a township are authorized by H. S. § 671 to provide for by vote are not necessarily liabilities existing; they are merely estimated sources of expenditure which may or may not include fixed debts: Marathon v. Oregon, 8 M. 372.

40. And the term "township expenses" usually applies to the ordinary expenses of township government, and does not include expenditures for schools, to pay judgments, etc.: Upton v. Kennedy, 36 M. 215.

41. The county of C. issued bonds to aid in procuring enlistments in the army, and by resolution provided that each town might, if it saw fit, receive a number of the bonds proportioned to its quota of men to be raised. The towns took the bonds. Held, that each town must be regarded as borrowing the bonds, and must provide for the payment of those taken; and that any money paid by the county for principal or interest on a bond must be refunded by the township to which it was loaned: People v. Porter, 18 M. 101.

42. Although as to the holders the county would be debtor in such bonds, yet as between the county and the towns the latter would be principal debtors: Ibid.

43. Under C. L. 1871. §§ 927-936, authorizing the payment of bounties to volunteers, etc., the bonds provided for were on the footing of established liabilities against the township, and to be presented, like other claims for orders on the treasury, to the township board; and payment might be enforced, not by action against the township, but by mandamus against the town officers, in case of refusal to do their duty in this regard: Dayton v. Rounds, 27 M. 32.

44. Where after the division of a township the township boards have met and determined the amount of indebtedness to be paid by the new township, such amount is a fixed and liquidated demand against such new township, which it is the duty of its township board to allow and to issue an order on the township treasurer therefor: Marathon v. Oregon, 8 M. 372.

45. If any power exists to review the proceedings of the board in making the adjustment it is by certiorari, and such remedy would be lost by lapse of time: Ibid.

46. Where the supervisors divided a township into two towns, giving to one a new name while the other retained the old, it was held that the old corporation remained in existence and was liable upon a judgment recovered against it after the division upon a tort that arose before, even though the statute was inadequate in such case for the enforcement of the old township's equities against the new (mandamus issued, see MANDAMUS, § 202): Courtright v. Brooks Township Clerk, 54 M. 182.

47. The legislature has no power to decide that a certain claim against a township is just and to direct a supervisor to levy a tax for its collection: People v. Onondaga Supervisor, 16 M. 254.

48. Boards of supervisors have no general power to establish claims in favor of the county against townships: People v. Wright, 19 M. 351.

49. A new township is not liable, under any general provision of the law, for the debts of a school district upon a part of whose territory it was erected, and from which it was thereby severed: People v. Ryan, 19 M. 203.

50. A township is not liable for interest on damages appraised for laying out highway: People v. La Grange, 2 M. 187.

51. A township was sued on the following instrument: "The commissioners of highways of the township of R. will pay the bearer twenty-two dollars when funds in road district number three and four;" dated, and signed by the commissioners. Held, that it was not a warrant or order upon the township treasurer under S. L. 1841, p. 149, § 5, but a draft drawn by the commissioners upon themselves, and that an action could not be sustained upon it against the township: Monroe v. Rowland, 1 M. 318.

52. The township board will not be compelled to levy a tax on the township for the payment of highway orders drawn upon its treasurer, payable out of moneys belonging to one of the road districts, where the township has not had the benefit of the district fund by misappropriation or otherwise: People v. Zilwaukie, 10 M. 274.

53. Moneys raised by tax upon a township for a work of internal improvement, and to be applied thereto by a state board, are not township moneys, even though the township treasurer is the officer designated by law to collect them; and the treasurer, and not the township, is liable for them if collected: Anderson v. Hill, 54 M. 477.

54. Highway commissioners have no authority to involve the township in debt at their discretion for building bridges: Hosier v. Higgins Township Board, 45 M. 340.

55. A township cannot be held liable for a bridge built by a bidder to whom the contract therefor had been awarded but who failed to give the security required by H. S. § 1414 for the performance of the work, such bridge not having been accepted or used by the township: Mackey v. Columbus, 71 M. — (July 11, '88).

56. The use of a bridge by the people of a township when travelling upon a public highway cannot be construed as an act of acceptance of the work done in building the bridge: Taymouth v. Koehler, 35 M. 22.

57. A township is not bound by the joint action of its highway commissioner with one of another township in contracting for a bridge on that part of the highway between the two towns which had been allotted to the other town; nor does its knowledge that the work was going on or the use by its inhabitants of the bridge validate the contract: Wrought Iron Bridge Co. v. Jasper, 68 M. 441 (Feb. 2, '88).

58. A contract by highway commissioners to pay for a sewer in an incorporated village within its limits is void, and does not bind the township, nor does partial payment amount to a valid ratification: Sault Ste. Marie Highway Commissioners v. Van Dusan, 40 M. 429.

59. A township is not responsible for the defaults and misconduct of its drain commissioner in the performance of his statutory duties: Dawson v. Aurelius, 49 M. 479.

That a township has nothing to do with the money raised from drain taxes, cannot be sued therefor, and is not a proper defendant in a bill for relief against such taxes, see DRAINS, §§ 97-99, 107.

60. The township treasurer is an officer and agent of the township in collecting such taxes as would be retained in the township treasury after paying to the county treasurer the state and county taxes, and the township is liable to one who has been wrongfully taxed for the amount received from him, even though it has been paid out from the township treasury on orders from the proper school and highway authorities. And township orders received in the township treasury as money on collection of taxes are equivalent to money and must be accounted for in the same way: Byles v. Golden, 53 M. 612.

61. Mandamus to compel the payment of a township order based on a settlement claimed to have been erroneous was limited to the amount conceded in the answer to be due, no issue of fact having been made: Murphy v. Reeder, 57 M. 419.

62. The costs and expenses of one who proceeds by information on his own account, and not by direction of the township, to establish his right to the office of supervisor, are a personal debt, and the township is under no legal liability to defray them or reimburse him with the amount: Scott v. Bingham Township Board, 33 M. 492.

63. Where a township collected taxes from liquor dealers within a village, which taxes the village was entitled to and might have collected, the township was held liable to the village; but, as it had used the money, present payment in money was excused, and the village was held, on mandamus, entitled to a township order: Decatur v. Decatur Town Board, 33 M. 335.

64. Where a township treasurer defaults in paying over money due the county, the township is liable to the county, but such liability is to be enforced by mandamus to have the amount of taxes re-assessed against the township; and this remedy is not barred by an adverse judgment in a suit on such treasurer's bond: Hart v. Oceana, 44 M. 417.

65. Nor is it a defence that the amount actually collected by the defaulter was less than the whole amount of local taxes which the township may retain before making payments to the county treasurer: Oceana v. Hart, 48 M. 319.

66. And the failure of the board of supervisors to add the sum to the next year's taxes does not cancel the township's liability; action may be taken subsequently, for H. S. § 1140 is directory only, and mandamus lies at any time within ten years: Ibid.

As to liability for injuries from non-repair of highways and bridges, see HIGHWAYS, §§ 176-219.

IV. RIGHTS AND DUTIES.

67. The townships adjacent to a city have no more legal dependence on it than have other townships, and they are equally entitled to an independent existence: Metropolitan Police Board v. Wayne Auditors, 68 M. 576 (March 2, '88).

68. A township is not divested of the title to its cemetery or other property by reason of the incorporation of a city or village in such a manner as to include such property within its limits. H. S. § 793, providing that where a township is divided its burying-ground shall belong to the township in which it lies thereafter, does not apply: Board of Health v. East Saginaw, 45 M. 257.

69. Detaching territory from a township and annexing it to a city does not affect the township's ownership of anything but the land, unless the law provides for the transfer of other rights; if it does not, debts and other incorporeal rights, such as the right to unpaid liquor taxes due before the annexation, still belong to the township: Springwells v. Wayne County Treasurer, 58 M. 240.

70. Local equities between newly-organized townships set off from the same county should be speedily adjusted and with due respect to the deliberate settlements of the various local authorities: Higgins v. Midland Supervisors, 53 M. 16.

71. Upon the organization of a new county from territory detached from others, township school and road taxes should be accounted for by the county to which they were returned with the respective townships for which they were levied: Clare County v. Auditor-General, 41 M. 183.

72. Where a county remains by law liable to a township that has been set off from it, its act in compromising with a defaulting treasurer cannot be treated as an act of agency on behalf of the township and will not relieve it from any share of its liability: Roscommon v. Midland Supervisors, 49 M. 454.

73. Where the auditor-general, as such, pays money into the hands of a county treasurer as county money, the county must be regarded, as against the township, as having received it; and the treasurer is liable on his bond for his own defaults: Ibid.

74. In collecting and accounting for the liquor tax the county treasurer acts as the agent of the township and not of the county, and his failure to account for it does not warrant the township in withholding an equivalent amount from the county taxes: Marquette v. Ishpeming City Treasurer, 49 M. 244.

75. A statute detaching territory from a township and creating it into a city excludes the township from all jurisdiction over the territory thus cut off, and from holding any meetings — except as the act expressly provides — within the city limits: People v. Knight, 18 M. 424.

76. The general election is not a township meeting in any sense, and a statute authorizing a township to hold its annual meeting in a city would not authorize it to hold an election there: Ibid.

77. A statute fixing the time for notice of a meeting for a particular purpose supersedes so far the general statute fixing a different time: Miller v. Grandy, 18 M. 540.

78. A statute permitting the electors "at the annual or at some special meeting called for the purpose" to determine upon raising money for bounty purposes does not require special notice to be given in order to entitle such subject to be considered at the annual meeting: Smith v. Crittenden, 16 M. 152.

79. The record of a special township meeting, voting a tax or authorizing moneys to be raised to be paid by a tax or by a loan must show that all the statutory preliminary requirements to a legal meeting (H. S. §§ 696-699) had been complied with, and the holding of the meeting and the proceedings had: Taymouth v. Koehler, 35 M. 23; Loomis v. Rogers, 53 M. 185.

80. The township records should show whether a sum was voted either by meeting of the electors or by the township board for township purposes for a given year, and unless they do so a tax levied therefor is illegal: Williams v. Mears, 61 M. 86.

81. The record cannot be contradicted by parol, but parol evidence is admissible to show facts omitted: Taymouth v. Koehler, 35 M. 23.

82. Where no clerical mistake is shown, there can be no presumption against the express wording of a resolution of a township board levying a tax, and the record as to the purpose of the levy cannot be contradicted by parol: Michigan Land, etc. Co. v. Republic, 65 M. 638.

83. The records of township meetings are, however, to be liberally viewed, and all proper intendment made in favor of their regularity: Taymouth v. Koehler, 35 M. 23; Lake Superior Ship Canal Co. v. Thompson, 56 M. 493.

84. And where the law requires a majority vote of all electors present, it seems to be a sufficient record to state that "it was resolved," etc., without adding that it was by the affirmative vote of a majority of competent voters: Lake Superior Ship Canal Co. v. Thompson, 56 M. 493.

Action legalized by statute although meeting not legally convened, see ARMY, § 2.

85. It seems that it is not essential that the record of the township meeting shall state in terms that the respective amounts of highway labor and money-tax were assessed as the statute requires; it is enough if it appears by reference to the highway commissioner's report: Ibid.

VI. THE TOWN BOARD.

86. Meetings of a township board, unless duly called and notified, are not legal if not attended by all the members: Beaver Creek v. Hastings, 52 M. 528.

87. When either of the members of a township board, as constituted under H. S. § 744, is interested in the subject for consideration, he is not "competent or able to act" in the sense of § 745, and such incompetency will justify the calling in of one of the remaining justices: Stockwell v. White Lake, 23 M. 341.

88. But this principle does not apply to the performance of official acts pertaining to the public interest in which he has no interest different from that of any other person: Clement v. Everest, 29 M. 19.

89. That the decision of the board may incidentally affect the interests of a person not a party who is a niece of a member of the board does not disqualify such member: Hamtramck v. Holihan, 46 M. 127.

90. The township board has power, in the absence of the town clerk, to appoint to act as secretary a justice of the peace summoned to act as a member of the board: First National Bank v. St. Joseph, 46 M. 526.

91. Where accounts between two townships are adjusted by their respective boards, one of the townships, in filing a bill to set aside the settlement, cannot distinguish itself from its board for the purpose of excusing laches; nor can it claim relief on the ground that its own board was inferior in ability or in knowledge of facts material to the settlement. Every township board is presumed competent to attend to the business it has to do, and in that respect to be equal in ability to any other board with which it deals: Churchill v. Cummings, 51 M. 446.

92. In general the presentation to the board of a claim against a township confers jurisdiction to decide whether the claim is a valid township charge or not; pleadings or formal papers are not required: Wall v. Trumbull, 16 M. 228.

93. When a statute authorizes the township to vote to refund moneys advanced for bounties, and the township does so, and claims are presented under the act and vote, the township board acquires jurisdiction to determine whether a particular claim is within the law or not; and its determination is judicial, so that the allowance of an improper claim does not render the members liable: Ibid.

94. The presence of the claimant before the board is not necessary to the allowance of his account. Nor is it necessary that the account should be sworn to (though it must be in writing), or that it be proved by evidence under oath. The board may act upon its own knowledge of the demand, and if satisfied of its correctness that is enough: Ibid.

95. Where a township board assumes to pass upon and allow a class of claims over which the law gives it no jurisdiction—e. g., voluntary advances made by individuals to secure recruits—its allowance is void, and the supervisor and township clerk cannot be compelled by mandamus to issue orders thereon: People v. Blackman, 14 M. 386.

96. Under R. S. 1838 the township boards, independent of any vote of the electors, might raise money to pay claims audited and allowed against the townships: Wisner v. Davenport, 5 M. 501.

97. The board may vote and raise money to pay amounts found due from one township to another on a division or alteration of townships: Marathon v. Oregon, 8 M. 372.

98. The statute authorizing the township board to vote moneys to defray township expenses when the electors have neglected to do so does not specify at what time or within what time such vote shall be taken. It is only necessary that it be at a regular meeting: Peninsula Iron Co. v. Crystal Falls, 60 M. 510.

99. A township tax exceeding the amount voted by the township may be sustained on the presumption that the township board had exercised its statutory right to increase the amount, if there is no showing to the contrary: Silsbee v. Stockle, 44 M. 561.

100. Where the township board imposes a highway tax it represents the town meeting in doing so, and is confined to the same subjects of taxation: Michigan Land & Iron Co. v. L'Anse, 63 M. 700.

101. It is doubtful whether a supervisor can be allowed a fixed salary instead of his per diem pay; but a vote by the town board allowing a lump sum for compensation in fixing the annual tax was sustained as an estimate of the amount required: Sawyer-Goodman Co. v. Crystal Falls, 56 M. 597; Penin- sula Iron, etc. Co. v. Crystal Falls, 60 M. 510.

102. The board will not be compelled by mandamus to repair a public bridge: Perrine v. Hamlin, 48 M. 641.

As to appeals to, in matters relating to highways and schools, see HIGHWAYS, XV; SCHOOLS, IV.

As to approval of liquor bonds, see INTOXICATING LIQUORS, V.

As to powers of township board of health, see BOARD OF HEALTH.

Removal by, of school officers, see SCHOOLS, III, (b).

That costs of proceedings to review official acts of board are collectible as town charges, see COSTS, § 272.

VII. OFFICERS.

(a) In general.

As to resignation, see OFFICERS, § 47.

103. Regulation of such township affairs as legally concern none but the people of the town cannot lawfully be vested in any officers imposed upon the township from without: Hubbard v. Springwells, 25 M. 153; Wilcox v. Paddock, 65 M. 23.

104. Township officers cannot be vested with jurisdiction in other townships than their own: Drain Commissioner v. Baxter, 57 M. 127.

105. Town officers can have no functions outside of their constitutional or statutory powers, and they cannot delegate their trusts to others: Hubbard v. Springwells, 25 M. 153.

(b) Supervisor.

As to boards of supervisors, see COUNTIES, III.

106. The supervisor of a township is a public officer whose duties and functions are prescribed by the statute; and the localities in which he may act are limited by the boundaries of his township and the county in which it lies: Pack v. Greenbush, 62 M. 122.

107. Where townships are set off from a county and organized into a new county the supervisors of those townships continue, it seems, in their offices under the new organization: Carleton v. People, 10 M. 250.

108. The supervisor has, officially, the absolute and exclusive right to the possession of the assessment rolls required to be kept in his office, and may sue in his official character to recover possession of them: Phenix v. Clark, 2 M. 327.

109. But his power over the roll ceases when in regular course it has passed into the treasurer's hands for collection: Ferton v. Feller, 33 M. 199.

110. In assessing a liquor tax which he has no right to assess, he is not entitled to compensation from his township: Decatur v. Decatur Township Board, 33 M. 335.

As to his duties as assessor, see TAXES, III.

As to his liability in tax matters, see TAXES, §§ 164, 165, 167-169; OFFICERS, § 189.

(c) Clerk.

111. A township clerk can certify papers legally in his custody, but he is not a member of the board of highway commissioners, and has no authority to take down and return on certiorari the evidence in a proceeding for an encroachment: Roberts v. Cottrellville Highway Commissioners, 24 M. 182, 25 M. 23.

112. Clerk held to have no authority to record action of highway commissioner assessing tax for highway labor: Michigan Land, etc. Co. v. L'Anse, 63 M. 700.

113. A township clerk has no authority by virtue of his office to sign the names of highway commissioners to an order on a township treasurer: Just v. Wise, 42 M. 573.

As to town clerk's certificate to supervisor, see TAXES, §§ 310-314.

As to effect of copies certified by, see EVIDENCE, §§ 1189-1191.

(d) Treasurer.

114. Where by a statute detaching territory from his township the treasurer is placed outside the town limits his office is vacated and he has no right to township moneys: Youngblood v. Stellwagen, 33 M. 1.

115. The treasurer's bond must be given to the township; and the latter cannot sue on a bond running to the people of the state: La Grange v. Chapman, 11 M. 499.

116. And the treasurer should be a party to and execute his bond; where he, though named as obligor, did not do so, the bond was held void as to the sureties: Johnston v. Kimball, 39 M. 187.

117. The relation between a township and its treasurer is that of creditor and debtor merely: Monroe v. Whipple, 56 M. 516.

118. Yet he is guilty of embezzlement if he misappropriates the town's funds and fraudulently refuses to account for them: People v. Bringard, 39 M. 22.

119. He is supposed to have the town's money at all times in his hands ready to be paid out or paid over as required by law, and failure to pay out or over on demand is a conversion for which the town may sue him in trover: Monroe v. Whipple, 56 M. 516.

120. The township treasurer is the agent of the township in collecting taxes that are to be retained in its treasury and paid out on proper orders: Byles v. Golden, 52 M. 612.

121. The treasurer is bound to account either in money or in the return of unpaid taxes for the full amount of the levy put in his hands for collection: Oceana v. Hart, 48 M. 319.

122. In the absence of any error of law a judgment for defendant, a former township treasurer, upon a special finding by the jury that settlement was had with the town board each year and that he paid over the amount found due on the last settlement, was affirmed: Monroe v. Whipple, 62 M. 560.

123. A township is not estopped by the action of its board in settling with the treasurer from suing him for an additional amount afterwards found to be due and overlooked in the settlement: Boardman v. Flagg, 70 M. 372.

124. If the treasurer's liability for funds in his hands can be discharged by anything but payment, there must at least be an intentional acceptance of another's responsibility instead: Rice v. Sidney, 44 M. 37.

125. An entry by a town clerk carrying an apparent balance over from the account of one town treasurer to his successor is no evidence of the actual receipt of the money by the latter, even though his deputy had without his knowledge settled the account of the office accordingly: Ibid.

126. A township treasurer's sureties cannot be bound by a false settlement of his accounts: Ibid.

127. Sureties upon the official bond of a town treasurer for his second term of office only are not liable for the default of their principal during his first term: Paw Paw v. Eggleston, 25 M. 36.

128. A township treasurer who holds for a new school district a tax collected to pay its ascertained proportion of the value of school property in the district of which it was formerly a part cannot receive school orders on the old district for such tax; he cannot use the fund for any purpose except to pay it over to the new district; and if he does so he is liable to account for it as though never drawn out: Midland School Districts, 40 M. 551.

Further as to payment over of school and library moneys, see SCHOOLS, §§ 98-108.

As to town treasurer's duties and liabilities in tax matters, see TAXES, V, VI.

Compensation for collecting taxes, see OFFICERS, §§ 315-317.

Capacity as to drain taxes, see DRAINS, §§ 97, 98; EQUITY, § 248.

Mandamus to treasurer for payment of orders, see MANDAMUS, §§ 204, 205, 207.

VIII. ACTIONS BY AND AGAINST.

As to actions against, for defective highways and bridges, see HIGHWAYS, XIV.

129. Townships are bodies politic and corporate, capable of suing and being sued; but they have no corporate fund out of which a judgment may be satisfied, and there is no statute providing a mode for obtaining satisfaction of a judgment directly against a township. (See H. S. § 8218, as amended by act 312 of 1887, providing for a collection of judgment by assessing tax): Niles Highway Commissioners v. Martin, 4 M. 557.

130. A township can sue in justice's court: Hart v. Port Huron, 46 M. 428.

131. Townships cannot sue for injuries to highways and bridges: Denver v. White River Boom Co., 51 M. 472.

132. A township cannot sue for unpaid taxes except where taxes on personalty are returned unpaid for want of property whereon to levy: Staley v. Columbus, 36 M. 38.

133. A township created out of territory that, as an unorganized township, had been attached to an organized township, cannot sue the latter for the amount of local taxes not expended, as directed by C. L. 1871, § 450 (see H. S. § 456), within its own limits (see COUNTIES, §§ 118, 119): Roscommon v. Midland, 39 M. 424.

134. A township cannot be sued at common law by a county for the taxes which the township treasurer should have paid into the county treasury, but has embezzled; mandamus to levy tax is the remedy: Hart v. Oceana, 44 M. 417; Oceana v. Hart, 48 M. 319. See, as to the proper remedy, supra, §§ 65, 66.

135. An action against the township is not the proper remedy to compel the payment of a liquidated demand; mandamus lies against the town officers in case of their refusal to pay: Marathon v. Oregon, 8 M. 372; Dayton v. Rounds, 27 M. 32; Just v. Wise, 42 M. 573. Otherwise in the federal courts: See COURTS, § 132.

136. Assumpsit is not the proper remedy to enable one township to recover from another moneys collected by the latter for taxes and to which the former is entitled: Comins v. Harrisville, 45 M. 442.

137. Where the legal obligation of a township to pay bonds issued by it and the good faith of the holder thereof are disputed, it seems that the proper remedy against the township is by action; mandamus denied: Loomis v. Rogers, 58 M. 135.

138. A non-resident whose property has been seized and sold to satisfy a tax for which he claims he was not liable may sue the township in assumpsit to recover the amount received by its treasurer on such sale: Byles v. Golden, 52 M. 612.

139. Assumpsit lies to recover back moneys paid for taxes illegally assessed and collected where such taxes have gone into the township treasury; and to fix the town's liability no further proof is required than that its treasurer received the money in his official capacity: Daniels v. Watertown, 55 M. 376.

140. H. S. § 737 provides that all process against a township shall be served upon its supervisor. Held, that such service cannot be made outside of the county to which his township belongs, and therefore that a township cannot be sued except in the county where it lies: Pack v. Greenbush, 63 M. 122.

141. The equitable proceeding under H. S. § 795 for an accounting between townships as to personal property and debts is barred in six years, unless special equities prevent: Sheridan v. Frost, 62 M. 136.

That a township cannot be sued to recover back drain tax unlawfully levied, see DRAINS, § 97.

Township not proper defendant to bill for relief against drain tax, see DRAINS, § 107.

142. A township is a necessary party to a bill to have a tax declared void when a decree for complainant would result in having the taxes re-assessed or spread upon the lands of the township: Adams v. Auditor-General, 48 M. 453.

TRADE-MARKS.

1. A trade-mark at common law is any peculiar device or symbol whereby any dealer may distinguish his goods from another's; he secures the sole right to use it by prior adoption, by the publication of it as his own and by exclusive sale. But it cannot be a mere designation of a quality, the name of a place, or a description of the article in ordinary language: Smith v. Walker, 57 M. 456.

2. Whether the label "Smith's Grain

Grader and Seed Separator" can be treated as a trade-mark, quere: Ibid.

3. Redress for the infringement of a trade-mark must be had at common law if the trade-mark is unregistered, and if no application has been made for its registration: Ibid.

4. A partnership trade-mark may be an important element in the good-will of the business, and is an asset of the firm which can be sold or disposed of on its dissolution. But if not disposed of, each partner has a right to use it if he continues in the business, unless it has been otherwise agreed: Ibid.

5. Injunction lies to restrain partners who have sold out their interest in the good-will of a business from carrying on a rival establishment under a name so similar to that of the first as to mislead and draw off business; and the writ lies against all concerned in the new establishment. But it is hardly necessary to interfere with the delivery of mail to the latter beyond requiring them to turn over at once to the original establishment so much as may have been intended for it: Myers v. Kalamazoo Buggy Co., 54 M. 215.

6. The vendees of a business built up under a trade-name may have the vendor enjoined from using such name in violation of his agreement; so may those who join with the vendor in such use be enjoined: Grow v. Seligman, 47 M. 607.

TREATIES.

1. Where a treaty has been made and ratified by the proper federal authority it becomes the law of the land; and courts have not the power to question the powers or rights recognized by it in the nation or tribe with whom it was made: Maiden v. Ingersoll, 6 M. 373.

2. A treaty is a law of the land as much as an act of congress is: Crane v. Reeder, 25 M. 303.

3. A treaty is a contract with the nation; and when the executive department has to carry it out, the department is not so bound by the conduct of its agents as to preclude it from repudiating their frauds and refusing to follow their false decisions: Raymond v. Shawboose, 34 M. 142.

4. In construing a treaty courts should be guided by the obvious intention of the parties as expressed by the instrument, and should give effect to such intention: Stockton v. Williams, 1 D. 546.

5. Where a decision upon a question arising under a treaty has for sixteen years been recognized as the law governing titles under such treaty, it should be recognized as a rule of property which the courts are not at liberty to disturb: Campau v. Dewey, 9 M. 381.

6. The stipulations contained in the treaty of London (1794) known as Jay's Treaty, for the protection of private rights of property, imposed no new obligation upon the government of the United States, but were only in affirmance of the law of nations: May v. Specht, 1 M. 187.

7. Article 9 of said treaty with Great Britain construed with respect to the right of aliens to hold lands: Crane v. Reeder, 21 M. 63.

8. The treaty between the United States and Great Britain of 1842, which concedes to the vessels, etc., of both nations a right of passage through the lakes and their connecting waters divided and appropriated by the treaty, does not deprive either of that complete and exclusive jurisdiction over that part of the waters on its side the line which any nation may exercise upon land within its limits: People v. Tyler, 7 M. 161.

9. By a treaty made in 1807 between the United States and the Chippewa, Ottawa, Pottawattomie and Wyandotte tribes of Indians certain lands near Detroit, among others, were reserved to these tribes. The treaty did not show on its face what tribe was in the occupancy of these lands. By another treaty with the Pottawattomies in 1827 these lands therein stated to have been before "reserved to the use of the said tribe" were ceded to the United States. Held that, this treaty having recognized the right to their reserve to have been in the Pottawattomies, the courts are bound so to regard it, and must consider the treaty of 1827 as extinguishing the reserve: Maiden v. Ingersoll, 6 M. 373.

10. The Indian treaty of Saginaw of Sept. 24, 1819, vested the legal title in the reserves named therein as soon as the lands were located: Stockton v. Williams, W. 120.

11. Said treaty conferred a title in fee-simple upon the reserves therein named, which title attached to specific lands as soon as these were located: Stockton v. Williams, W. 120; Dewey v. Campau, 4 M. 565.

12. Where a treaty makes no provision for deciding questions of individual identity they must be decided by the courts: Stockton v. Williams, W. 120, 1 D. 546.

13. The court cannot, from a construction of the treaty of Saginaw of Sept. 24, 1819, interpret the words "Indians by descent," as used therein, to mean persons of mixed white and Indian blood only, and not full-blooded Indians: Campau v. Dewey, 9 M. 381.

14. Nor can the court say from the language of the treaty, the policy of the government as indicated by the Indian treaties, public records and dispatches, and the habits and modes of life of the Chippewa nation, that a presumption arises that all the reservees in said treaty were persons of mixed white and Indian blood: Ibid.

15. The question of the identity of a reservee named in said treaty is entirely a question of fact for the jury: Ibid.

Evidence to designate reservee, see EVIDENCE, §§ 155, 200, 258.

16. A treaty with Indian tribes, after reciting that they felt a strong consideration for aid rendered by certain of their half-breeds, and that wishing to testify their gratitude they had assigned certain locations of land to such individuals, and had united in a strong appeal for the allowance of the same in the treaty, but that no such reservations could be permitted in carrying out the instructions of the president, it was agreed that, in addition to the general fund set apart for half-breeds in another article, the sum of $48,148 should be paid for the relinquishment of this class of claims, to be divided in the following manner: "To John A. Drew, for a tract of one section and three-quarters to his Indian family at Cheboygan Rapids, at $4 an acre," etc. Held, that the money was given to Drew absolutely and not in trust for his Indian family: Cook v. Biddle, 3 M. 269.

17. Under the practical interpretation put on the Indian treaty of Oct. 13, 1864, by the government, the selection of lands and the competency of the grantees both became operative together when fixed by the proper official authority, and both were before that ambulatory: Raymond v. Shauaboese, 34 M. 142.

18. And no disposition by an Indian of land in expectancy under said treaty is valid: Ibid.

I. TRESPASS TO REALTY.

Trespasses on public lands, see PUBLIC LANDS, §§ 159-191.

As to the damages in actions for trespass to lands, see DAMAGES, §§ 48, 49, 95-98, 104, 119, 144, 145, 171, 172, 181, 244, 245, 248, 262-286, 323, 376, 384-386, 389.

As to treble damages, see DAMAGES, V.

That trespass qu. cl. fr. for allowing logs to accumulate upon plaintiff's premises in consequence of closing up of stream is cognizable by a justice, see JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, § 59.

(a) What is a trespass.

1. To disturb peaceable possession by force is a trespass irrespective of ownership; and an action therefor involves no question of title: Newcombe v. Irwin, 55 M. 620.

2. The projection of eaves over the boundary of a lot does not constitute trespass qu. cl. fr.: Bureau v. Marshall, 55 M. 234.

3. Breaking through the partition wall of an adjoining mine is not necessarily a trespass if not incident to encroachment upon the latter premises: National Copper Co. v. Minn. Mining Co., 57 M. 83.

4. Defendant cut off a portion of plaintiff's fence between their premises, making the fence one foot lower. Held, a trespass entitling plaintiff not only to nominal damages but to the full value of the property destroyed, even though the cutting-down process improved the fence: Fisher v. Dowling, 66 M. 870.

5. In an action between two adjoining owners for trespass upon land the only evidence as to the true location of the boundary was occupancy on plaintiff's part and an ex parte survey on defendant's; and it was shown that defendant had moved the fence even further than his survey called for. Held, that he was guilty of trespass: Bird v. Stark, 66 M. 654.

6. Defendants, under an oral license from plaintiff to build sheds on land which they had contracted to buy of him (their contract giving no right of possession), placed the sills for the sheds, but were then notified that the license was terminated. However, they went on and built the sheds. After about fifteen months plaintiff resumed possession, moving his fence back so as to include the sheds. Then defendants entered, tore down the fence and removed the sheds. Held, a trespass, whether defendants were or were not liable for the value of the sheds: Druse v. Wheeler, 22 M. 439.

7. The lapse of time between the revocation and the trespass (April, 1868, to July 6, 1869) exceeded any reasonable time for the removal, and the jury should have been so told: Druse v. Wheeler, 23 M. 439, 26 M. 189.

8. And it seems that, by erecting the sheds upon the sills after the license was terminated, defendants lost all right to remove the sills, which thus, by their own wrongful act, had become a part of the sheds, and that the sheds (entire) became plaintiff's property: Druse v. Wheeler, 26 M. 189.

As to when trespasser acquires property rights, see ACCESSION.

9. A purchaser of lots according to a plat which designates a certain street commits a trespass if, without resorting to legal methods to open the same, he tears down fences and drives over the land: Graham v. Poor, 50 M. 153.

10. The removal by village authorities of a sidewalk which had been laid by the village at its own expense in front of plaintiff's lot, and there used for two years and kept in repair by plaintiff, is an actionable trespass: Rogers v. Randall, 29 M. 41.

11. Persons constructing a drain are guilty of a trespass if they throw dirt on the plaintiff's land outside the limits of the land taken for the purposes of the drain: Clark v. Wiles, 54 M. 323.

12. By public usage there is no trespass in taking fish from a small lake nearly surrounded by another's land, unless the landowner has given notice that it will not be allowed: Marsh v. Colby, 39 M. 626.

When removal of bridge not a trespass, see DAMAGES, § 430.

(b) When trespass lies.

13. Trespass, not case, is the proper form of action where the injury to plaintiff is direct, not incidental or consequential (but H. S. § 7759 allows case to be brought); and this is so although the injury was done by plaintiff's servants, not by plaintiff in person: Smith v. Webster, 23 M. 298.

14. One claiming ownership of land covered by navigable water brought trespass qu. cl. fr. against a party who used the premises for fowling purposes. No objection to the form of the action having been raised below, a judgment on verdict for plaintiff was affirmed though relief might have been had in case: Sterling v. Jackson, 69 M. 488.

15. H. S. § 7548 makes trespass the proper form of action where suit for the cutting of trees on lands in one county is brought against defendants in whatever other county they may be found, and it applies to non-resident employers: Smith v. Webster, 23 M. 298.

16. In trespass the breaking and entry is the gist of the action; expulsion or ouster is a mere aggravation of the trespass. If the original entry be lawful, trespass qu. cl. fr. will not lie: Draper v. Williams, 2 M. 536.

17. Trespass does not lie to contest, not the defendant's right to the possession of land, but his right to cultivate it in the particular manner he has adopted: Burnham v. Van Gilder, 34 M. 246.

18. Where proceedings to lay out a highway are void, and the occupation of the owners of the lands sought to be appropriated is disturbed, trespass lies, although it is not the most suitable remedy: Names v. Highway Commissioners, 30 M. 490.

19. When one makes an excavation by his neighbor's land, into which the land, from its own weight and of necessity, must fall and does immediately fall, trespass will lie against him therefor: Buskirk v. Strickland, 47 M. 389.

20. The action of trespass given by H. S. § 7957 to the owner of lands for cutting down or injuring trees or timber thereon differs from the ordinary action of trespass qu. cl. fr., and lies in some cases where that action does not: Achey v. Hull, 7 M. 423.

21. Said statute was not designed to protect mere possessory rights, but to give the owner of the fee the right to sue, under the form of trespass, for injuries to his inheritance. And it is therefore not a defence to the action that defendant had disseized the plaintiff, though it may prevent treble damages: Ibid.

22. The action of trespass with treble damages allowed by H. S. § 8806 to one who has obtained restitution in forcible-entry proceedings is not the same as the common-law action of trespass for mesne profits: Hitchcock v. Pratt, 51 M. 263.

23. And the party is not deprived of this remedy by defendant's voluntary surrender of the premises and dismissal of a writ of error sued out by him on the judgment of restitution: Ibid.

24. Previous to Sept. 10, 1881, when the amendment to H. S. § 8295 took effect, summary proceedings would not lie to recover as against heirs or devisees in possession lands sold under executors' deeds; therefore the action of trespass provided by § 8306 will not lie for damages sustained prior to that date; nor can a notice to quit or demand of possession made prior to that date be made a basis of recovery against an heir or devisee: Newkirk v. Tracey, 61 M. 174.

(c) Who can maintain trespass.

25. One in possession under claim and color of title can maintain an action for cutting timber and removing it from the land: Hoffman v. Harrington, 44 M. 183.

26. A prima facie title to lands flooded entitles one to sue: Fox v. Holcomb, 32 M. 494.

27. Trespass qu. cl. fr. can be brought only by one in actual or constructive possession. If no one holds actual possession the owner of the legal title has constructive possession; but there cannot be constructive possession of lands of which third parties are in actual adverse possession: Ruggles v. Sands, 40 M. 559.

28. One's rights as owner, unless something is shown excluding him from any right to be on the premises, are enough to sustain his action for trespass: O'Brien v. Cavanaugh, 61 M. 368.

29. A party having title to unoccupied lands is constructively in possession, and may maintain trespass against one who, without his license or authority, having no color of title to the lands, and whose acts evince no intention to retain permanent possession, enters upon them and cuts and carries away timber: Safford v. Basto, 4 M. 406.

30. The defendants went upon unoccupied lands under a void tax-title and out and carried away the timber. The plaintiff having the title brought trespass. It was held that he was constructively in possession, and that if the defendants entered upon the lands with the intention to cut and remove the timber as soon as they could, and then abandon it, the act did not constitute a disseizin, and they were liable in this action: Ibid. See Busch v. Nester, 62 M. 381.

31. Usually the person in possession is the one to bring trespass for an injury that affects merely the present enjoyment of real property. Whether the action lies in behalf of the owner of premises against a third person for demolishing a portion of a building occupied by a tenant, quere: O'Brien v. Cavanaugh, 61 M. 368.

32. An owner of land cannot bring trespass against persons who have been in actual, entire and undisturbed possession for removing a building from it: Carpenter v. Smith, 40 M. 639.

33. Plaintiff's possession at the time the alleged trespass was committed cannot be affected by any claim made by the grantee in a deed executed after the trespass: Gordon v. Cook, 47 M. 248.

34. A riparian proprietor may bring trespass against one who enters and cuts ice: Clute v. Fisher, 65 M. 48.

35. A lessee of land described as bounded on a river has a legal interest in the land covered with water which will support an action of trespass for booming logs upon the water, thus hindering him from taking ice: Lorman v. Benson, 8 M. 18.

36. A contract purchaser of lands who has acquired no property rights cannot, at least before fulfilling all the conditions of the contract and becoming absolutely entitled to a conveyance, maintain an action for injuries to the freehold; such right of action belongs to the legal owner of the land: Moyer v. Scott, 30 M. 845.

37. Where a contract purchaser of lands has brought action for a trespass thereon, a deed subsequently executed by the vendor upon an anticipated payment cannot operate by way of relation to the date of the contract to transfer to such purchaser, for the purpose of saving his suit, the right of action which belonged to the vendor when the suit was brought: Ibid.

38. A vendee in a land contract who has neither actual nor constructive possession cannot bring trespass against his vendor's grantee for cutting timber: Pfister v. Bird, 48 M. 14.

39. A vendee's possession under a paid-up land contract entitling him to a deed is sufficient to enable him to recover in trespass for the loss of pasturage and hay resulting from the negligent flowing of the land by a booming company: Witheral v. Muskegon Booming Co., 68 M. 48.

40. One who at the time of an alleged trespass had neither the legal title to nor the actual possession of the premises cannot maintain an action for such trespass, basing his right upon the relation back of a decree for specific performance against defendant's lessor: Goetchius v. Sanborn, 46 M. 330.

41. After standing timber has been sold, a subsequent grantee by warranty deed of the land with notice of such sale cannot maintain trespass against the vendee of the timber for cutting and removing it: Russell v. Myers, 32 M. 522.

42. A widow, while in possession of an estate under a claim of homestead, was intruded upon and dispossessed by one of her husband's heirs, who asserted rights under a contract which he claimed, but failed to prove, entitled him to the possession. Held, that the widow might maintain a suit for trespass: Patterson v. Patterson, 49 M. 176.

43. A grantor cannot maintain trespass against his grantee for destroying the wheat on the land, when the strict construction of the deed is merely to except the wheat from the covenants of warranty, but not to reserve it: Knapp v. Woolverton, 47 M. 292.

44. A party who has an exclusive right may bring trespass for an injury during its continuance though he has not an absolute interest or entire property in the soil: Gilbert v. Kennedy, 23 M. 5.

45. The interests affected by a trespass may be so divided that the landlord may sue for one injury and the tenant for another at the same time: Ibid.

46. In an action of trespass brought by tenants in common in relation to their land, all, as a general rule, must join as plaintiffs; but a joint action will not lie against a railroad company where one of two tenants in common has granted to the company the right of way as to his interest over the common estate; such grant operates as a release of his damages: Draper v. Williams, 2 M. 536.

47. Proof of non-joinder of a plaintiff in trespass for cutting down trees only goes to apportion the damages where there is no plea in abatement: Achey v. Hull, 7 M. 423.

(d) Who are liable.

48. Where a party commits a trespass he must be held to contemplate all the damages that legitimately follow from his illegal act. It is immaterial whether, in committing the trespass, he actually contemplated it or other damage to plaintiff: Allison v. Chandler, 11 M. 542.

49. Good faith does not excuse a trespasser. He must ascertain his rights and not invade another's actual or constructive possession: Isle Royale Mining Co. v. Hertin, 37 M. 332.

50. Absence of bad faith never excuses a trespass, though the existence of bad faith may sometimes aggravate it. Every one must be sure of his legal right when he invades another's property: Cubit v. O'Dett, 51 M. 347.

51. The mere intent of a defendant in trespass is not material if his conduct was not actionable: Estey v. Smith, 45 M. 402.

52. One who enters under a tax certificate and cuts timber is a trespasser: Busch v. Nester, 62 M. 381.

53. A tenant is liable in trespass qu. cl. fr. to his landlord if he destroys trees or other things excepted in his lease: Gilbert v. Kennedy, 23 M. 5.

54. A purchaser on foreclosure ousted a tenant after the foreclosure became absolute, but took an attornment and afterward allowed the tenant to attorn to a person who claimed title under a tax lease. Meanwhile the former owner had obtained a decree on a bill to redeem, and the purchaser had released to her. Held, that the tenant and the person to whom the second attornment had been made became trespassers: Steinhauser v. Kuhn, 50 M. 367.

55. The agents of a railroad company holding land under grant from the state by which it had been taken after provision for compensation had been made are not liable in trespass for entering and erecting fences: Smith v. McAdam, 3 M. 506.

56. A highway commissioner was held liable in trespass for cutting and carrying away plaintiff's shade-trees standing in the highway in front of his premises, where there had been no order for or notice of removal, and where they did not appear to be obstructions: Clark v. Dasso, 34 M. 86.

57. The Detroit board of public works and contractors employed by it are liable in trespass for digging away the front of a man's premises for the purpose of grading the street if such excavation was not authorized by the proper authorities (see CITIES, ETC., §§ 60, 238): Larned v. Briscoe, 62 M. 393.

58. A drain contractor who casts earth outside of the limits of the right of way for the drain, upon adjoining land, is liable in trespass to the owner of such land: Clark v. Wiles, 54 M. 323. See Davis v. East Saginaw, 66 M. 37.

59. The managing agent of a corporation neglected to instruct his workmen as to boundaries, and they trespassed. Held that, if he was liable at all, it was in case for negligence and not in trespass quare clausum: Bath v. Caton, 37 M. 199.

(e) Pleading and evidence.

60. Where a declaration in its commencement called the action "trespass on the case," but laid in each of its four counts as the substantive cause of action the tortious entry by defendant on premises demised by him to plaintiff during the existence of the tenancy, setting forth, however, further circumstances of injury, including the putting out and exposure of certain chattels, it was held that the action was one in trespass qu. cl. fr., that the action must fail and no recovery be had for the alleged matters of aggravation, unless the breaking and entry were made out, and that the relation of landlord and tenant was material and to be shown: United States Manuf. Co. v. Stevens, 52 M. 330.

61. In a declaration in trespass qu. cl. fr., allegations of trespass to the person and of conversion may be inserted as matters of aggravation: Waldo v. Waldo, 52 M. 14.

62. A count charging the entry, under pretext of a license, upon premises not covered by the license, was held to be a count in trespass if valid for any purpose, and could not sustain a recovery where it set up no consequential damages: Ives v. Williams, 53 M. 636.

63. In an action for treble damages for cutting timber, the objection that the declaration does not contain a sufficient averment of plaintiff's ownership to support a finding in his favor should be raised by demurrer: Clark v. Field, 42 M. 342.

Further as to the pleadings where treble damages are involved, see DAMAGES, V, (b).

64. An alleged trespass being laid with a continuando, if the plaintiff proves a distinct act of trespass prior to the time alleged in the declaration, he thereby elects to put his right to a recovery on that trespass, and evidence of any further grievances is inadmissible: Gilbert v. Kennedy, 23 M. 5.

65. Where a declaration in trespass is not for a continuing trespass begun at one time and continued up to another, but for a series of distinct acts of trespass, the first being laid on or about a specified day and the others at divers other times, it is competent for the court to put plaintiff to his election by confining him to proof of either a single act prior to the date specified, or of so many as the truth allows between that date and the commencement of suit: McDiarmid v. Caruthers, 84 M. 49.

66. Where, under a declaration in trespass charging a series of distinct acts of which the first is laid on or about a specific day, the court at the outset has ruled that plaintiff must elect between a single act prior to the date specified and so many as his proofs would warrant afterwards, and he has accordingly elected the latter and offered no proof of the former, and it in no wise appears that he was in a situation to offer any, the ruling, if abstractly incorrect, is not necessarily prejudicial: Ibid.

67. Where plaintiff declares for trespass on lands in a certain township, without giving a particular description of the lands, defendant, if he pleads title in himself, will make out a defence by proof of ownership in himself of any parcel of land in the township named: McFarlane v. Ray, 14 M. 465.

68. And plaintiff must amend his declaration to obtain the benefit of a new assignment which he could have had by replication when the system of special pleading was in force: Ibid.

69. Under a declaration in trespass alleging that defendant, with cattle, to wit, horses, hogs and oxen, trod down, trampled upon and destroyed the grass, corn, etc., of plaintiff, and other injuries to him then and there did, to his damage, etc., it is not error to admit evidence that part of the damage was done by defendant's cows, as the gist of the action is the forcible entry, and no precise certainty is requisite; nor is it error to admit evidence, under the allegation of other injuries, that corn cut from the stalks and apples fallen to the ground were destroyed: East v. Cain, 49 M. 478.

70. An overseer of highways was sued for trespass upon land held by plaintiff subject to the easement of a public highway. Held, that the declaration should in some way apprise defendant that the trespass complained of was in a public highway, instead of making a general allegation of the destruction of grass and corn upon a certain quarter of a quarter-section, leading naturally to the conclusion that it was upon the enclosed and cultivated land of the plaintiff: Wolf v. Holton, 61 M. 550.

71. One who brings trespass for removing a building from premises mortgaged to him, which removal he counts upon as impairing the security for the purposes of a deficiency on foreclosure, cannot recover unless he shows that the deficiency arose upon a valid foreclosure and sale: Taylor v. McConnell, 53 M. 587.

72. Under the plea of the general issue in trespass a freehold or mere possessory right may be given in evidence: Rawson v. Finlay, 27 M. 268.

73. Where the declaration in trespass qu. cl. fr. alleged that defendant broke and entered plaintiff's close, describing the premises, defendant, under the general issue, was entitled to show an adverse title by tax-deeds issued to himself: Solomon v. Groesbeck, 65 M. 540.

74. Where, in trespass qu. cl. fr., brought in a justice's court, defendant pleads the general issue without putting the title in issue, defendant can only contest the fact of trespass; but this does not preclude him from contesting the title thereafter in ejectment: Keyser v. Sutherland, 59 M. 455.

75. Trespass brought in justice's court, where defendant pleaded the general issue without notice, was certified to the circuit because it appeared from plaintiff's evidence that title to land was involved. Held, that the defendant was not precluded from showing adverse possession or title in himself: Rawson v. Finlay, 27 M. 268.

76. In an action in justice's court for cutting off a portion of plaintiff's fence, the declaration averred ownership in fee of the land described, and the general issue was pleaded. Held, that title to land was not in issue, and that proof by a surveyor or any one else going to show anything not bearing on possession was improper: Fisher v. Dowling, 66 M. 370.

77. Where the declaration avers title to be in plaintiff and defendant claims title under the notice filed with his plea, the title is put in issue: Walters v. Tefft, 57 M. 390.

78. In trespass the defence of license cannot be made unless under a special notice: Vanderkarr v. Thompson, 19 M. 82; Senecal v. Labadie, 42 M. 126.

79. The notice under the general issue is, under our practice, the only admissible form of pleading title and license in trespass qu. cl. fr.: Druse v. Wheeler, 22 M. 439; Walters v. Tefft, 57 M. 390.

80. The special notice of defence may by leave of court be amended so as to aver license: Hopkins v. Briggs, 41 M. 175.

81. In an action for trespass to lands and the cutting of timber in which plaintiff claims treble damages defendant may show under the general issue that the trespass was involuntary and was made under a claim of right: Osburn v. Lovell, 36 M. 246.

82. Evidence to show a license from the agent of a land-owner to cut timber on the land is not admissible as a defence unless the agent's authority is shown; but it may be received to show that the defendant acted in good faith in cutting it: Clark v. Field, 42 M. 842.

83. In an action for trespass committed by an overseer of highways upon land held subject to the easement of a highway, defendant may show that what he did was lawfully performed under and by virtue of the possession of the public, and in legitimate furtherance of the rights and needs of travel in a public highway: Wolf v. Holton, 61 M. 550.

84. In an action for trespass for entering lands, etc., tax-deeds which the evidence shows are void may be treated as color of title; and if the defendant took possession under them, they are admissible in evidence as tending to show what and how much land he claimed: Hoffman v. Harrington, 28 M. 90.

85. In an action of trespass to lands, where the plaintiff is not in actual possession, but bases his right upon the legal title and the constructive possession claimed to be drawn therefrom, evidence of tax-titles held by third persons is admissible; such titles being prima facie paramount, and therefore, unless overcome, defeating plaintiff's right of action: Tolles v. Duncombe, 84 M. 101.

86. In trespass qu. cl. fr. it is proper to show the malicious arrest of the plaintiff to keep him out of the way during the trespass: Druse v. Wheeler, 22 M. 439.

87. In an action for trespass evidence of a previous conversation between plaintiff and a third person about splitting rails to fence the land was held admissible as tending to show acts of ownership: Gordon v. Cook, 47 M. 248.

88. A defendant in trespass held properly asked whether plaintiff had not arrested him for going on the premises at the time of the trespass: Ibid.

89. In an action against joint defendants for a trespass committed in May there was no error in excluding a question as to whether one of the defendants was occupying the place at the time witness cut some grass there, the grass being cut in the following fall: Ibid.

90. Defendant in trespass for cutting and removing timber may be cross-examined as to whether he had ever made an offer to plaintiff for the timber on the particular tract from which it was taken, as the answer might bear on the value of the timber before severance: Skeels v. Starrett, 57 M. 350.

91. And where the declaration alleges injury to the timber remaining on the land it is proper to show how its value would be affected by the removal: Ibid.

92. One who is shown to have made a scale of logs can use it to aid his memory in testifying, in an action of trespass for cutting and removing timber, as to the quantity taken away: Ibid.

(f) Court and jury; instructions.

93. Where a plaintiff makes out a prima facie case of entry and ouster and there is evidence that the defendant had previously parted with his interest in the premises, there is enough as between the parties to go to the jury: Tracy v. Butters, 40 M. 406.

94. Where plaintiff, as holder of the legal title, has the right of possession, where the acts constituting the alleged trespass are not disputed, and where there is no testimony tending to show that the entry was with the consent of plaintiff or his agent, the case should go to the jury on the question of damages: Solomon v. Groesbeck, 65 M. 540.

95. Where joint defendants were sued in trespass and one of them on direct examination testified that he was not present when the trespass was committed, but on cross-examination testified that he was, and there was no other testimony that he was not there, it was held that there was no contested question as to his presence for the jury: Gordon v. Cook, 47 M. 248.

96. Defendant in a suit for trespass upon land belonging to an estate in process of settlement justified under an agreement which he claimed to have made with decedent's widow that he might use the land for a year or until the estate should be settled. There was evidence tending to show that it might be settled within a year. Held, that a charge that plaintiff could not recover if the jury should find that defendant was to have the use of the land while the estate was being administered was erroneous; the question should have been submitted whether the arrangement was to last until, or end with, the settlement of the estate, irrespective of the time it should take to settle it: Patterson v. Patterson, 54 M. 844.

97. Plaintiff in trespass for cutting and removing timber claimed to have constructive possession under certain probate proceedings; and defendant asked a charge that to entitle him to recover he must show title. Held, that a charge that "plaintiff's title or color of title and possession and occupation were sufficient to entitle him to maintain the action" did not take from the jury the question whether the title was valid or not: Hoffman v. Harrington, 44 M. 188.

98. The refusal to charge that the projection of eaves of the boundary of a lot does not constitute a trespass qu. cl. fr. is not material error if only nominal damages are awarded as for such trespass, while a verdict is rendered at the same time for a substantial encroachment: Bureau v. Marshall, 55 M. 234.

99. In an action of trespass for damages for several alleged trespasses by defendant's cattle, the trial court charged the jury erroneously as to the duty to keep up fences, and there was a general verdict for plaintiff, but for less than he claimed. Held, on error brought by plaintiff, that it could not be said on such a verdict that the jury must have found the fence sufficient; for they might have found the fence sufficient at some of the times when trespasses were complained of and insufficient at others: Aylesworth v. Herrington, 17 M. 417.

(g) Judgment; costs.

As to the verdict and judgment in cases where treble damages are sought, see DAMAGES, §§ 434-441.

100. A judgment in trespass qu. cl. fr. does not bar a subsequent ejectment suit for the same premises, even though the parties in both suits are the same: Keyser v. Sutherland, 59 M. 455.

101. In this state a judgment in trespass is not evidence of the title to land: Busch v. Nester, 62 M. 381.

102. In trespass for tearing down a line fence defendant pleaded title and judgment was rendered in his favor. Held, that such judgment is not conclusive evidence that defendant had title to the fence or to the line which it had enclosed, and settled nothing but defendant's non-liability to plaintiff for having torn it down: Fahey v. Crotty, 68 M. 383.

That where separate judgments are obtained against joint trespassers execution on one bars action on another, see JUDGMENTS, § 247.

103. H. S. § 8964 gives costs to a plaintiff in trespass whatever the amount of his recovery, where the title to land is put in issue by the pleadings or comes in question on the trial: Druse v. Wheeler, 22 M. 439.

104. And it gives costs in cases where the title to land is put in issue by the pleadings as well as where it actually comes in question upon the trial: Walters v. Tefft, 57 M. 390.

105. A general verdict under a declaration in trespass qu. cl. fr. which contains a count for removing personalty after unlawful entry warrants a judgment for costs if title was put in issue by the pleadings: Ibid.

106. A declaration in justice's court for injury to certain described land alleged title to be in plaintiff, and defendant, filing bond and plea with notice of title in himself, had the cause certified to the circuit court, where plaintiff failed because the conveyance under which he claimed showed a life title in his grantors, his other evidence showing that he was merely working the land on shares for one of said grantors who was in possession. Held, that defendant was entitled to costs; it made no difference that his own title was not necessarily in the case or that it was not interposed on the trial: Labeau v. Labeau, 61 M. 81.

As to when title to land comes in question, see supra, §§ 1, 76, 77; JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, §§ 50-57.

II. TRESPASS TO PERSON OR PERSONALTY.

See ASSAULT AND BATTERY; FALSE IMPRISONMENT; TROVER.

(a) What constitutes; when lies; who may bring; who liable.

107. The clandestine entry of a claimant upon premises of which another has been given possession by legal process makes him a tortious intruder whom the lawful possessor may expel by force, if need be, and if the intruder is accidentally injured in the process of expulsion, his own contributory negligence should be considered in fixing the responsibility therefor: Taylor v. Adams, 58 M. 187.

108. The license impliedly given to enter another's place of business is revoked the moment the person so entering interferes unlawfully with the proprietor's rights or property: Webber v. Barry, 66 M. 127.

109. The license to enter another's private office implied by the opening of such office to the public for the transaction of business with the owner is revoked at once as to a person who is ordered to leave; and one who has been forbidden to enter is a trespasser when he goes in: Breitenbach v. Trowbridge, 64 M. 393.

110. The common-law action of trespass lies for injuries done to plaintiff's horse and carriage by defendant's not turning to the right on a highway as required by H. S. § 1456; and it seems that the limitation of one year fixed by H. S. § 1457 would apply to this as well as to the public prosecution or the statutory action there provided for: Evers v. Sager, 28 M. 32.

111. One who owns a growing crop, but not the land whereon it is growing, may recover for it in trespass as constructively severed, although a portion of it was still uncut when defendant's forcible interference occurred: McDaniels v. Walker, 44 M. 88.

112. Trespass is the proper action to be brought for an injury to plaintiff's cow, caused by defendant setting his dog upon her: Wood v. La Rue, 9 M. 158.

See ANIMALS, §§ 10-15, 83.

117. Where a mortgagee of chattels waives his priority and with the second mortgagee takes possession on default, they may join in trespass for an unlawful interference with the goods: Densmore v. Matthews, 58 M. 616.

As to trespass brought by copartners, see PARTIES, §§ 111, 114, 116.

118. One who after lawfully entering on premises carefully removes property there situated, and so leaves it that the owner, by exercising reasonable diligence, can take it uninjured, is not liable for injuries sustained to it by the owner's unreasonable delay in taking it: United States Manuf. Co. v. Stevens, 52 M. 330.

119. C. hired a steam saw and agreed to furnish fuel. H. had some wood on C.'s premises, and part of it being taken for fuel he sued C. in trespass. Held proper to charge that C. would be liable if he furnished it to the workmen, or if he made no objection when he saw it taken and used: Coon v. Houghton, 47 M. 240.

(b) Pleading and evidence.

120. Where trespass for cutting and carrying away wheat is brought by an assignee of the party injured thereby, a plea of the general issue puts every part of the declaration in issue and denies not only the taking, but the plaintiff's ownership at the time of the alleged trespass: Estey v. Smith, 45 M. 402.

121. In trespass for damages for the detention of property evidence is admissible under the general issue, in mitigation of damages, of a recovery of such property in replevin by the plaintiff, and of a waiver or satisfaction of the damages to which the plaintiff therein was entitled: Delevan v. Bates, 1 M. 97.

122. In trespass for a personal injury all the circumstances of the transaction may be shown under the general issue, to have such effect as they deserve in determining the verdict by mitigation or otherwise: Sutherland v. Ingalls, 68 M. 620.

123. In trespass de bonis the defence that the goods were taken under attachment against a third person alleged to be the owner is not admissible under the general issue without notice: Rosenbury v. Angell, 6 M. 508.

124. The relation of landlord and tenant is material and must be shown in an action of trespass brought by the tenant for the removal of his goods by the landlord if the plaintiff counts upon the relation as still subsisting and a constituent fact: United States Manuf. Co. v. Stevens, 52 M. 330.

125. In trespass for the improper seizure of property belonging to an estate, but at the time in the peaceable possession of plaintiff, a question as to whether plaintiff had not converted property belonging to the estate after the owner's death is not material: Waldo v. Waldo, 52 M. 94.

(c) Instructions; damages; judgment.

126. An instruction leaving the jury to determine whether a joint defendant had "approved or defended" a trespass, when there is no evidence to that effect, is erroneous: Pigott v. Lilly, 55 M. 150.

127. The ordinary rule that the damage in trespass de bonis asportatis is the value with interest was applied where the sheriff had taken the property under a void execution issued in replevin proceedings to which plaintiff in trespass was not a party or privy: Rathbone v. Ranney, 14 M. 382.

128. Where a declaration in trespass for taking and detaining a scow expressly avers a detention for a considerable period, damages for such detention are within it: Hart v. Blake, 81 M. 278.

Further as to the measure of damages in trespass for injuries to personal property, see DAMAGES, §§ 120, 175-177, 293-296, 322, 329.

129. A judgment for plaintiff in trespass de bonis, and the satisfaction thereof, vest the

130. A judgment for trespass in seizing property to pay an illegal tax is not affected by a statute legalizing the tax-roll: Moser v. White, 29 M. 59.

III. TRESPASSER AB INITIO; RELATION.

131. Defendant led a gang of men upon plaintiff's premises to induce plaintiff's workmen to join in a strike. Held, that defendant was a trespasser from the time he entered plaintiff's premises, and was responsible for acts of violence committed by his followers at plaintiff's mill, though he told them not to commit any violence, halted them 200 feet from the mill, and did what he could to prevent further violence after they had disobeyed him: Webber v. Barry, 66 M. 127.

132. A plaintiff in attachment who instructs an officer to make a levy is not rendered a trespasser ab initio by the officer's failure to perform his duty properly: Michels v. Stork, 44 M. 2.

133. A tax-collector who has levied on property is not necessarily a trespasser ab initio in keeping it a little longer than is necessary in giving notice and making sale: Bird v. Perkins, 33 M. 28.

134. An officer's threshing wheat that he has levied upon in the mow, though a technical trespass, does not oblige the jury to award damages as if his levy was unwarranted: Stilson v. Gibbs, 40 M. 42.

135. Subsequent acts or neglects rendering one a trespasser ab initio and depriving him of the protection to which he was at first entitled must appear to have been done before suit was instituted: Norton v. Rockey, 46 M. 460.

136. The doctrine of relation is intended to promote justice and prevent wrong, not to make persons trespassers for acts that were legal when done: Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Gordon, 41 M. 420; Goetchius v. Sanborn, 46 M. 380. See Whipple v. Farrar, 3 M. 486; Blackwood v. Brown, 29 M. 483; Heffron v. Flanigan, 37 M. 274; Hemmingway v. Drew, 47 M. 554.

138. The relation back of the title of a defendant in trespass de bonis asportatis arising from his satisfying the judgment against him cannot affect third persons so as to make them trespassers in respect to acts done by them after the suit was commenced and before the judgment: Bacon v. Kimmell, 14 M. 201.

139. A tax-deed cannot by relation make parties trespassers by reason of acts done upon the lands before it was given: Hess v. Griggs, 43 M. 397.

IV. JOINT TRESPASSERS; RATIFICATION OF TRESPASS.

Separate judgments, election, see JUDGMENTS, § 247.

143. Where an overseer of highways is liable for a lawless act — as in cutting drains that must flood private lands — all his assistants are liable with him for the consequent injury: Cubit v. O'Dett, 51 M. 847.

144. A landlord placed a writ of possession in an officer's hands for service, who, meeting with opposition from the tenant's wife, handcuffed her and kept her in that condition while he executed the writ. No violence on the landlord's part was alleged or proved. Held, that the latter could not be held as a joint wrong-doer with the officer: Sutherland v. Ingalls, 63 M. 620.

145. Persons contracting to purchase timber which is to become theirs as soon as marked are not thereby made joint wrong-doers with their vendor who is not their agent, if without their knowledge or consent, or subsequent ratification, he cuts the timber from another's land: Nield v. Burton, 49 M. 53.

That co-trespasser cannot become assignee and sue his fellows, see ASSIGNMENT, § 82.

146. One cannot be liable as for the ratification of a tort that was not committed in his interest; so held where suit was brought against the general agent of a sewing-machine company for a forcible trespass committed by employees while removing a machine by his direction and in compliance with the orders of the company from the premises of one who held it under a sewing-machine lease which had been forfeited: Smith v. Lozo, 42 M. 6.

147. Ratification by a father of a trespass committed by his minor son in taking up an estray is equivalent to a prior command so far as liability is concerned, but it establishes no ground on which he can found title to the property: Newsom v. Hart, 14 M. 233.

V. TRESPASS FOR INJURIES DONE UNDER PROCESS.

148. Where attorneys procured an order for a capias from a court having authority to issue process against the person of the defendant, and under which he was arrested, and they were sued in trespass therefor, it was held that, though the order for capias might be erroneous, it was not void, and the attorneys were protected by it: Ward v. Cozzens, 3 M. 252.

149. Where parties act within the scope of an order of a court of superior jurisdiction, or of an inferior court in a case where such court has jurisdiction, they are protected by the same immunities that are extended to the members of the respective courts: Ibid.

150. Trespass will not lie for an act done under a process valid on its face regularly issued from a court of competent jurisdiction: Ortman v. Greenman, 4 M. 291.

151. Where the plaintiff in attachment and his attorney, though neither was present or interfered personally, still directed the service of the writ, and after service refused to assent to the release of the property attached, which belonged to another than the defendant, they were held liable to an action of trespass in favor of the owner. Had the attorney merely communicated to the officer the plaintiff's instructions, the case as to him might have been different: Cook v. Hopper, 28 M. 511.

152. A client is responsible for his attorney's conduct in procuring the issue of an execution unauthorized by law: Foster v. Wiley, 27 M. 244.

153. No liability as for trespass can attach to one for merely employing an officer to execute lawful process; he has a right to suppose that the officer will not abuse his functions, and if he has lawfully employed him he is not liable if he does. It is only when he himself orders or encourages lawlessness on the officer's part that he can be treated as a joint wrong-doer with him, and then he is liable as an actual trespasser and to the extent of his own misconduct: Sutherland v. Ingalls, 68 M. 620.

154. A levy on property of a stranger to the process is a trespass, though the writ is valid: Weber v. Henry, 16 M. 399; Heyman v. Covell, 36 M. 157.

155. A levy on specific partnership chattels of an attachment against one partner only is a trespass: Haynes v. Knowles, 36 M. 407.

156. Where one who has purchased chattels subject to a levy seizes them while under the levy, such seizure is a trespass: Nelson v. Ferris, 80 M. 497.

157. Trespass will not lie for a sheriff's entry to make a levy if a judgment in trover has already been recovered against him for the conversion of the property taken thereon: Finn v. Peck, 47 M. 208.

As to the liability of officers in trespass, the immunity of judicial action and protection by process, see OFFICERS, VI, (b).

158. In trespass for taking away personal property, a judgment in replevin may be shown in mitigation of damages: Briggs v. Milburn, 40 M. 512.

159. In case of such trespass committed under a false pretext of judicial proceedings,—as here, under a chattel mortgage that has ceased to be valid—plaintiff may recover exemplary damages for personal indignities towards him: Ibid.

As to damages from trespass by unlawful levy, see DAMAGES, §§ 102, 103, 180.

TRESPASS ON THE CASE.

See, also, TRESPASS.

As to LIBEL, MALICIOUS PROSECUTION, SEDUCTION, SLANDER, see those titles.

1. An action on the case furnishes the remedy where no specific remedy is given for an injury complained of: Stout v. Keyes, 2 D. 184.

2. Injury done will not support an action on the case; there must be concurrent wrong: Macomber v. Nichols, 34 M. 212.

3. Case is the proper form of action where the injury is consequential and not direct: Barry v. Peterson, 48 M. 263.

4. Prior to H. S. § 7759, case would not lie for a wrongful taking of property, the injury being direct and immediate: Delevan v. Bates, 1 M. 97.

5. The action for malicious prosecution is now simply in case: Hamilton v. Smith, 39 M. 222.

6. Case seems to be the proper action for loss by a carrier of baggage which, with its owner, was carried free: Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Weir, 87 M. 111.

7. Case is the proper action, under our statute, for waste: Lee v. Payne, 4 M. 106.

As to who may sue or be sued in case for waste, see WASTE, §§ 10-12.

8. Case is the proper action for damages from unlawful sales of liquor to plaintiff's husband, etc.: Friend v. Dunks, 87 M. 25, 89 M. 733.

9. Case sustained for damages to property communicated by infection: Eaton v. Winnie, 20 M. 156.

10. And for damages to one's wagon and sleigh from loads of stone deposited by defendant in a public highway through which plaintiff had to drive to reach his own premises: Green v. Belitz, 34 M. 512.

10a. And for injuries resulting from a collision of vehicles caused by defendant's negligence: Bradford v. Ball, 38 M. 673.

11. And for damages caused by snow thrown from defendant's premises upon plaintiff's by the former's order: Barry v. Peterson, 48 M. 263.

12. Where, after plaintiff in replevin had given bond, the property—a buggy—was delivered to her by the officer, and she seated herself therein, whereupon defendant ordered her to leave, and on her refusing had men take it and draw her about in it through the streets, and afterwards carried it off, he was held liable in case for injury and conversion: Ford v. Bushor, 48 M. 534.

13. A creditor, misled by the fraudulent representations of his debtor as to the terms upon which he had compromised with his other creditors, compromised with him. Afterwards, upon discovering the fraud, he brought suit. Held, that by retaining the money received he barred himself from suing in assumpsit, but could sue in case (as to the measure of recovery, see DAMAGES, § 255): Walsh v. Sisson, 49 M. 423.

14. Destruction of the freehold, as by the washing away of land, is an injury for which no one but the owner of the inheritance can recover: Anderson v. Thunder Bay River Boom Co., 57 M. 216.

15. In an action on the case for the disturbance of rights held under a contract of lease, any one who has rights of possession derived from the lease can sue for their disturbance and recover his actual damages: Ives v. Willtams, 53 M. 636.

16. A purchaser of lands at a mortgage sale, after his title is perfected by failure of the mortgager to redeem, may maintain an action on the case for an injury done to the estate maliciously, and with knowledge of his rights, by the cutting and carrying away growing timber, after the purchase and before the time for redemption expired: Stout v. Keyes, 2 D. 184.

17. Where plaintiff claims that defendant has failed in the performance of an undertaking to become co-signer of a note and to pay the same at maturity, in consideration of which promise plaintiff signed it, case is not the proper action; the incidents of case and assumpsit differ in several important respects, especially concerning joinder of parties and set-offs: Potter v. Brown, 85 M. 274.

18. A count alleging that defendants "falsely and fraudulently" represented a note held by them, and given in exchange for plaintiff's property, to be good and the maker responsible, implies a scienter, is a count in case, not in assumpsit, and may be joined with one in trover: Beebe v. Knapp, 28 M. 53.

19. Where a party who has been induced to exchange personalty by means of a false warranty of the property received sets out in his declaration the false warranty as the means whereby he was injured, and avers a breach, his pleading may be held one in case if the essentials of that action appear: Carter v. Glass, 44 M. 154.

As to the pleadings in case, see, further, PLEADINGS, §§ 232-256, 519-546.

20. A parol license is a defence to an action of trespass on the case: Millerd v. Reeves, 1 M. 107.

As to the damages in trespass on the case, see DAMAGES.

That judgment in case is not evidence of title to land, see EVIDENCE, § 231.

As to waiver of trover and suit in assumpsit, see ASSUMPSIT, II.

When trover barred by judgment in replevin, see REPLEVIN, §§ 883, 884.

I. RIGHT OF ACTION; CONVERSION.

(a) What constitutes conversion.

1. The effect of a wrongful act by which another is deprived of his property is what constitutes the conversion; the intention is of little consequence except when malicious: Gibbons v. Farwell, 63 M. 344.

2. Conversion is not necessarily the complete and absolute deprivation of the property, but may be a partial or temporary deprivation, the owner retaining possession or regaining it; the difference is only a question of damages, which, in the latter case, are usually less than the whole value of the property: Daggett v. Davis, 53 M. 35.

3. Until timber has become personalty by severance from the soil it is not subject to conversion, and when severed a conversion may be charged as taking place where it is sold or otherwise disposed of or appropriated, as well as on the first removal: Greeley v. Stilson, 27 M. 153.

4. The owner of land from which timber is cut may treat the removal of the logs from his land as a conversion, or the time when such logs are manufactured into lumber in an adjoining county may be treated as the period of conversion: Final v. Backus, 18 M. 218.

5. Where the grantee of land knows that the timber has been sold to another with the right to take his own time to remove it, such grantee converts it if he cuts the timber down without giving notice: Wood v. Elliott, 51 M. 320.

6. A removal of a growing crop by one who had bought the land at a probate sale with knowledge of the rights of another in the crop was held to be a conversion: Weldon v. Lytle, 53 M. 1.

7. Where there have been several unlawful sales on executions against the same party, he may treat each as a conversion and is not required to consolidate: Wheeler v. Wallace, 53 M. 864.

8. It is a conversion for the vendor of chattels, after receiving part of the purchase price, to sell them to a third person on the failure of the first purchaser to take them away promptly at the time fixed: Bowser v. Birdsell, 49 M. 5.

9. Property which is taken out from the operation of a chattel mortgage by the mortgager's fraudulent contrivance is wrongfully converted (see CAPIAS AD RESP., § 19): Hicks's Case, 20 M. 280.

10. A. contracted with B. for wood, to be placed on the premises of a railway company, and to be inspected by the company's inspector, but to remain B.'s until paid for. A. then contracted with the company to deliver them a large amount of similar wood, and the company's agent, with his co-operation, appropriated B.'s wood delivered but not paid for. Held, a conversion: Carroll v. McCleary, 19 M. 98.

11. A paving company that had forfeited its contract left sand in the street it had agreed to pave, which sand was used by another contractor — though the city did not sell it to him — in finishing the job. Held, that there was no conversion by the city: Detroit v. Michigan Paving Co., 38 M. 358.

12. The conversion of a certificate of stock is a conversion of the stock where by means of it the value of the stock is realized: Morton v. Preston, 18 M. 60.

13. Withholding possession of a certificate of stock cannot amount to a conversion of the stock itself so long as the certificate is not indorsed; but it may amount to a technical conversion of the certificate: Daggett v. Davis, 53 M. 35.

14. Where a defendant disposes of property for his own use it amounts to a conversion, whether he was tenant in common with the plaintiff of the property or otherwise: Webb v. Mann, 8 M. 189; Tolan v. Hodgeboom, 38 M. 624.

15. Where a tenant in common of grain denies that his co-tenant has any rights and refuses to give up any portion to him, there is a conversion: Fiquet v. Allison, 12 M. 328; McLaughlin v. Salley, 46 M. 219.

16. And this is true a fortiori, where the tenancy in common was only created for the purpose of agency; as where wheat is stored by plaintiff in defendant's elevator: Erwin v. Clark, 13 M. 10.

17. Where a tenant in common of an indivisible chattel holding possession thereof claims sole ownership and refuses to allow his co-tenant to hold at all, this is a conversion, and trover lies: Bray v. Bray, 30 M. 479; Grove v. Wise, 39 M. 161.

18. Where one co-tenant was bound to the other by contract to deliver and divide joint property at a certain place, but appropriated it to his exclusive use, and under circumstances which rendered a division and delivery in the manner agreed upon impracticable, held, that it amounted to a conversion and that trover would lie: Ripley v. Davis, 15 M. 75.

19. A. and B. agreed that B. should sow A.'s land and harvest and haul to market such part of the produce as A. should direct; and as to a crop already planted B. agreed to "put the produce in market," and was to receive half the proceeds when it should be sold. It was also agreed that neither should dispose of undivided common property without the other's consent. B. sold a portion of the crop, and stored a portion in a third person's granary without A.'s consent. Held, that there was a conversion, and that A. was entitled to recover one-half the market value at the time and place of the conversion: Baylis v. Cronkite, 39 M. 413.

20. A refusal to deliver property received in store at the bailor's risk, "to be paid when called for," is a conversion: Bates v. Stansel, 19 M. 91.

21. Where one who has a lien on goods leaves them with his bailee, who ships them against his directions, this is a conversion; and the owner's orders to ship them would not justify the bailee though they might affect the question of damages: Edwards v. Frank, 40 M. 616.

22. Where, on demand and presentation of the check he has given therefor, the proprietor of a skating rink neglects, simply for the reason that he cannot find them, to deliver skates which he has taken in charge, there is a conversion for which trover lies: Donlin v. McQuade, 61 M. 275.

23. Where one who contracted to buy a cabinet organ bound himself to keep the organ in his possession as the property and subject to the directions of the vendor until it was paid for, afterwards, upon separating from his wife, gave the organ to her, held, a conversion for which he would be liable in trover to the vendor for the amount still due on the contract: Johnston v. Whittemore, 27 M. 463.

24. Where leased property was left with the lessor's assent in possession of the lessee beyond his term, and there is no evidence that it was demanded or distinctly refused, notice by the lessee to the lessor that the latter must remove the property or be charged rent is equivalent to an offer to deliver it, and rebuts the presumption of conversion by the lessee; and this also where such notice is not given directly to the lessor, but to a third person who communicates it to him: Thompson v. Moesta, 27 M. 182.

25. Where, without authority therefor, the bailee of a note delivers it to the maker for destruction, there is a conversion: Hicks v. Lyle, 46 M. 488.

26. A. agreed to sell lands to B. to be transferred to C., and took from D., who had agreed to become security for B., his note for the purchase price, on the understanding that the note should be returned and the deed destroyed if the sale to C. did not occur. The sale was not effected, and D. tendered the deed to A. and demanded his note, but tender and demand were refused, A. having discounted the note and used the proceeds. Held, that A. had only a conditional title to the note, and that a sale by him was a conversion, rendering him liable in trover: Brown v. St. Charles, 66 M. 71.

27. Delivery by a carrier of goods to a third party without the consent of the consignor or consignee is a conversion and renders the carrier liable in trover: Gibbons v. Farwell, 63 M. 844.

28. An officer is liable for conversion who levies on property not belonging to the defendant in the writ, inventories it, has it appraised, takes possession of the key to the building in which it is stored and subjects it completely to his control: Cook v. Hopper, 23 M. 511.

29. A sale on execution without removal of personal property belonging to a third person is a conversion: Scudder v. Anderson, 54 M. 123.

30. Plaintiff sued defendant in trover for selling on a tax-warrant a quantity of hay, which she claimed as her own, to satisfy a tax assessed against her husband. Defendant took no possession of the hay, but advertised and sold it in the mow and left it there. Held, no conversion: Mills v. Van Camp, 41 M. 645.

31. Judgment in trover for conversion is sustained by a finding that defendant, in making a levy as sheriff upon wheat belonging to plaintiff's father-in-law, had taken away part of a common mass and put the rest in another bin after being warned by plaintiff that he had wheat there which must not be taken: Behler v. Drury, 51 M. 111.

32. Retention of fees from the proceeds of a wrongful levy is a conversion: Bringard v. Stellwagen, 41 M. 54.

33. And crediting to plaintiff the proceeds of such a levy is no bar to trover for such conversion: Ibid.

34. A town treasurer's refusal to pay over public moneys in his hands upon proper demand at the expiration of his term is a conversion: Monroe v. Whipple, 56 M. 516.

35. A conversion is not excused by the subsequent taking of the property from defendant on an attachment against plaintiff: Erie Preserving Co. v. Witherspoon, 49 M. 877.

(b) For what trover lies.

36. Trover or case rather than assumpsit is the proper remedy against a gratuitous bailee of bonds who delivers them without receiving anything therefor to a third party claiming title: Barnum v. Stone, 27 M. 332.

37. Trover lies for the conversion of a promissory note: Rose v. Lewis, 10 M. 483.

38. Or of a note payable in chattels: Hicks v. Lyle, 46 M. 488.

39. Trover lies for conversion of shares of stock: Morton v. Preston, 18 M. 60. Or for conversion of a stock certificate: Ibid.; Daggett v. Davis, 53 M. 35.

40. Trover lies to recover the value of goods obtained from plaintiff by false representations recklessly made, without knowing of their truth or falsehood, for a fraudulent purpose: Beebe v. Knapp, 28 M. 53.

41. Trover lies for goods obtained by defendant through fraud or deceit practiced on plaintiff; and plaintiff need not have accepted every statement as literally true or count on any precise words. And fraud outside of any written statement made may be considered by the jury: Heineman v. Steiger, 54 M. 232.

42. Trover lies to recover the value of wheat received by the proprietor of an elevator to be stored in common bins under a contract to redeliver on return of the receipt properly indorsed: Erwin v. Clark, 13 M. 10.

43. Trover will not lie for an animal taken damage feasant and held by the distrainer where there is no public pound, and if notice is given as required by H. S. § 8362, or is waived by the owner's conduct: Norton v. Rockey, 46 M. 460.

44. Where machinery is sold to be set up in a mill, but with a stipulation that title shall not pass until it is paid for, and without the vendor's knowledge it is so attached to the realty as to make it, under ordinary circumstances, a fixture, and before it is paid for the property is sold to some person who had sufficient knowledge of the owner's claim to put him on inquiry, trover will lie for the conversion of the machinery: Ingersoll v. Barnes, 47 M. 104.

45. Trover for conversion will not lie against one who without notice has purchased real property, a part of which had been sold to the lessees of his vendor as personalty, with a stipulation that title should not pass until it was paid for, but which had been allowed to be made a part of the realty. So held where a man bought a mill without notice that the water-wheels were subject to such an arrangement: Knowlton v. Johnson, 37 M. 47.

46. Trover does not lie on the refusal to surrender property which plaintiff himself has annexed to the freehold intending it to be a fixture. So held where a dealer in gas-manufacturing machines had caused one to be placed in a house which he afterwards found belonged to the wife of the man who contracted that the machine should be placed there: Morrison v. Berry, 42 M. 339.

47. Where ties were taken and used by the subcontractor for building a railroad, and the road was in use before it was delivered to the company, the owner of the ties, after waiting until they had become realty, cannot bring trover against the company as for their conversion: Detroit & B. C. R. Co. v. Busch, 43 M. 571.

48. One who builds a house on land held by him under a partly-performed parol contract for purchase, and who rents it to a tenant, cannot treat it as personalty and bring trover as for conversion against a third party who ousts the tenant under claim of title: Bracelin v. McLaren, 59 M. 827.

49. A. sold logs to B.'s agent under a contract that title should not vest in B. before payment, and then having put B.'s mark on the logs he delivered them to the agent. They were mingled in a boom company's boom with logs similarly marked bought from other parties, from which boom a greater quantity of logs was delivered to B. than was sold by A., and the logs remaining could not be identified as those which A. sold. The agent having failed in his payments, A. notified defendant that he had rescinded the contract and that he claimed the logs. Held, that A. could not hold the boom company liable in trover for logs delivered to B. after such notice, or for a pro rata share of all the logs bearing B.'s mark that were afloat that year and became mingled in defendant's boom, for by placing B.'s mark on the logs A. waived the contract clause retaining title; and furthermore, in trover it is necessary to identify the property claimed in the declaration: Hance v. Tittabawassee Boom Co., 70 M. 227.

50. A. by mistake cut logs on B.'s land and mixed them with his own. B. subsequently sorted out a quantity equal to what had been taken from his land, and put his brand on them in addition to A.'s. Defendant, a boom company, under the usual contract with A.,

ran all the logs down stream, and on B.'s demand delivered to him the double-branded logs. Held, that as A., though an innocent trespasser, acquired no property in B.'s logs, and as he had no lien on them for the labor and expense of cutting and transporting them, and as the conversion of trees into logs does not change the title to the property or destroy its identity, he could not hold defendant liable in trover: Gates v. Rifle Boom Co., 70 M. 309 (May 18, '88).

51. A. sold timber to B. to be cut from A.'s land, and by the contract retained a lien until payment. B. sold shingles manufactured from timber cut under this contract and from other timber to C., who bought relying on B.'s apparently exclusive ownership of the whole, which reliance was warranted by A.'s method of dealing with B. Under such circumstances A. could not lawfully seize and hold, out of the common mass of shingles so sold to C., the quantity called for by his timber, and was liable in trover to C. if he did: Foster v. Warner, 49 M. 641.

52. As to the liability in trover of one whose logs have been fraudulently mixed by another with his own, and who has made sale, see Stephenson v. Little, 10 M. 433.

Fraudulent intermixture a question for jury, see infra, § 169.

(c) Who can maintain trover.

53. Where one who claimed certain property, which an officer was about to attach as belonging to another, first told the officer that if he attached it he must do so on his own responsibility, afterwards said that he would give a bond for the release of the property and show it to be his own, and still later said that he had concluded not to give a bond, but should replevy, and then went with the officer to get permission to leave the property in a certain building, and helped to arrange therefor, it was held that evidence of this did not prove an agreement that the property might be attached, and that the title should afterwards be tried in replevin, but that the claimant was at liberty, notwithstanding his statements, to bring trover, or to seek any other redress than that proposed: Cook v. Hopper, 23 M. 511.

54. A contract provided that certain attachment suits between the parties should be discontinued and the attached goods consigned to a person named, who should deliver them only on joint order signed by all the parties. The suits were discontinued, but the consignee declined to receive the goods, and the former attaching party got possession of them. Held, that as the goods were no longer under attachment, and could not be held under the contract, because the failure of the bailee to act left such contract inoperative, trover would lie for their conversion: Orr v. Keyes, 37 M. 385.

55. In trover the right of property is in issue; and, to sustain the action, the plaintiff must prove property in himself, either general or special: Stephenson v. Little, 10 M. 433.

56. To entitle plaintiff to recover he must show (1) property in himself, and a right of possession at the time of conversion; and (2) a conversion of the goods by defendant to his own use: Eureka Iron, etc. Works v. Bresnahan, 66 M. 489.

57. Plaintiff must affirmatively show his ownership and right of immediate possession: Ribble v. Lawrence, 51 M. 569.

58. One who has a present right of possession and a personal interest can bring trover; so held of one who at the owner's request had advanced money to pay an hotel-keeper's lien on a boarder's trunk, which payment was accepted by the hotel-keeper, who placed the trunk at plaintiff's disposal, but subsequently sent it elsewhere: Edwards v. Frank, 40 M. 616.

59. One who had neither possession nor the immediate right to it cannot maintain trover: Axford v. Mathews, 48 M. 327; Foster v. Lumberman's Mining Co., 68 M. 186 (Jan. 12, '88).

60. As plaintiff in trover must have had either actual possession of the property or immediate right to it, judgment on special findings must go for defendant unless such possession or facts showing such right are found: Stevenson v. Fitzgerald, 47 M. 166.

61. Trover is not an equitable action; and to maintain it plaintiff must show his right of possession to property described in the declaration: Hance v. Tittabawassee Boom Co., 70 M. 227.

62. Where mortgagers of chattels have assigned for the benefit of their creditors, the assignee cannot bring trover against an officer for goods seized by him under attachment while they were in the mortgagee's possession holding adversely to the assignee: Axford v. Mathews, 48 M. 327.

63. One who had the possession of personal property may bring trover against a mere stranger, and the latter cannot question his right: Cullen v. O'Hara, 4 M. 182.

64. The possessor of personal property of an intestate may maintain trover for its conversion against a wrong-doer, or one having no better right than himself; and if the possessor die, his administrator may also bring trover for a conversion of the property taking place after his intestate's death, and prior to his own appointment as administrator: Ibid.

65. An officer who has levied on property by virtue of a judgment and execution against the owner and who has left it with a custodian has a sufficient interest to enable him to bring trover for its conversion against one who takes it away under a claim of superior right: Witherspoon v. Clegg, 42 M. 484.

66. It seems that one who receipts to a sheriff for property seized under an execution has a sufficient interest to enable him to maintain trover or replevin against a wrong-doer: Burk v. Webb, 32 M. 178.

67. A vendee and mortgagee permitted by the vendor and mortgagee to remain in possession of the chattels sold and mortgaged may maintain trover for their value against a trespasser, and the latter cannot defend by showing that the mortgagee has the right of possession: Parkhurst v. Jacobs, 17 M. 802.

68. Even before condition broken a mortgagee of chattels entitled under his mortgage to the possession thereof can maintain trover for their conversion: Grove v. Wise, 39 M. 161.

69. A mortgagee may maintain trover against a sheriff who, having taken the mortgaged chattels on attachment or execution against the mortgager, sells them in parcels; such a sale is an unlawful conversion: Worthington v. Hanna, 23 M. 530; Ganong v. Green, 64 M. 488.

70. An assignee for the benefit of creditors can maintain trover against a sheriff for the full value of property assigned subject to valid mortgages and seized by defendant on attachments issued after the assignment was made and before actual filing of the assignee's bond: Coots v. Radford, 47 M. 37.

71. Where chattels owned by one partner, but used by the firm without being converted into partnership assets, were mortgaged by the other partner without the owner's knowledge, and were sold by the mortgagee under the mortgage, a former mortgagee from the owner can maintain trover against the latter mortgagee for their conversion: Cutler v. Hake, 47 M. 80.

72. The vendee in a bill of sale made by one partner of the partnership property to secure his individual debts cannot maintain trover where the other partner did not sanction the sale, and where there are partnership debts outstanding: Kingsbury v. Sharp, 61 M. 216.

73. One cannot maintain trover for timber excepted and reserved to him in a deed on condition that he remove it by a given date, unless he proves that he took it away in the time limited: Richards v. Tozer, 27 M. 451.

75. Defendants in replevin may maintain trover for the value of property not found on execution issued in their favor for its return; the remedy on the bond is not exclusive: Smith v. Demarrais, 39 M. 14.

76. Defendant in replevin may bring trover against plaintiff for property delivered to the latter under the writ if the replevin suit has abated by the justice's removal from his township: Kidder v. Merryhew, 32 M. 470.

77. One who has title to goods by virtue of a voluntary assignment to him under a foreign insolvent law may bring trover here for their value against his assignor: Burrows v. Keays, 37 M. 430.

78. One who submits peaceably to the seizure of goods under process from the court of bankruptcy is not precluded from bringing trover against the officer who seizes them: Mathews v. Stewart, 44 M. 209.

79. An executor may bring trover for a conversion of his testator's goods that occurred but was not sued on in testator's life-time: Rogers v. Windoes, 48 M. 628.

80. An administratrix is not estopped from bringing trover for conversion of stock belonging to the estate by her action before appointment in indorsing the certificate of such stock: Morton v. Preston, 18 M. 60.

81. A wife may bring trover for the value of an animal belonging to her husband and exempt from execution which is unlawfully sold by a poundmaster: Ingersoll v. Gage, 47 M. 121.

82. A township whose treasurer converts its moneys to his own use by not paying them out on proper demand or failing to surrender them at the end of his term may sue him in trover: Monroe v. Whipple, 56 M. 516.

83. A right of action in trover for conversion is assignable: Final v. Backus, 18 M. 218; Brady v. Whitney, 24 M. 154; Grant v. Smith, 26 M. 201; Dayton v. Fargo, 45 M. 153, 155.

84. And the assignee may sue in his own name: Final v. Backus, 18 M. 218; Grant v. Smith, 26 M. 201; Upham v. Dickinson, 38 M. 333.

85. But one joint wrong-doer, having paid the injured party's claim, cannot take from him an assignment of his right of action and maintain in his own or in his assignor's name a suit for the amount of the injury: Upham v. Dickinson, 38 M. 338.

(d) Who are liable.

86. An outstanding title in a third person, to avail as a defence in trover brought against a trespasser, must be such as to displace, repel or exclude the right asserted by the action: Parkhurst v. Jacobs, 17 M. 302.

87. One who hired a horse for a specified journey and drove it beyond what his contract contemplated, so that the horse died, was held in trover for its value: Fisher v. Kyle, 27 M. 454.

88. Otherwise where the driving was within what the contract contemplated as to distance, time, etc.: Ruggles v. Fay, 31 M. 141.

89. A mortgagee of chattels who sells them before condition broken is liable in trover for not restoring them upon a proper tender of the amount due: Eslow v. Mitchell, 26 M. 500.

90. A mortgagee of chattels who, where only one instalment of his mortgage is due, sells further after that is satisfied, is chargeable with a conversion: Brink v. Freoff, 40 M. 610, 44 M. 69.

91. A vendee, though a bona fide one, is liable in trover if he refuses to deliver up the goods to one who holds a mortgage, of which the vendee has notice, that includes them as after-acquired property: American Cigar Co. v. Foster, 36 M. 868.

92. Trover will not lie against purchasers on foreclosure of a chattel mortgage where plaintiff is precluded from attacking the mortgage, or has no right to contest the possession: Lyle v. Palmer, 42 M. 314.

93. As between a mortgagee of chattels and a second mortgagee, whose mortgage was executed after possession of the property had been surrendered to the former, a sale of the property upon the first mortgage does not constitute such a conversion as to make the first mortgagee liable in trover: Grimes v. Rose, 24 M. 416.

94. Any parol understanding between mortgager and mortgagee regarding the possession of the mortgaged chattels could afford third parties who had unlawfully converted the property no protection against the mortgagee's action of trover: Harvey v. McAdams, 32 M. 472.

95. A contract purchaser of land who wrongfully cuts and sells timber before making full payment is not liable in trover if he makes or tenders such payment before suit: Haven v. Beidler Manuf. Co., 40 M. 286.

96. In trover by the purchaser against the vendor for the conversion of wood and timber sold on a contract providing for the removal thereof within specified periods, a finding that the vendor sued for and recovered judgment against the purchaser for failure to perform the contract, which judgment was paid, would support a judgment for the purchaser for the value of the wood and timber, whether the provisions for removal were a covenant or a condition: Green v. Bennett, 23 M. 464.

97. Where an iron mine has been sold on execution, one who buys from the execution debtor ore taken out during the period in which such debtor is allowed to hold possession after sale is not liable in trover to the execution purchaser unless the removal of such ore was an injury to the freehold, and unless he was connected with the injury by having taken part in some act of wrong, or was chargeable with notice of facts that would have divested the execution defendant of his prima facie right to sell: Ward v. Carp River Iron Co., 47 M. 65, 50 M. 522.

98. A common carrier who obtains possession of goods wrongfully, or without the owner's express or implied consent, and who on demand refuses to deliver them to him, is liable in trover for their value: Fitch v. Newberry, 1 D. 1.

99. Where an officer of court has authority to make a sale, e. g., a receiver or assignee in bankruptcy, he is liable in trover if he actually makes a sale, and subsequently refuses to deliver the property sold: Ives v. Tregent, 29 M. 390.

100. An officer who replevies the property described in his writ from another than the defendant owning and holding in good faith is liable in trover: Sexton v. McDowd, 33 M. 148.

101. A's and B's sheep were pasturing in the same lot, and when B. had his son C. remove his sheep to another lot, C. carelessly removed A's sheep also. B. refused A's request to help separate the flocks, and afterward caused C. to remove all the sheep to his farm, still refusing to separate or help to separate them. A., having thus lost his sheep, may recover their value against B. and C. jointly: Willey v. Cox, 25 M. 116.

102. The assent of one of two partners to what is done by a person serving an execution in favor of the firm is presumptively sufficient to hold both partners liable as for conversion: Harvey v. McAdams, 32 M. 472.

103. Trover will lie for property taken under a void judgment, not only against the constable who seized it, but against the judgment creditors if they took part in the proceedings after judgment. So held where the creditors were the members of a firm, and one of them received the property, and refused to give it up, while the other declined to do anything about it, but referred the owner to his partner: Rolfe v. Dudley, 58 M. 208.

104. In trover against a plaintiff and his attorney and the officer in an attachment suit for a wrongful service, by their joint acts, of the writ of attachment upon a stranger's property, it is no answer to their joint liability that, had the taking proved justifiable, the officer only would have had rightful possession: Cook v. Hopper, 28 M. 511.

105. The officer who issues process is not jointly liable for conversion with another officer who in executing such process disregards exemption rights: Bringard v. Stellwagen, 41 M. 54.

When trover barred against joint wrongdoer, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, § 84.

(e) Demand and refusal.

106. One whose property is sold without his authority or ratification need not make formal demand before suing the vendee: Hake v. Buell, 50 M. 89.

107. Trover will not lie without demand for goods held by a bona fide purchaser under a sale made in apparent conformity to a genuine chattel mortgage: Rodgers v. Brittain, 39 M. 477.

108. If a lessor assents to his lessee's holding the leased property over his term, he cannot bring trover against him for its conversion in so doing without first withdrawing his assent and demanding the property. Where the mortgagee of such property told the lessor that it must not be removed from the lessee's possession until the mortgage was reduced, and the lessor said "all right," which the mortgagee communicated to the lessee, telling him not to let the property go, it was held that there was some evidence of such assent: Thompson v. Moesta, 27 M. 182.

109. Where a purchaser at an execution sale of land has full notice of a mortgagee's claim to machinery in a mill on the land under a mortgage given by the owner of the land and machinery prior to the levy of execution, no demand is necessary before suing for the value of such machinery which the execution purchaser has converted to his own use: Manwaring v. Jenison, 61 M. 117.

110. Where a demand for property is made before bringing trover, and defendant replies that he neither admits nor denies the claim, and shall not consent to plaintiff taking away property nor forbid him to do so, there is a sufficient refusal to establish a conversion: Ingersoll v. Barnes, 47 M. 104.

111. Demand and refusal do not of themselves constitute a conversion, but are evidence thereof for a jury: Daggett v. Davis, 53 M. 35.

112. While a bona fide delay for the purpose of consideration and consultation might shield the holder of goods, yet he is guilty of conversion if he detains them against the demand of one entitled to them merely for the purpose of subjecting such party to the delay of a chancery suit without security against loss or destruction of the property: Flannery v. Brewer, 66 M. 509.

II. PLEADING.

(a) The declaration.

113. A declaration in trover need not set forth the precise nature or evidence of plaintiff's title or interest — as, for example, a chattel mortgage whereunder he claims: Harvey v. McAdams, 32 M. 472.

114. A declaration in trover by a mortgagee need not allege that the mortgager was insolvent or that plaintiff had no other security: Worthington v. Hanna, 28 M. 530.

115. A declaration in trover against an officer for the value of exempt goods levied upon must set forth the facts showing the property to be exempt (H. S. § 7343): McCoy v. Brennan, 61 M. 362.

116. A declaration in trover by a sheriff against one who has receipted to him for property taken on execution need not allege that the execution was in full force and effect when the demand for the property was made: Burk v. Webb, 32 M. 173.

117. A declaration in trover for the conversion of a certificate of stock may, it seems, count upon the conversion of the shares as well as of the certificate: Daggett v. Davis, 53 M. 35.

118. In trover by an assignee for the benefit of creditors against his assignor for the value of certain promissory notes covered by the assignment but retained by the assignor, the declaration stated the facts and described the notes as divers promissory notes against sundry persons and in various amounts of great value, to wit, of the value of $4,000. Held, that the description was certain enough: Burrows v. Keays, 37 M. 430.

119. Where one sues in trover for the value of property with which defendant's false representations have induced him to part he need not set up such representations in his declaration: Beebe v. Knapp, 28 M. 53.

120. A declaration in trover by the execution purchaser of an iron mine against one who had bought of the judgment debtor ore taken from the mine after the execution sale, but pending the time allowed for redemption, etc., must allege that the taking of the ore injured the freehold: Ward v. Carp River Iron Co., 47 M. 65.

121. And the mere allegation that the execution defendant had taken out forty thousand tons of ore to the injury of the freehold, would not suffice unless it was also alleged that the removal of the specific quantity (about eight thousand tons) sold to defendant injured the freehold: Id., 50 M. 522.

122. The use of the term "assignee," etc., after plaintiff's name in the declaration, held to be mere descriptio personæ, and not to authorize the construction that the declaration purported to be for a cause of action that had accrued to the assignors prior to the assignment, and claimed to have been passed by the assignment to plaintiff: Bloom v. Sexton, 33 M. 181.

123. A count in trover for surplus retained by a chattel mortgagee after sale may be added to a declaration in case for the damages arising from unlawful conduct in foreclosing: Bearas v. Preston, 66 M. 11.

124. The ordinary count in trover may be joined with a count in case for obtaining the property by false and fraudulent representations: Beebe v. Knapp, 28 M. 53.

125. A count in trover and one in case for the alleged wrongful taking of personal property by a sheriff for the debt of a third party can be joined, and it is error for the court to compel an election on the trial (by two justices; the other two concurring in the result of the case): Wait v. Kellogg, 63 M. 183.

(b) Plea and notice.

126. Where a plea in trover contains the substance of the general issue and a good notice it is sufficient: Adams v. Kellogg, 63 M. 105.

127. Under the general issue in trover defendant may show property in a third person, though plaintiff was in possession: Stephenson v. Little, 10 M. 433.

128. Under the general issue in trover defendant may prove that the title to the goods was in himself, either absolutely as general owner, or specially as bailee, or by way of lien: Eureka Iron, etc. Works v. Bresnahan, 66 M. 489.

129. In trover for chattels taken in attachment against a third person defendant may, without giving special notice of such defence, attack as fraudulent as against creditors a chattel mortgage under which plaintiff claims; though, if the declaration contains a count in trespass on the case setting out his source of title, such a notice, it seems, is necessary: Ibid. See Wait v. Kellogg, 63 M. 133.

130. Where an assignee brings trover for goods taken in attachment against his assignor, defendant must, with the general issue, give notice of his attachment, in order to admit evidence of justification thereunder; and none but attaching or judgment creditors can attack the validity of the assignment: Fry v. Soper, 30 M. 727; Frankel v. Coots, 41 M. 75.

131. In trover by the assignee of a chattel mortgage against an officer who levies upon the chattels by virtue of an execution against one to whom the mortgagor has sold the chattels subject to the mortgage, it is not necessary to give special notice of justification under the judgment, etc.: McLaughlin v. Smith, 45 M. 277.

III. EVIDENCE.

As to evidence in mitigation of damages, see infra, §§ 183-188.

132. In trover it is competent for defendant to impeach plaintiff's right of action by showing that the title to the property was in a third person at the time suit was brought: Stephenson v. Little, 10 M. 433; Westbrook v. Miller, 64 M. 129; Eureka, etc. Iron Works v. Bresnahan, 66 M. 489; Seymour v. Peters, 67 M. 415.

133. Where defendant was not a mere wanton trespasser interfering without pretence of right with plaintiff's peaceable possession, he is entitled to show as a complete defence that the title and the right of immediate possession were in a third person when the suit was brought: Ribble v. Lawrence, 51 M. 560.

134. An officer sued in trover for the value of property seized by him on attachment may show in defence that plaintiff at the time of the seizure had parted with both possession and title and was holding as agent of a third person: Stearns v. Vincent, 30 M. 209.

135. In an action of trover the nature of plaintiff's possession can be inquired into on cross-examining him: Ibid.

136. In trover for value of mortgaged goods seized on execution against the mortgager an agreement between the mortgager and mortgagee by which the latter was entitled to immediate possession with right to hold until mortgage was due or paid, was held admissible in evidence: Ganong v. Green, 64 M. 488, 71 M. 1.

137. In trover, by an administrator against a son of the deceased who had carried on the latter's farm in consideration of certain produce and farm property that was claimed to belong to the estate and to have been converted by the defendant, it was held incumbent on the plaintiff to show definitely that the specific property belonged to the estate; also, that evidence that the intestate had, years before, owned and sold a horse and wagon, and had bought a farm which also, nearly twenty years before, he had sold, buying the farm on which this personalty belonged in his wife's name to avoid payment of his debts, was neither pertinent nor material, at least in the absence of any showing that there were any creditors, or that the prosecution was in the interest of creditors who were in position to attack the conveyance: Hill v. Chambers, 80 M. 422.

138. Evidence showing the continued possession of personal property at a homestead by an intestate's widow is properly admitted as bearing on a claim that it was converted by a son of deceased: Howard v. Patrick, 48 M. 121.

139. In trover for a wrongful levy defendant's motives are immaterial: Allen v. Kinyon, 41 M. 281.

140. In trover for the conversion of timber evidence that defendant, before cutting the timber, bought the land from one claiming to have a tax-title, was offered to show that defendant in cutting the timber honestly supposed that he owned the land and was acting in good faith. Held that, as punitive damages were not sought or given, but only the value of the logs at the place to which defendant took them, the rejection of such evidence could do no harm: Grant v. Smith, 26 M. 201.

141. In an action of trover for the conversion of a heifer which both parties claimed to have raised, and where the question is as to identity, it is competent to ask a witness who has testified to having been among plaintiff's herd of cattle for two or three years as to their being gentle and coming about people. All such other facts and circumstances or characteristics, besides color, as would tend to throw light on the identity would be competent: De Armond v. Neasmith, 82 M. 231.

142. One sued in trover for the conversion of hoops may, to identify and prove his title to them, show that they were taken from certain lands and that he was the owner of such lands. This does not bring the matter of title to lands in question: Hart v. Hart, 48 M. 175.

143. In trover for converting promissory notes plaintiff need not show affirmatively the value of the notes. If they were worthless, that is to be shown in defence: Burrows v. Keays, 37 M. 430.

144. In trover the value of the property in suit only is material, and evidence as to the value of other property described in the bill of sale under which plaintiff claims title is inadmissible: Burrill v. Wilcox Lumber Co., 65 M. 571.

145. In trover for a conversion by means of an execution levy and sale, the concession on the trial that the levy was legal does not preclude objections to the validity of the sale: Harvey v. McAdams, 32 M. 472.

146. In trover by an assignee for conversion of property levied upon by defendant, by virtue of executions against the assignor, evidence on behalf of defendant that the property levied upon was held and sold under a prior levy is admissible to show that defendant had not damnified the plaintiff and had not converted the goods; so, also, is evidence admissible to show that the goods levied on were held and sold for railroad charges which were a prior lien: Smith v. Mitchell, 12 M. 180.

147. In an action of trover for property sold under execution, a judgment in replevin rendered in favor of third parties against plaintiff after the sale was held inadmissible as evidence against plaintiff: Lansing v. Sherman, 30 M. 49.

148. In an action for the conversion of a portion of certain wheat by one of the parties to a contract under which the proceeds of its sale were to be shared, evidence that the barn containing the rest had been burned and the other party had received the insurance was held inadmissible: Baylis v. Cronkite, 39 M. 413.

149. In trover by an officer against persons who had converted a growing crop which he had attached, the judgment in attachment was admitted, though rendered after the conversion, to show the amount of plaintiff's lien: Grover v. Buck, 34 M. 519.

150. A defendant sued in trover for the value of a cow may show that he sold the cow by parol bargain to one through whom plaintiff claims title, upon the express condition that title should remain in defendant until payment; that nothing had been paid, and that the condition of sale had neither been performed nor waived. Such conditional sale could only be proved by showing what was said and done between the parties, and the fact that plaintiff was not present could not affect it: Fifield v. Elmer, 25 M. 48.

151. In an action of trover for goods claimed to have been deposited with defendants as warehousemen, and which they made no claim of title or of right to hold for any third party, an inquiry as to whether plaintiff purchased the goods with her own money is irrelevant to the issue: Bissell v. Starr, 82 M. 297.

152. Neither is it material to inquire whether plaintiff would or would not have sold this property at a certain price at auction; the answer to such a question could not establish the measure of damages: Ibid.

153. In such an action it is not error to include an inquiry of one of the defendants as to the probability of their having delivered the goods by mistake to some one else: Ibid.

154. It is competent in a suit for conversion to give evidence tending to show that the defendant had received the goods and delivered them to a third person; also that they had the goods about the time they were demanded by the plaintiff and did not deliver them to her, but denied having ever received them: Ibid.

155. In trover for the value of property taken from an agent of the plaintiff on a writ of attachment at the suit of a creditor of such agent, the question is as to the ownership of such property, and all facts and circumstances tending to show the agent's attitude toward the property at the time the plaintiff in trover claimed to have bought it are admissible in evidence: Adams v. Kellogg, 68 M. 105.

156. In an action against a constable for wrongfully selling plaintiff's property under an attachment against his son from whom plaintiff claims to have purchased, evidence that the son was at the time of the alleged sale insolvent, and had conveyed his property in fraud of his creditors, is admissible: Whittle v. Bailes, 65 M. 640.

157. In trover by chattel mortgagees against a sheriff who levied execution upon the goods in a suit by third parties against the mortgager, a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs in the execution must be alleged and proved to authorize the introduction of proof that the mortgage was fraudulent: Comstock v. Hollon, 2 M. 855.

158. Where a defendant in trover seeks to defend on the ground of the seizure of the property under legal process, the proceedings upon which the officer's writ or order issued must be put in evidence: Gibbons v. Farwell, 68 M. 344.

159. In trover by a vendee for the value of property attached by the vendor's creditors, where the sale to plaintiff was attacked as void as against the creditors, statements of the vendor made after the attachment to a third party are inadmissible, as is also testimony concerning the extravagance of plaintiff's daughter, to whom, as defendant claimed, the vendor was betrothed: Lewis v. Rice, 61 M. 97.

160. In trover by the mortgagee of chattels against an officer who had seized the goods and afterwards sold them on an execution under a judgment in an attachment suit brought by creditors against the mortgagor, plaintiff in trover may show that such judgment was fraudulent; but if the evidence offered simply tends to show that the judgment was too large, it is properly excluded. Such fact, if established, would not invalidate the judgment; nor would it injure plaintiff in trover, as, if the property was sold for more than was actually due the plaintiff in the execution, the sheriff would have been obliged to apply the surplus upon the other executions held by him, which were more than sufficient to exhaust it: Eureka Iron, etc. Works v. Bresnahan, 66 M. 489.

161. In an action of trover for the service of a writ of attachment against another upon plaintiff's property it is competent for plaintiff to disprove the alleged indebtedness of the defendant in attachment: Cook v. Hopper, 28 M. 511.

162. Where an officer is sued in trover or replevin for seizing plaintiff's goods under an attachment suit against plaintiff's vendor which has not yet gone to judgment, he cannot attack as fraudulent the sale to plaintiff's vendor until he has shown by other evidence than the affidavit in attachment the fact that such vendor, at the time of such sale, was indebted to the plaintiff in attachment: Ibid.; Manning v. Bresnahan, 68 M. 584.

163. In trover by one who claimed under a chattel mortgage, which mortgage was attacked as fraudulent, the records in several attachment suits were held admissible as evidence tending to show the mortgager's insolvency, though the sale of the goods in question had only taken place in one of such suits: Eureka Iron, etc. Works v. Bresnahan, 66 M. 489.

164. A landlord sued in trover for seizing a crop which his tenant had sold in good faith to plaintiff was not allowed to justify himself by producing the record of a summary proceeding to recover possession of the premises: Miller v. Havens, 51 M. 482.

165. A carrier sued in trover for the value of goods which it has allowed an officer to take from its possession cannot show such taking as a defence unless it shows also that the officer had a legal right to take them by virtue of his writ: Gibbons v. Farwell, 68 M. 844.

166. A suit in trover puts in question only such rights as existed when it was begun, and acts making defendant a trespasser ab initio must appear to have been done before suit to justify striking out evidence that would otherwise establish a defence: Norton v. Rocky, 46 M. 460.

167. In trover for the conversion of goods taken on execution plaintiff cannot introduce an estimate of damages due him for the consequent breaking up of his business until he has shown that his business was actually broken up: Dyer v. Rosenthal, 45 M. 588.

168. In trover for the value of a box of books plaintiff, while testifying to an interview with defendant, was asked, "Did you then demand the box?" She answered "Yes." Held, that such answer, in the absence of objection to the question asked as leading or incompetent, was proper to go to the jury as evidence of a demand: Bissell v. Starr, 82 M. 297.

As to evidence of ownership in trover, see EVIDENCE, §§ 84-88, 120, 1560-1564.

Further as to evidence, see EVIDENCE, §§ 170, 196, 199, 240, 248, 244, 387, 341, 963.

IV. INSTRUCTIONS.

169. In trover for the conversion of logs there was no controversy as to plaintiff's right to recover for a part of the logs claimed, except that they were claimed to have been fraudulently and inextricably commingled with defendant's logs, and evidence of such commingling was given. Held, that an instruction that plaintiff was not entitled to recover for any of the logs was erroneous; the question whether there was such admixture was one of fact for the jury under proper instructions: Johnson v. Ballou, 25 M. 460.

170. A charge that plaintiff cannot recover if defendant's vendor owned the property when he passed it to defendant is not error where defendant claims through a different chain of title; if the property did not belong to plaintiff, he cannot complain of its conversion: Burdick v. Michael, 82 M. 246.

171. Nor is there error in charging that if the property was purchased by defendant's vendor and paid for out of farm produce, such purchase would be lawful if he had received the produce in payment for his work; it could make no difference what was paid for it by defendant's vendor if he paid his own, and not plaintiff's, money or other consideration: Ibid.

172. A charge in an action of trover that no sale of the property to a third party after suit begun would affect plaintiff's right to recover is erroneous: Brady v. Whitney, 24 M. 154.

173. So is a charge that "a sale of the plaintiff's claim for damages by reason of the unlawful taking and carrying away of the property would not affect plaintiff's right to recover": Ibid.

174. In a suit against a sheriff for the conversion of an article seized under a writ of replevin, held, that the special verdict rendered in the replevin suit, that defendant was not in possession when the article was demanded or suit was brought, would not warrant an instruction that the right of plaintiff in replevin had been adversely decided by it, and that evidence to the contrary need not be considered: Sexton v. McDowd, 38 M. 148.

175. Held, in a particular case, that the elements of a supposed estoppel against the plaintiff from claiming ownership should have been submitted to the jury under hypothetical instructions: Ashman v. Epsteine, 50 M. 360.

V. VERDICT.

176. In trover for property seized to satisfy a tax, the trial court charged that if plaintiff was owner of the property at the time of the seizure he was entitled to recover. Held, that a verdict against him was conclusive against his ownership, and that if a third party had any grievance for an unauthorized seizure it could not be redressed in that suit: Sutton v. Greene, 51 M. 118.

177. In trover for goods sold by plaintiff relying on false representations of the buyer, and by the latter mortgaged to defendant to defraud plaintiff, a verdict for plaintiff is conclusive on the question of defendant's participation in the fraud: Robinson v. Walsh, 54 M. 506.

VI. DAMAGES; MITIGATION.

As to the measure of damages in trover, see DAMAGES, §§ 299-338.

As to evidence of the value, see EVIDENCE, I, (f); also §§ 962, 964.

178. After acquiescing for a long time in another's possession with knowledge of his claim of right, and without asserting an adverse claim, plaintiff in trover is not entitled to damages that would not have been incurred if he had asserted his claim: Rodgers v. Brittain, 89 M. 477.

179. Where the declaration does not allege special damage, none are recoverable except such as might naturally follow in any case of unlawful conversion irrespective of special circumstances: Brink v. Freoff, 44 M. 69.

180. Where property in one's possession and claim is levied on and publicly sold as fraudulently transferred to him and as really belonging to other persons, he is not limited in his recovery in trover to the amount which the property brought at the sale, but may show that it did not bring its full value, and is not chargeable with fault in respect to such sale if he did not actively interfere to prevent the property bringing a fair value: Wheeler v. Wallace, 53 M. 355.

181. Plaintiff in trover cannot claim full damages unless he is in such a position that title to the controverted property will pass from himself to defendant on payment of the judgment: Brady v. Whitney, 24 M. 154.

182. And the utmost that a party who has transferred his title to the property converted after the conversion can claim is damages analogous to those rendered where the property has been restored and accepted, viz.: nominal damages only, unless there was special damage caused by the taking out and detention: Ibid.

183. A defendant in trover may show in mitigation of damages that the goods have been voluntarily restored and accepted, or have been recovered by plaintiff at an expense to him of less than their value: Northrup v. McGill, 27 M. 284.

184. But he cannot show in mitigation that without plaintiff's direction or sanction he has applied the whole or a part of the proceeds of the unlawful conversion upon a note due him from plaintiff, and not attaching to the property by way of lien or security: Ibid.

185. Nor is an appropriation to plaintiff's credit of the proceeds of an unlawful levy available to defendant even by way of mitigation unless assented to by plaintiff: Bringard v. Stellwagen, 41 M. 54.

186. Nor can a subsequent sale on legal proceedings in the trespasser's favor against the owner be shown to reduce the damages: Dalton v. Laudahn, 27 M. 529.

187. And where a seizure was premature the damages cannot be reduced by a showing that the defendant could or did legally make a seizure of the same property at a later date: Ibid.

188. A taking of the converted property from defendant on a third party's attachment against plaintiff was not allowed to be shown in mitigation: Erie Preserving Co. v. Witherpoon, 49 M. 377.

VII. JUDGMENT AND ITS EFFECT.

189. A defendant in trover against whom damages are given for the full value of the property converted gets title to the property, either by the judgment itself or by its payment: Hoag v. Breman, 3 M. 160; Brady v. Whitney, 24 M. 154.

190. And this is so though the court erred in giving such judgment when it should have given judgment for a temporary detention; defendant, having submitted to the judgment by paying it, cannot be relieved in a subsequent action of replevin: Hoag v. Breman, 3 M. 160.

191. A recovery for conversion terminates plaintiff's right to reclaim the chattels converted and leaves them as the sole property of defendants: Kenyon v. Woodruff, 33 M. 310.

192. Where parties are jointly guilty of conversion, and judgment has been recovered against one of them therefor, the injured party, by proceeding to enforce collection against him under that judgment, elects to look to him alone, and bars himself from having recourse to the rest: Ibid.

193. A judgment in trover against a sheriff for conversion by levy precludes trespass for entry to make the levy: Finn v. Peck, 47 M. 208.

194. Offset on accounting in equity of judgment in trover between same parties, see McGraw v. Dole, 63 M. 1.

I. IN GENERAL; HOW CREATED; VALIDITY; CONSTRUCTION.

(a) In general.

1. It seems that the English statute of uses never had any operation within the territory now constituting the state of Michigan: Trask v. Green, 9 M. 353.

2. If it had it was abolished by the act of Sept. 16, 1810 (Cass Code, 119), which repealed all acts of the British parliament and of the authorities of Canada; and from that time up to March 1, 1847, there was no analogous statute here: Ibid.; Ready v. Kearsley, 14 M. 215.

3. There was no statute of uses here until March 1, 1847: Mandlebaum v. McDonell, 29 M. 78.

4. The statute of charitable uses has never been in force in this state: Newark Methodist Church v. Clark, 41 M. 730; Hathaway v. New Baltimore, 48 M. 251.

5. Where the legal title in land is conveyed to certain persons who give back a written agreement to reconvey in case they are held harmless against certain liabilities as sureties, reserving, however, the right, in case they are found liable, to turn out the property to the creditor, or to hold it until discharged by him, they hold the legal title in trust and are not mortgagees; and the land is not subject to execution against the debtor: Gorham v. Arnold, 22 M. 247.

6. A woman made her insolvent husband her executor, and gave him the use for his life-time of what was left after certain bequests were paid, the remainder on his death to go as directed. The principal was required to be kept invested, and not to be encroached upon except in emergencies. Held, that a trust for the husband's benefit was created, and that there was nothing which his creditors could reach: Cummings v. Corey, 58 M. 494.

7. To make an express trust valid under the statute of frauds, the terms and conditions of the trust must be in writing under the hand of the party to be charged: Wright v. King, H. 12.

8. The existence of an express trust in lands may be shown by parol, but there must be some memorandum in writing showing its terms: Bernard v. Bougard, H. 180.

9. Express trusts in lands must appear on the face of the deed, or, at least, by some instrument in writing: Trask v. Green, 9 M. 353.

10. An express trust in favor of one who furnishes the consideration, but procures the deed to be made to another, cannot be raised by parol agreement: Groesbeck v. Seeley, 13 M. 829.

11. Sons bought land and had it conveyed by their vendor to their father upon the oral understanding that he would deed to such of them as they might require. He finally conveyed in pursuance of such agreement. Held, that as an express trust in land cannot be created by parol, the sons acquired no interest before the conveyance to them: Newton v. Sly, 15 M. 391.

12. Where one orally promised another for a reasonable compensation to advance money and buy up claims against the latter's lands, and thereby save them for his benefit, the promise was held void under the statute of frauds as being an attempt by naked parol agreement to create a trust in lands thereafter to be acquired at the promisor's expense: Taylor v. Boardman, 24 M. 287.

13. Under a land contract the vendee was to pay the tax but did not, and his brother bought the land at a tax-sale, orally agreeing to hold in trust for the vendee. Held, that the oral trust was void under the statute: Jones v. Wells, 81 M. 170.

14. Where property is conveyed by an ordinary deed which contains no condition or declaration of trust, but declares the uses to be for the grantee's benefit, no trust can arise to the grantor or the grantor's heirs from any parol agreement in contravention of the deed: Brown v. Bronson, 85 M. 415.

15. An oral agreement to hold lands for another after bidding them in on execution sale against him is void under H. S. §§ 5569, 6204, being an attempt to create a parol trust: Cobb v. Cook, 49 M. 11.

16. An express trust cannot exist without a written agreement; so held where land was bought on partnership account, but the title was placed for convenience in one partner's name, with an oral understanding that he should hold for the firm's benefit: Pulford v. Morton, 62 M. 25.

17. The statute prevents a delivery of an assignment of a land contract accompanied by a parol agreement as to the terms of the transfer from being regarded as creating a trust in the person to whom delivery is made: Ortmann v. Plummer, 52 M. 76.

18. An express trust relating to land cannot be engrafted by parol on a conveyance, and such parol trust is void: Shafter v. Huntington, 53 M. 810.

19. So held where, for the purpose of settling the estate of an intestate who left two children only, his daughter quitclaimed a part of it to her brother, and the latter, with his sister's consent, quitclaimed other lands to her husband on an oral understanding that he should hold the property for the benefit of their children, whereas, instead of doing so, he mortgaged it for his own: Ibid.

20. The validity of an executed parol trust in lands cannot be questioned: Barber v. Milner, 43 M. 248.

21. Although a parol trust in lands is void, the trustee may recognize it, and other persons whose equities are not affected thereby cannot interfere: Patton v. Chamberlain, 44 M. 5.

22. If a party holding under a parol trust admits it in writing—as by an answer in chancery—there is a sufficient written declaration of the trust to satisfy the statute of frauds: Ibid.

23. Such trusts as arise or result by implication of law are excepted from the statute requiring trusts concerning lands to be in writing: Rood v. Winslow, 2 D. 68.

24. A trust to hold personalty until the owner's death and then to deliver it to his daughter does not come within the statute of frauds, and need not be shown by writing: Bostwick v. Mahaffey, 48 M. 842.

25. Defendant held land on a trust void, because in parol. He repeatedly admitted—orally—that he held the land in trust, and after he sold it he admitted that he held its proceeds in trust. Held, that as a trust in personalty need not be in writing, he should be charged as trustee on the strength of his admissions after the land was sold: Calder v. Moran, 49 M. 14.

26. A trust may be inferred from the facts and circumstances of a particular case; so held where a father had placed personalty in his son's hands under an arrangement for its investment in business by the son for their mutual advantage: Chadwick v. Chadwick, 59 M. 87.

27. Where adult children conveyed land to their father on the oral understanding that he was to invest the proceeds from an anticipated sale thereof, he to use the interest during his life, but to reserve the principal for them at his death, held, that such a trust was valid and enforceable, and that a third party who had knowledge of the rights of the cestuis que trustent could not be a bona fide holder of a mortgage representing a portion of the trust fund and assigned to her by the trustee: Edinger v. Heiser, 62 M. 598.

28. A parol trust in personalty is admitted to be shown against all but bona fide purchasers, whether it be to create a special interest, a defeasance, or other similar equity: Bowker v. Johnson, 17 M. 42.

29. Parol evidence is admissible to affix the character of a trust to a promissory note payable to the party claimed to be a trustee: Catlin v. Birchard, 18 M. 110.

30. Trusts in personal property should not be established by parol evidence, especially after considerable time has elapsed, unless very clear and confirmed by the subsequent conduct of the parties: Crissman v. Crissman, 23 M. 217.

31. In a particular case, where complainant claimed that her husband had shortly before his death conveyed lands to defendant in trust for her, while defendant alleged that they were conveyed to him in trust for decedent's children, the evidence was conflicting, but the presumption being against the father's intention to disinherit his children, complainant's bill was dismissed: Green v. Begole, 70 M. 603 (June 22, '88).

32. One good trust in a deed of assignment does not make an otherwise illegal instrument valid: Kirby v. Ingersoll, H. 193, 1 D. 477.

Attorney of judgment creditor held as trustee in respect of property bid off in his own name, see ATTORNEYS, § 41.

(b) How created.

1. Express trusts.

33. Between Sept. 16, 1810, and March 1, 1847, there was no statute of uses in force in Michigan, and nothing—except statutory requirement of writing—to prevent the creation of any trust that would have been valid at common law: Trask v. Green, 9 M. 358; Ready v. Kearsley, 14 M. 215. See Mandlebaum v. McDonell, 29 M. 78.

34. Anything which creates a trust in favor of the donee is sufficient if the trust be lawful; a declaration of trust is not confined to any express form of words, but may be indicated by the character of the instrument: Ellis v. Secor, 81 M. 185. No particular form of words is required to create a trust: Chadwick v. Chadwick, 59 M. 87.

35. Under H. S. § 5578, subd. 5, providing that express trusts may be created where the "trust is fully expressed and clearly defined upon the face of the instrument creating it," such instrument may consist of a series of letters and agreements which, construed together, show a purpose to create the trust: Loring v. Palmer, 118 U. S. 321.

36. The fact that the respective interests of the beneficiaries are not stated in the instrument creating the trust does not render the trust indefinite; the presumption being that their interests are equal: Ibid.

37. Under H. S. § 5578, an instrument expressly declaring that parties executing it hold certain lands in trust for themselves and others named creates an express trust, and does not operate as a conveyance of the land: Culbertson v. Witbeck Co., 127 U. S. 826.

38. A written agreement signed by the officers of a mining association and declaring the other party thereto, for his services in hunting ore, entitled to a specific undivided share in certain described lands held by them under a lease, will be sustained as a valid agreement and declaration of trust for the designated interest in the title when that shall have been acquired by the lessee: Compo v. Jackson Iron Co., 49 M. 39.

39. Where a wife signs a deed, given as security, only on condition that on payment of the amount secured the grantee shall convey the premises to a third person, the grantee cannot dispose of the property otherwise; and after he has conveyed as agreed, the validity of the trust to him cannot be questioned on the ground that it was not in writing: Barber v. Milner, 43 M. 248.

40. For a discussion as to whether certain facts established a trust or an agency, see Titus v. Minnesota Mining Co., 8 M. 183.

41. A trust, and not a mere agency, was held to be created by an instrument executed and delivered to a brother, and intrusting a certain specified fund in cash and notes to his "good faith and sound judgment, . . . to use and expend the same so far as may be necessary for the comfortable support" of the party executing the trust and of his sister, during the remainder of their lives, the surplus, if any, to be divided among his heirs according to directions. Held, also, that this trust remained in force so long as one of the beneficiaries was entitled to support, and was not revoked by the death of the maker of the trust: Lyle v. Burke, 40 M. 499.

42. An instrument executed for the benefit of specified creditors, and purporting to convey property to certain persons who were also creditors, on their express agreement to sell it and pay the debts as far as the proceeds would go, and, if there should be any surplus, pay other debts, and sell back to the grantors any unsold property in case they should furnish money within a year to pay off the secured debts, is not a chattel mortgage, but a deed in trust vesting trustees with absolute title and right of sale until the trust purposes should be accomplished: Iron Cliffs Co. v. Beecher, 50 M. 486.

43. An insolvent firm made an absolute warranty deed of its business and other property to its principal creditor. The latter conveyed it in trust to certain persons to be managed for his sole benefit, and empowered them to carry on the business, buy property, borrow money, sell lands and personalty and exercise other powers not inherent in mortgage relations. But at the same time the creditor and the trustees together executed a declaration of trust in favor of the firm, whereby after the trust should be satisfied the remainder of the property was to be conveyed to it. Held, that as between these parties this arrangement established a trust and not merely a mortgage relation, and that it placed the creditor under fiduciary obligations to the debtor: Loud v. Winchester, 52 M. 174.

44. Where a will designated certain persons executors only, and no words of grant or devise were employed to indicate a purpose that any estate should pass to or be vested in them, and the only powers conferred upon them beyond those of executors were that they should have the "control and direction of" testator's son, and should determine the ultimate disposition of the estate by the judgment they should form of the son's past and future conduct, held, that no trust was thus created: Rock River Paper Mill Co. v. Fisk, 47 M. 212. Compare Crooks v. Whitford, 47 M. 283.

2. Implied trusts.

45. Where A. was pardoned on condition that he should secure the payment of $1,000 to the county, and the county commissioners took a mortgage to themselves instead of the county, the mortgage was held to be good, and the commissioners were declared trustees for the county, the law implying a trust from the nature of the transaction: Rood v. Winslow, W. 340, 2 D. 68.

46. Two tenants in common agreed to hold separate parcels of their land in severalty, but no releases were executed. Each afterwards sold his parcel, giving a deed of the whole interest as if he had had a release from his co-tenant. A grantee of one of them sold, taking back a mortgage for the purchase price, and the other, by an understanding with the mortgager, gave a deed to the mortgager's brothers with the intention thereby to perfect the title conveyed by his co-tenant. A small consideration was paid for this deed, which, however, the grantor did not demand. Proceedings being taken to foreclose the mortgage, this deed was set up as a defence to one-half its amount on the ground of failure of consideration. It was held that the grantee in the deed, under the circumstances, took it as a trustee, and the deed must be regarded as a mere release of the grantor's interest in pursuance of the original understanding of the parties: Adams v. Bradley, 12 M. 346.

47. The managing brother of five to whom mining property had been left in common acquired contiguous property, and his brothers sought to charge it with a trust for all. Held, that as the facts did not show an agreement that it should be so taken and held, and there being no fraud on the manager's part and no fraudulent representations, and he not appearing to owe his brothers any duty in the matter, a trust should not be declared: Pierce v. Pierce, 55 M. 629.

48. The heirs of a deceased partner hold the legal title to firm real estate in trust for the equitable purposes of the firm: Merritt v. Dickey, 38 M. 41.

3. Resulting trusts.

49. A resulting trust cannot be inferred where there is anything in the relations of the parties and the facts of the transactions which would fairly go to rebut it: Waterman v. Seeley, 28 M. 77.

50. Where two persons claim equities in lands, and one of them presents a claim thereto which is allowed by the government land board, there is no resulting trust in favor of the other which can be enforced in equity: Bernard v. Bougard, H. 180.

51. The act of congress of March 3, 1807,

"regulating the grants of land in the territory of Michigan," recognized no right in claimants but that of occupancy and possession, as the stock in which the fee was to be engrafted; and where three brothers, on the death of their father, claimed a tract of land under a "substitution," or kind of entailment, by which the land belonged to the eldest son his life-time, and after his death to the second son his life-time, etc., the eldest son, under the claim set up by the brothers, being entitled to the occupancy or possession in his own right to the exclusion of his brothers, was also entitled to the fee-simple in his own right; and having presented his claim and procured its allowance, and obtained a patent for the land, there was not a resulting trust in favor of his brothers: Chene v. Bank of Michigan, W. 511.

52. A defaulting public officer made an absolute transfer of property to his sureties without written declaration of trust or defeasance, it being understood as securing the officer's liability and to enable the surety to provide for his own liability as such surety. Held, that under the statute of frauds no trust was made to result: Spear v. Rood, 51 M. 140.

53. The want of a consideration in a voluntary deed does not, in the absence of fraud or mistake, raise a resulting trust in favor of the grantor: Jackson v. Cleveland, 15 M. 94.

54. So held where husband and wife, being about to separate, in order to avoid questions of dower conveyed certain real estate to a third person by a deed in fee-simple, absolute in form and purporting to be for a valuable consideration: Ibid.

55. No trust arises by implication in favor of one who makes a voluntary conveyance of land or procures it to be made to another: Palmer v. Sterling, 41 M. 218.

56. A voluntary conveyance of land will not raise a resulting trust in favor of persons for whom the grantee agrees by parol to hold the property: Shafter v. Huntington, 53 M. 810.

57. Since the abolition of resulting trusts one who conveys land to his wife or any other relation is in no better position for treating the transfer as creating a trust than any one else would be; if he meant the transfer as a gift and not as a sale, no debt arises on the part of the transferee, and as against him the grantor can neither set off the value of the land nor sue for it: Bulen v. Granger, 56 M. 207.

58. Prior to R. S. 1846 (H. S. § 5569), if one bought land and paid for it, and had the conveyance made to another, there was in equity a resulting trust in favor of the party paying the purchase money, unless the purchase was intended as a gift or advance to the person to whom the conveyance was made: Maynard v. Hoskins, 9 M. 485.

59. Although, prior to March 1, 1847, when said H. S. § 5569 took effect, trusts resulting from payment by one person and conveyance with his knowledge to another were not forbidden, such trusts are not in harmony with our land system, and are not to be extended beyond the line of authority: Waterman v. Seeley, 28 M. 77.

60. And in order to maintain such a trust there must have been an intention to create it: Ibid.

61. And payment of the whole consideration must have been made by the party seeking to raise the trust; actual payment, and that the money was his, had to be shown by the most convincing proof: Ibid.; Wright v. King, H. 12; Bernard v. Bougard, H. 180.

62. Though proof of such payment would usually, as between strangers, raise the presumption of the intention, a trust raised by parol might be rebutted by parol, and the presumption did not rise where the trust was taken in the name of wife or child, or where, even without legal relationship, the person paying the purchase money assumed to stand in loco parentis to the grantee, because it was both natural and legal to presume that in paying for land to be granted to a child so situated it was intended as a donation or advancement, and not as a trust in favor of the donor: Waterman v. Seeley, 28 M. 77.

63. Under the provisions of H. S. § 5569, no use or trust results or can be raised by parol in favor of one who, in the absence of mistake, fraud or deceit, furnishes the consideration for a conveyance which is made with his knowledge or consent to another; and the title vests in the person named as alienee in the conveyance: Trask v. Green, 9 M. 358; Maynard v. Hoskins, 9 M. 485; Groesbeck v. Seeley, 13 M. 329; Newton v. Sly, 15 M. 391; Fisher v. Fobes, 22 M. 454; Taylor v. Boardman, 24 M. 287, 304; Harwood v. Underwood, 28 M. 427; Weare v. Linnell, 29 M. 224; Tyler v. Peatt, 30 M. 63; Hooker v. Axford, 33 M. 453; Brown v. Bronson, 35 M. 415; Palmer v. Sterling, 41 M. 218; Barber v. Milner, 43 M. 248; Maxfield v. Willey, 46 M. 252; Bumpus v. Bumpus, 53 M. 346; Pulford v. Morton, 62 M. 25.

64. Where one purchases lands in another's name, no deceit or fraud having been practiced upon him, and no agreement with him violated by that order, he cannot establish rights thereto in himself in opposition to the apparent title: Weare v. Linnell, 29 M. 224.

65. Where property is conveyed by an ordinary deed without any condition or declaration of trust, and which declares the uses to be for the grantee's benefit, no trust can result to the grantor or his heirs: Brown v. Bronson, 35 M. 415.

66. A tax purchase by an agent in his own name but with his principal's money does not support a resulting trust in his principal's favor: Maxfield v. Willey, 46 M. 252.

67. Where property sold on execution has been redeemed by an outsider and quitclaimed by him to the wife of the original owner with her husband's consent, and a mortgage taken back for the whole consideration, the property would then belong to the wife, and no trust could result to the husband, nor would he have any right whatever in the property: Taylor v. Boardman, 24 M. 287.

68. Where a partner buys lands in his own name, but with partnership funds, though without any agreement to buy for the joint benefit, such a purchase will not support the theory of a resulting trust: Russell v. Miller, 26 M. 1.

69. No resulting trust arises where title to land is placed — under a parol undertaking as to how it shall be held — in one partner by consent of another who does nothing but make payments of small sums of money for which, if made with authority, he has a legal remedy: Pulford v. Morton, 62 M. 25.

70. But where one partner purchased property for the use of the firm but in his own name, though with the money of another partner, and the property is actually used as firm assets, the case does not fall within the principle of H. S. § 5569 prohibiting resulting trusts, but must be treated as partnership property: Way v. Stebbins, 47 M. 296.

71. The statute abolishing resulting trusts in cases where one person furnishes the consideration for a grant to another, and vesting the title in the alienee named in the conveyance, subject only to a trust in favor of creditors when they would otherwise be defrauded, applies only to cases where the conveyance was so made by consent of the person furnishing the consideration, and not to a case where the person taking the conveyance in his own name has done so in fraud of the rights of the person paying the consideration: Fisher v. Fobes, 22 M. 454.

72. An agent procured a conveyance, his principal furnishing the consideration; it was distinctly understood that the conveyance was to be for the principal's benefit, though it was not understood who was to be named as grantee. Held, that it was the agent's duty either to have had the conveyance made directly to his principal or to have had a trust in his favor distinctly declared in the conveyance; failing in this he would be chargeable with constructive fraud, and his principal, on reading the deed, does not by silence waive his rights if he has not previously assented that the deed should be executed to the agent without securing himself, even where he has been allowed to take possession and appropriate the profits without accounting: Ibid.

73. The provision of H. S. § 5569, that no trust shall result in favor of the party furnishing the consideration for a purchase in the name of another, does not apply to a conveyance obtained by fraud: Linsley v. Sinclair, 24 M. 380.

See, as to the facts of this case, ATTORNEYS, § 52.

74. Where a husband, acting as his wife's agent, takes in his own name, without her knowledge, a deed of property intended to have been conveyed to her in compromise of a claim due to an estate upon which she is administratrix, he will in equity be held a trustee for the parties interested in the property: Wales v. Neubould, 9 M. 45.

75. It is a fraud upon the rights of a railway corporation if a director who buys lands for the use and benefit of the company, and pays for them with its funds, takes the title in his own name or jointly with others; and the nominal grantees would hold in trust for the company: Michigan Air Line R. Co. v. Mel-len, 44 M. 321.

76. The prohibition of resulting trusts does not apply where the conveyance is merely the quitclaim of an equity to the owner of the legal estate; this creates no title, but merely removes an encumbrance: Munch v. Shabel, 37 M. 166.

77. A debtor who purchases land, causing the vendor to convey to a third person so that creditors may be defrauded, acquires no interest, and no trust results to him. As against the grantee none but creditors can reach it; and they must proceed in chancery: Trask v. Green, 9 M. 358; Maynard v. Hoskins, 9 M. 485; Harwood v. Underwood, 28 M. 427; Tyler v. Peatt, 30 M. 63.

78. H. S. §§ 5569, 5570, sustaining trusts in land in favor of creditors where the debtor pays the entire consideration and the grant is made to another, covers a case where pending suit the judgment debtor completed his payments on a contract of purchase and fraudulently caused the land to be deeded to another without consideration: Fairbairn v. Middlemiss, 47 M. 372.

79. One to whom a debtor has conveyed his property to keep it beyond the reach of his creditors is held as trustee for their benefit, and will be liable for all the property in his hands when suit is brought against him: Thayer v. Swift, H. 490.

80. One who receives the goods of another and disposes of them with the knowledge that the latter is fraudulently seeking to save them from execution becomes in equity the latter's trustee, and is liable to his creditors to the amount of the goods transferred: Reeg v. Burnham, 55 M. 39.

81. The fact that one man furnishes another with means to start in business, whether for honest or dishonest purposes, does not give the former any legal title in the goods purchased for the business; nor does it render them subject to levy on an execution against him. Any trust resulting in favor of his creditors must be worked out in equity: Kinter v. Pickard, 67 M. 125.

4. Constructive trusts.

82. A case of constructive trust must rest on fraud, either actually intended or resulting from a failure to recognize and observe the rules of business integrity: Pierce v. Pierce, 55 M. 629.

83. Where an agent to sell lands purchased them of his principal, concealing important facts, so that the transaction amounted to a fraud upon the principal, a trust in the principal's favor is created by operation of law, and it is competent to prove by parol the facts that create the trust: Moore v. Mandlebaum, 8 M. 433.

84. A grantee obtaining a conveyance of land by fraud, mistake or undue advantage will be deemed to hold as trustee for the person equitably entitled: Edwards v. Hulbert, W. 54; Adams v. Bradley, 12 M. 346; Campbell v. Campbell, 21 M. 438; Hanold v. Bacon, 36 M. 1; Davis v. Filer, 40 M. 310; Austin v. Dean, 40 M. 386; Crooks v. Whitford, 40 M. 599.

85. Where a conveyance is obtained for fraudulent ends or under oppressive circumstances, the party deriving title is converted into a trustee, if necessary for administering relief: Huxley v. Rice, 40 M. 73.

86. The claimant of a pretended title which he had no right to retain or assert against another party is regarded in equity as holding in trust for the other party, and as bound to release it to him on just terms: Crooks v. Whitford, 40 M. 599.

87. A court of equity may in a proper case adjudge the patentee of lands to hold as trustee for one having greater equities: Boyce v. Danz, 29 M. 146; Hedley v. Leonard, 35 M. 71.

88. A widow in possession of premises of which her husband died seized procured, without the payment of any new consideration, to be executed to herself a deed of the premises, in order to cure defects in the title under which her husband went into possession. The title thus acquired she will hold in trust for the heirs of her husband, subject to her dower right: Campbell v. Campbell, 21 M. 488.

89. Where the complainant's means have been invested in lands and a deed taken without her knowledge and in violation of her rights in the names of her step-children, her equity to demand a conveyance is not affected by the statute abolishing resulting trusts: Ransom v. Ransom, 31 M. 301.

90. An administrator with knowledge that his decedent held certain part-paid school lands in trust for third parties allowed such lands to be forfeited for non-payment of interest, and acquired a patent in his own name on the resale. Held, that chancery would compel him to convey to the real parties in interest: Carrier v. Heather, 63 M. 441.

91. If the vendee in a contract for the sale of non-patented government lands subsequently receives patents for other lands than his contract calls for, he holds the title to such lands in trust for his vendor: Gibbs v. Diekma, U. S. Book 26 (Co-op. ed.), 177.

92. A deed fraudulently procured by the false representation that it is for the protection of the grantee in a prior unrecorded deed from the same grantor does not invest the grantee named therein with any title as against the prior grantee for whose benefit the grantor meant it. The fraudulent grantee is a mere trustee for the other: Hanold v. Bacon, 36 M. 1.

93. One who by deception obtains an assignment of a certificate of purchase from one who has parted with the title, and tells him so, and who then obtains a patent on such certificate, becomes a trustee mala fide of the legal title for his assignor: Loomis v. Roberts, 57 M. 284.

94. Where by treaty between the United States and an Indian tribe a sum was set apart to pay claims against the Indians, to be allowed by commissioners, and A. having a claim against them, B. procured its allowance to himself as purchaser of the claim, when he had no right to it, and received the money, held, that as B. was not liable to A.

at law in an action for money had and received, he would in equity be considered as a trustee for him: Edwards v. Hulbert, W. 54.

95. One who goes into possession of lands under a contract-purchaser bound to pay taxes takes a tax-title in trust for the vendor: Bertram v. Cook, 32 M. 518.

96. One who buys up unredeemed property sold on execution, but is not bound by contract or by actual or constructive fraud to hold it for the debtor, does not become a trustee for the debtor's benefit, even where he gives out that he has benevolent designs in the debtor's favor: Taylor v. Boardman, 24 M. 287.

97. K. sold to H. a parcel out of a lot which he had mortgaged and then allowed the mortgage to be foreclosed upon the whole lot, and by a collusive arrangement with R. in his own interest, but in fraud of H.'s rights, the lot was bid in by R., who then refused to release to H. except upon terms. Held, that R. should be considered as holding H.'s parcel as trustee for H.'s benefit, and, so far as H. was concerned, as K.'s mortgagee: Huxley v. Rice, 40 M. 73.

98. Collusive purchasers under unfair foreclosure of chattel mortgage were held accountable as trustees in their own wrong: Culbertson v. Young, 50 M. 190.

99. In a particular case, a wife who took securities in her own name was held to have made herself a trustee for the benefit of her husband and his creditors of all the fund except so much as represented her own land: Cicotte v. Stebbins, 49 M. 631.

100. Where money to take up a mortgage is paid by a vendor to a vendee protected by covenants against encumbrances, a trust to satisfy the encumbrance arises in favor of subsequent purchasers under like covenants from the vendee, and they having redeemed from such mortgage may hold such vendee as for money received to their use: Twitchell v. Drury, 25 M. 398.

101. The vendor in a contract of sale of lands is deemed in equity to be a trustee of the land for the purchaser, who is regarded as a trustee of the purchase money for the vendor: Wing v. McDowell, W. 175; Michigan State Bank v. Hastings, 1 D. 225.

102. In the absence of a formal assignment to a lessor of insurance taken by the lessee, it was held that equity would deem the insurance to be held in trust for the former to the amount stipulated by the latter: Eberts v. Fisher, 54 M. 294.

(c) Validity.

1. In general.

103. The land-board in Detroit had power to grant a donation lot by conveyance in trust: Ready v. Kearsley, 14 M. 215.

104. H. S. § 5578, authorizing trusts to be created to sell lands for the benefit of creditors, is not confined to general assignments: State Bank v. Chapelle, 40 M. 447.

105. A husband may settle property to his wife's use through trustees: Burdeno v. Amperse, 14 M. 91.

106. A trust imposed by will for raising money out of the rents and profits to pay off encumbrances on an estate devised to minors is valid, and the trustee can be relieved from it only by the action of all the beneficiaries after they become of age; the charge cannot be apportioned by undivided shares: Toms v. Williams, 41 M. 552.

107. A bequest to a village of $15,000 to be used in the erection of a school building to be used as a high school, and to be suitable for that purpose, is not void for uncertainty or indefiniteness. If power is lacking to administer the trust it can be granted by the legislature: Hatheway v. Sackett, 33 M. 97.

108. A bequest to a school-district board and its successors of a fund to be held in trust for purchasing with the interest thereof books for a school library was sustained: Maynard v. Woodard, 86 M. 423.

109. Where personal property was put in the hands of a third person to be delivered to the donor's daughter after his death, it was held that the duties of the trustee were definite and might rest in parol: Bostwick v. Mahaffy, 48 M. 342.

110. Trusts in personal property, where the specific property is constantly changing while the fund remains subject to the duties and burdens of the trust, are not invalid or uncommon: Leland v. Colver, 34 M. 418.

2. Perpetuities; accumulations.

See, also, WILLS, VIII, (c).

111. Estates in trust are subject to H. S. § 5581, prohibiting the suspension of the absolute power of alienation for a longer time than two lives in being (H. S. § 5573): Thatcher v. St. Andrew's Church, 37 M. 264; Newark Methodist Church v. Clark, 41 M. 730.

112. Therefore a trust-deed suspending the power of alienation for a longer time than two lives in being would be invalid. But such power is not suspended where the trustees are vested with the power of sale at their option; if this power is exercised it puts an end to the trust: Thatcher v. St. Andrew's Church, 37 M. 264.

113. A perpetual trust for a particular purpose, with no power of alienation in the trustee, is invalid; and trusts for charitable uses are not distinguished in this state from others, and their validity depends on the same rules: Newark Methodist Church v. Clark, 41 M. 730.

114. Such trusts as may be necessary to save estates from being sacrificed to pay encumbrances and preserve land as such for devisees do not contravene the statute against perpetuities: Toms v. Williams, 41 M. 552.

(d) Construction.

115. A deed of trust is to be so construed as to enable the trustee to perform the duties entrusted to him: Smith v. Bonhoof, 2 M.

115. Deed to Roman Catholic bishop in trust for erection of church, etc., for use of a particular congregation, construed: Ibid.

116. Where a trust-deed contemplated conversion of the property from realty to personality, proceeds to go to "legal heirs," the term is construed by the general statute of descents (H. S. § 5772a, subd. 2), not by H. S. § 5776a, confining descent to ancestor's blood: Henderson v. Sherman, 47 M. 267.

117. A deed by the land-board in Detroit of a lot of land to "S. or his legal heirs and representatives, but always in trust and for the use and benefit of the rightful owners of the premises hereinafter mentioned, claiming the same by virtue of the meane conveyances from the original grantee or otherwise howsoever, his, her or their heirs," etc., was held not to vest in S. any power of selection as to the beneficiaries under it; nor was it ambiguous as to the grantee or uncertain as to the cestuis que trustent: Ready v. Kearsley, 14 M. 215.

118. A deed conveyed certain lands to trustees named in it, and also "all my household goods and personal property," etc., . . . "to have, hold, use and enjoy the same, and lease or dispose of the same, or cause the same to be used, and to receive the rents, profits and income thereof, and to use or dispose of the same on trust," etc., and gave them authority in certain emergencies to temporarily raise money upon the property by mortgage or otherwise. Held, that the power of alienation here given was meant to cover the real as well as the personal property, some of the words being apt if applied to the real estate, and not so if applied to the personalty: Thatcher v. St. Andrew's Church, 87 M. 264.

119. If apt words are used, no particular form is needed for the creation of a power of alienation in a deed of trust: Ibid.

120. A particular trust-deed construed and held to dispose entirely and absolutely of the entire beneficial interest in the estate: Faton v. Langley, 50 M. 488.

121. A will provided funds "for the establishment of a school at Montrose for the education of children, to be expended according to the direction of [the] executors." Held, that the term "establishment of a school" in a bequest for such a purpose may mean the employment of a teacher, or the organization of an institution, or the erection of a building, or part or all of these things; and it does not bind the executors to any particular scheme, nor preclude them from erecting a school of an exclusive character, in no just sense public nor to be recognized as a charity, and so furnishes no basis for state interference to enforce the bequest as for a public charity: Attorney-General v. Soule, 28 M. 153.

Certain wills held to confer upon executors general power in trust to sell lands without probate license: See ESTATES OF DECEDENTS, §§ 272-274.

II. TRUSTEES.

Notice to one trustee is notice to all: See NOTICE, § 33.

(a) Appointment and acceptance.

122. H. S. § 5589, in authorizing the court of chancery to appoint some person to complete the execution of a trust when the original trustee has died, resigned or been removed, does not apply to trusts in personalty but only to those in real estate: Ledyard's Appeal, 51 M. 628.

123. A trustee can be appointed by a court of equity to take the place of one who has died without completing the execution of his trust, or has become incapable of acting. And in proper proceedings instituted in behalf of the trustee or of any one interested in the trust fund, and begun by bill of complaint, with actual or substituted notice to all parties concerned, the court will furnish such aid as from time to time may be needed in the administration of the trust. But these proceedings cannot be taken by petition: Ibid.

124. A trust need not fail for want of express acceptance by the trustee: Thatcher v. St. Andrew's Church, 87 M. 264.

125. A trust is sufficiently accepted by proceeding to execute it: Lyle v. Burke, 40 M. 490.

Appointment as trustee revoked by codicil, see WILLS, § 285.

(b) Resignation and removal.

Abandonment of trust, see infra, §§ 228, 229.

126. A bill asking that a trustee be superseded for incompetency must clearly set forth the substantial facts that show him to be unfit: Preston v. Wilcox, 38 M. 578.

127. The imprudence or neglect of a trustee are generally grounds for requiring him to make good the injury resulting from it rather than for superseding him: Ibid.

128. A trustee's failure, through mistake, to discharge a duty, or injudicious exercise of discretion or refusal to exercise a purely discretionary power for the advantage of the estate, will not warrant his removal: Ibid.

129. A trustee requiring particular qualifications, chosen by the author of the trust and unequivocally accepted by the bulk of the beneficiaries, will not be superseded unless on grounds of the clearest necessity, such as that by reason of his general unfitness his retention will be likely to disappoint the fundamental purposes of the trust: Ibid.

130. A trustee's insolvency may be ground for superseding him: Brown v. Vandermeulen, 41 M. 418.

(c) Extent and duration of trustee's estate.

131. In a conveyance of land in trust for the payment of debts the word "heirs" is not necessary to convey a fee: Angell v. Rosenberg, 12 M. 266.

132. Where trustees designated by a will for any beneficial trust purpose are not required to hold any estate beyond one for a term of years, they take no greater absolute estate than is co-extensive with the trust; and as to so much of the estate as is not needed to carry out a valid trust, their authority is no more than a power and does not prevent a devolution of the estate (H. S. §§ 5576; 5577): Toms v. Williams, 41 M. 552.

133. A declaration of trust operates to assign to the trustee the notes from which the trust fund is to be raised, even if not indorsed to him: Lyle v. Burke, 40 M. 499.

134. A deed of lands to trustees to secure or pay debts is a mortgage: State Bank v. Chapelle, 40 M. 447; Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Auditor-General, 41 M. 635.

(d) Powers and rights.

As to powers in trust by will to executors to sell lands, see ESTATES OF DECEDENTS, §§ 272-274.

135. A discretion confided to trustees jointly cannot be independently exercised by one of them so as to ignore another, even with the consent of others who, with him, would constitute a majority: Loud v. Winchester, 52 M. 174.

136. As a general rule, where several persons are appointed to execute a trust and no authority is given to a less number than the whole to act, all must join in its execution: Scott v. Detroit Young Men's Society, 1 D. 119.

137. But a public trust may be executed by a majority, all being present to deliberate: Ibid.

As to a sale by one of two executors where the other has renounced the trust, see ESTATES OF DECEDENTS, § 266.

138. A trustee may maintain assumpsit for money had and received for rent of cestui que trust collected and in the hands of his agent: Beardslee v. Horton, 8 M. 560.

139. Where a number of creditors select an individual to represent them as trustee in a mortgage, it is not to be presumed that the trustee has power, or that a majority of the beneficiaries can authorize him, to buy in the mortgaged property on foreclosure so as to bind those who are unwilling to assent to the arrangement; in consenting to the security, no creditor surrenders any right of individual action. Where such a trustee in fact bought in the property in good faith, the court allowed him to elect to pay those creditors who afterwards opposed the sale their proportionate share of the bid, or to re-open the sale: Bradley v. Tyson, 38 M. 337.

140. A trustee cannot be allowed to make any advantage to himself from an abuse of his trust: Chene v. Bank of Michigan, W. 511.

141. Administrators or other persons in the position of trustees may not directly or indirectly acquire interests in or bargain for benefits from the property which, in their relation as trustees, they hold, manage, control or sell for others; it is a fraud for a trustee to take for his own benefit a position in which his interests will conflict with his duty: Sheldon v. Rice, 30 M. 296.

142. One who places himself in the position of confidential adviser of a person who seeks his aid to escape from threatened criminal proceedings, and to settle charges brought against him, is a trustee, and has the burden of showing good faith in any bargains or transfers which he may meanwhile make with the person who thus relies upon his advice: Storrs v. Scougal, 48 M. 887.

143. A trustee is not allowed to deal with his cestui que trust as with a third person; and purchases of trust property made by him will not be sustained, unless the court is satisfied that he has acted throughout with the most perfect fairness, and taken no advantage of his peculiar relation: Schwarz v. Wendell, W. 287.

144. Under the facts appearing in this case the court set aside a purchase made by the cestui que trust of the trustee, and ordered the latter to deliver up to be cancelled a note given for the purchase price, or to account for the amount: Ibid.

145. A trustee cannot be a purchaser of the trust estate: McKay v. Williams, 67 M. 547.

146. A trustee to sell cannot himself become purchaser: Dwight v. Blackmar, 2 M. 330.

147. A sale made by a trustee to himself is void in law: Clute v. Barron, 2 M. 192.

148. No one without express authority of law can become purchaser of property which it is his duty to sell for the highest price he can obtain: Ames v. Port Huron, etc. Co., 11 M. 139.

149. When property is sold by a trustee and purchased by or for him on his private account, the purchase is void at the option of the cestui que trust, but he affirms it by acquiescence for an unreasonable length of time: Campau v. Van Dyke, 15 M. 371.

150. A trustee to whom certain mortgage securities had been assigned made a declaration of trust to a certain bank, setting forth that he held them primarily to secure the indebtedness of the cestui que trust to the bank. Held, that this did not of itself preclude the bank from purchasing other claims against the cestui que trust, whether secured upon the same property or not: Detroit Savings Bank v. Truesdail, 38 M. 430.

151. Where money is left to a village to build a suitable building to be used for a high school, without further directions as to its maintenance, and without endowment, the village may use its reasonable discretion on the subject, and may put it on the basis of the public schools. Such a building may be lawfully used in connection with the preparatory grades; and chancery cannot control the discretion of the local authorities in expediting the completion of the scheme and raising money for its support at public expense otherwise than may be provided by law when no private funds are given to the trust for that purpose: Hathaway v. New Baltimore, 48 M. 251.

(e) Duties and liabilities.

152. Strict performance of trust duties may be waived; but such waiver in the past and in the case of completed transactions will not justify or excuse subsequent laxity that has not been authorized or approved: Loud v. Winchester, 52 M. 174.

153. Trustees should not assume extraordinary risks or engage in dealings that depend on so many contingencies as to be unsafe, though it may be possible to work out a favorable issue from them: Loud v. Winchester, 64 M. 23.

154. A trustee must not use the trust to accommodate other parties, or to enter upon an extended course of bill-discounting and indorsing with customers, thus risking the funds of the trust estate: Ibid.

155. Trustees who hold property in trust to carry on a salt-making and lumber business in a particular place are not authorized to enter into an agreement with a company in another state to sell them unlimited amounts of lumber on time, thus putting a large part of the trust property in another jurisdiction at a serious risk: Ibid.

156. Pursuing a trust fund in the hands of a misconducting trustee cannot be construed as a waiver of his deficiencies: Ibid.

157. Whether goods are converted into money or not makes no difference with the trustees' responsibility to creditors whose right to the goods or proceeds are established; and if the proceeds are paid away by the trustees pendente lite they are responsible: Thayer v. Swift, H. 430.

158. On the foreclosure of a purchase-money mortgage given by a trustee (see infra, § 178), a personal decree against him was held proper: Hannah v. Carnahan, 65 M. 601.

159. Where a creditor had caused an arrangement to be made whereby his debtor's property was conveyed to a trustee to sell and with the proceeds pay encumbrances, and where such creditor had taken from said trustee a mortgage to secure performance of his trust, foreclosure of the mortgage was denied, the trustee not having abused his trust or been negligent, and having been unable to obtain means from the property in his charge: Humphrey v. Beckwith, 48 M. 151.

160. Defendants in a bill for an accounting brought by the assignee of an interest under a deed of trust are not concerned whether or not complainant paid anything or not for the assigned interest: Henderson v. Sherman, 47 M. 267.

161. A double responsibility rests upon a trustee in dealing with one whom he knows to be also a trustee, as any dealings between them in wrong of the latter's trust affects both with an equitable responsibility: Heath v. Waters, 40 M. 457.

(f) Accounts; compensation.

162. A trustee is not chargeable with a loss resulting from the renewal, through no fault of his, of an overdue note without renewing the security: Loud v. Winchester, 64 M. 23.

163. A trustee is to be credited with money advanced to settle claims against the trust estate, when such settlement was within the reasonable judgment of business men: Ibid.

164. Losses incurred through unauthorized dealings with the trust property are chargeable on the trustees where the beneficiary's consent is not shown; and the fact that such beneficiary took the property saved from such dealings does not present a case of election which prevents him from charging the losses to the trustees: Ibid.

165. A trustee is not chargeable with losses occurring on a sale of goods to a person whose responsibility he had no reason to doubt, and whose credit was good at the time of the sale: Ibid.

166. A trustee who has received the proper discount rates cannot charge for financial assistance rendered in discounting paper: Ibid.

167. Trustees must not receive from their employment personal benefits that are not provided for in the trust; as, e. g., by receiving special compensation for supervising transactions connected with the business confided to them, but unauthorized by the trust: Loud v. Winchester, 52 M. 174.

168. A trustee is entitled to a reasonable compensation for his time and services: Schwarz v. Wendell, W. 267.

169. A trustee is not entitled as of right to compensation, but on accounting it is within the discretion of a court of equity to make or withhold allowances as the case requires. It may properly be withheld if his services are merely constructive, and if his non-feasance has involved the estate in litigation: Henderson v. Sherman, 47 M. 267.

170. A trustee who acts in good faith and with reasonable diligence should be compensated: Barnebee v. Beckley, 43 M. 613.

(g) Investments.

See, also, ESTATES OF DECEDENTS, § 91; GUARDIANSHIP, §§ 82, 83, 90.

171. A trustee whose wrongful act in investing moneys has been repudiated by the cestuis que trustent cannot claim subrogation to their equities and have the trust enforced for his own benefit to the same extent that they could have had it enforced had they not repudiated his action: Rowley v. Towsley, 53 M. 329.

(h) Sales and mortgages.

As to power of executors under trust imposed by will to sell, see ESTATES OF DECEDENTS, §§ 266, 372-274.

As to purchases by trustee of the trust property, see supra, §§ 143-149.

172. No statute or common-law principle requires trustees who have an express and unqualified power to sell "in such manner as they may deem for the best interest" of the trust committed to them to sell by public auction only, or to first offer the property at public auction; so held of the board of escheats: Crane v. Reeder, 22 M. 322.

173. An agreement whereby property owned in common is put in the name of one of the owners to be held by him as trustee for the benefit of all parties, "subject to such decisions as the parties may direct from time to time," gives him no right to sell the whole without the consent of all the owners; and if he sells to a purchaser with notice the sale can convey no more than his own personal interest: Palmer v. Williams, 24 M. 323.

174. Where the trustee of lands is authorized to sell on specified terms he cannot sell except in compliance with his instructions, and cannot give credit where he is told to sell for cash: Ibid.

175. Consent that a trustee of lands may sell at a given rate at one time does not, when that sale falls through, operate as a continuing power to sell at a future time, especially where the value of the property fluctuates; after any considerable interval new authority is required, even though the price obtained may be larger than that previously consented to: Ibid.

176. A trust is forever ended upon the execution and delivery by the trustees of a conveyance under the absolute power of alienation; and such conveyance passes a good title to the grantee: Thatcher v. St. Andrew's Church, 37 M. 264.

177. Where one conveyed land in trust, and the trustees, with his knowledge and by virtue of the stipulations of the trust, to which certain events had given effect, deeded to a third person, and the first owner thereon relinquished possession on being required to, and never reclaimed it, but disposed of his property as if he did not consider this land as belonging to him, his title was regarded as extinguished: Thayer v. Arnold, 82 M. 336.

178. A wife's deed of land to her husband, in trust for their minor children, authorized him to sell and convey the property as he should deem best, and to re-invest the proceeds for said children; the deed was not to become operative or to be placed on record during the grantor's life, and if her husband survived her he was "to control and govern such property the same as if he held the same in fee-simple, without let, hindrance or bond to any person or persons." After her death he put the deed on record and sold the land for $1,700, and bought other land for $1,600, paying half down and giving a purchase-money mortgage for the rest. Subsequently he borrowed $600 from the same mortgagee, and gave a second mortgage on the same property. Held, that the purchase was valid because the price did not exceed the proceeds of the sale of the land conveyed in the trust deed, and that the purchase-money mortgage could be enforced, as it was given for the purposes of an investment that was warranted by the trust; but that as the trust deed — of which the record was notice — gave no power to mortgage property purchased, the second mortgage was void: Hannah v. Carnahan, 66 M. 601.

III. CESTUIS QUE TRUSTENT.

(a) Nature and extent of their estate.

179. A naked trust previously existing became an executed trust, and consequently a legal estate in the cestui que trust, by the operation of H. S. § 5565, which took effect March 1, 1847: Ready v. Kearsley, 14 M. 215.

180. By H. S. § 5565 the principle of the English statute of uses is adopted. That statute never operated upon mere resulting or implied trusts, but only on express trusts actually created by the parties; nor does said § 5565: Trask v. Green, 9 M. 358.

181. Passive trusts are now abolished, and when a deed creates them the title passes at once to the beneficiary: Burdeno v. Amperae, 14 M. 91.

182. In every case of naked trust the statute itself executes the trust and places the legal estate in the cestui que trust: Thompson v. Waters, 25 M. 214, 234.

183. It has converted all plenary rights to the use and control of lands into legal estates, and applies to existing as well as future trusts: Stevens v. Earles, 25 M. 40.

184. A trust requiring the trustee to manage property and pay rents and profits to the beneficiary unless the latter elects to live on it is an active trust, so long as the beneficiary is out of possession; and whenever that is the case it does not therefore vest a legal estate in the beneficiary under H. S. § 5565; and a mere beneficiary for life cannot, by deeding it, give title to more than an equitable life-interest, if to that: Parker v. McMillan, 55 M. 265.

185. Land was conveyed in trust for the grantor's wife for her life, then for her children until they should become of age, when the trustee was to convey to them: The wife survived the children. Held, that on her death the grantor's heirs at law took the property, and that a conveyance by the wife could not affect their interest: Ibid.

186. H. S. § 5567, enacting that every "disposition of lands" shall be directly to the person beneficially interested, and that a deed in trust shall not vest the legal estate in the trustee, does not apply where the interest of the cestui que trust was not created by the deed to the trustee, but by the original contract of purchase in connection with certain contemporaneous correspondence. In such case the cestui que trust takes merely an equitable title: Loring v. Palmer, 118 U. S. 321.

187. Where a trust under a will clearly designates the interests to be enjoyed and the persons who are to enjoy them, the expiration of the purposes of the trust gives such a legal character to these interests that no conveyance from the trustees is necessary to pass them: Toms v. Williams, 41 M. 552.

That property held in trust is not liable to execution, see EXECUTIONS, §§ 36-38.

(b) Rights, powers, etc.

188. Lands held in parol trust by a father for his daughter were exchanged for others, which he conveyed to his brother on like trust. Creditors of the father sought to reach it. Held, that the equities of the daughter were equal to those of the creditors, and she would be protected as against their claims: Patton v. Chamberlain, 44 M. 5.

189. A. devised land to B. in trust for her nieces C. and D. D., while yet a minor, conveyed her interest to C. Before the trust was closed the trustee represented to C. and D.

that it was necessary to raise money by mortgage to pay off the claims of certain heirs, whereupon he executed a mortgage of the trust estate, D. and the trustee signing as witnesses. A purchaser on foreclosure of the mortgage by advertisement filed a bill against B., C. and D. to have the mortgage declared an equitable one, his purchase an assignment, and for a decree for deficiency. Held, that the mortgage was void as to all parties under H. S. §§ 5578, 5583, and that D.'s signing as a witness and her assuming the mortgage in a subsequent deed from C. did not ratify the void mortgage as to her: Weaver v. Van Akin, 71 M. — (June 22, '88).

189a. A release by cestuis que trustent of a mortgage was held good in equity: McBride v. Wright, 46 M. 265.

190. Beneficiaries are entitled to be kept informed at all times by the trustees as to the management of the trust: Loud v. Winchester, 52 M. 174.

191. An insolvent debtor conveyed his property to a creditor, who in turn conveyed it in trust to be managed solely for his benefit, but to be reconveyed to the debtor after the trust should be executed. Held, that the debtor's position was that of a cestui que trust, who could demand an account, an enforcement of the trust, etc.: Ibid.

192. Where a party creating a trust to sell realty and personalty and apply the proceeds to pay debts, the residue to be given to persons named, has entered into partnership with the trustee and dealt with the trust funds as partnership assets, whereby losses have accrued, he cannot thereafter come in as cestui que trust and call the residuary beneficiaries to an account for the balance of the fund turned over to them by the trustee: Wilkins v. Fitzhugh, 48 M. 78.

193. The fact that a creditor has given liberal accommodations to his debtor, and has reduced the amount of his claim, does not relieve such creditors from the duty of doing business on business principles in connection with trustees of the debtor's property, held in trust to pay the debt: Loud v. Winchester, 64 M. 23.

194. Where a trustee acts in good faith, whatever binds him in any legal proceedings begun and carried on by him to enforce the trust, to which the cestuis que trust are not actual parties, binds them; and whatever forecloses the trustee, in the absence of fraud or bad faith, forecloses them: Richter v. Jerome, 123 U. S. 233.

195. Where A. and B. provided by contract for a transfer from A. to a trustee named, in trust for B., the expenses of the trustee in executing the trust belong to B. to pay, and no part of them is chargeable to A.; the trustee was trustee for B., and not for the parties jointly: Grant v. Merchants', etc. Bank, 35 M. 515.

IV. SUITS RESPECTING TRUST PROPERTY; ENFORCEMENT OF TRUSTS; PURSU- ING TRUST FUNDS.

(a) In general.

196. Courts of equity have control over matters of trust: Forrest v. O'Donnell, 42 M. 556.

197. Equity will interfere to enforce the proper administration of a trust and to prevent the grantor's intent from being defeated: Smith v. Bonhoof, 2 M. 115.

198. Equity takes cognizance of frauds discovered in the action of trustees whenever it can afford relief, provided its aid is invoked seasonably; and it has jurisdiction to enjoin the fraudulent execution of the trust and to give damages: Morrison v. Mayer, 68 M. 238.

199. The right to an accounting in equity is incident to most trust relations: Cochrane v. Adams, 50 M. 16; Clarke v. Pierce, 52 M. 157; Darrah v. Boyce, 62 M. 480.

200. Any accounting in respect to a trust that can present questions of losses caused by the trustee's negligence must be had in chancery: Rodman v. Nathan, 45 M. 607.

201. In a foreclosure suit brought by a trustee to render the fund available, the protection and administration of the trust are outside of the issue; and defendant owning the equity of redemption cannot resist foreclosure on the ground that the interests of the cestui que trust are in danger, nor can he have the fund enjoined from passing into complainant's control: Nugent v. Nugent, 50 M. 377.

202. If one who has a mere naked legal right, coupled with no equity, accepts a conveyance charged with a trust in favor of the party who has become vested with an equity, chancery will compel him to execute the trust: Ready v. Kearsley, 14 M. 215.

203. A bill to establish a trust in lands wrongfully patented was maintained with costs of both courts against the patentee and defendants claiming under him with notice, but dismissed as to purchasers in good faith with costs to them: Austin v. Dean, 40 M. 386.

204. The state will not interfere through its law officers to enforce the execution of a trust unless a public right or interest is in-involved: Attorney-General v. Soule, 28 M. 153.

205. The legislature and not the courts must act as parens patriae in giving completeness and direction to imperfect charities; and a valid discretion vested in a municipal corporation by statute is beyond judicial interference: Halshaw v. New Baltimore, 48 M. 252.

206. A grant of land was made by the state to an educational corporation, and by the grant it was provided that the proceeds should be devoted exclusively to the erection of buildings for its use, a bond being given by individuals to the state to secure the performance of this provision. By consolidation with another corporation the donee secured all the buildings it needed, and afterwards appropriated the proceeds of the lands to its general needs. The sureties in the bond to the state then filed a bill to restrain the misappropriation. Held, that the bill should not be sustained: Kiefer v. German American Seminary, 46 M. 636.

207. Where the delay on the part of a cestui que trust in asserting his equitable title arose from his trustee's faults and misstatements, held, that the trust was not abrogated by abandonment or laches: Loring v. Palmer, 118 U. S. 321.

As to laches and lapse of time in enforcing trust or complaining of breach, see EQUITY, §§ 554, 556, 558, 570, 578a, 579, 599, 600.

208. Equity may pursue a trust fund, so long as it can be identified, into the property wherein it has become invested; and this pursuit may extend beyond the original wrongdoer, and may reach persons taking with notice; they stand, in many cases, in the same position with him: Leland v. Collier, 34 M. 419.

209. When a trust fund is misapplied by the trustee, the cestuis que trustent may pursue it if they are able to trace and identify it; and no more than substantial proof of identity is required: Pierce v. Holzer, 65 M. 263.

210. A depository who has received from a trustee a fund belonging in part to the beneficiary cannot appropriate it by his sole act to his own debt held against the trustee so as to bar the real owner from pursuing it against the fund: Burnett v. First National Bank, 38 M. 630.

211. Where a trustee has deposited a trust fund with his general account, and then gives to a third person a check for the whole deposit, the identity of the fund is lost, and the cestui que trust cannot maintain assumpsit against a third person to recover it: Neely v. Rood, 54 M. 134.

(b) Parties; pleadings.

212. The right of action for interference with the trust estate is in the trustee and not in the beneficiary: Forrest v. O'Donnell, 42 M. 556.

213. The beneficiary is not permitted to sue at law in his own name: Ibid.

214. The trustees holding the legal title of a cemetery are the proper and only persons to bring ejectment for it against a municipal corporation assuming control adversely to them: Board of Health v. East Saginaw, 45 M. 257.

215. Land devised to an infant was left in the possession of a trustee, who was not to surrender it to the devisee until the latter should become of age, and show sufficient capacity to be entrusted with it. The trustee was entitled to possession. H. S. § 5565. Held, that the devisee, on reaching majority, could not bring ejectment against a third person until the trustee had either surrendered the possession or transferred the right thereto by an instrument in writing; the trustee's acquiescence in the suit is not enough: Atwood v. Frost, 57 M. 229.

216. Where trustees sue for the benefit of cestuis que trustent the latter are the substantial parties to the litigation: Bachelder v. Brown, 47 M. 366.

217. One who has conveyed lands in trust to be conveyed as a gift to a person named, but whose grantee has deeded to another, may proceed in equity to compel the execution of the trust: Abbott v. Gregory, 39 M. 68.

218. In a case where the discharge of a mortgage or permission to redeem was sought, and it appeared that under an agreement attaching to the mortgage and binding complainant the mortgagees held in trust for a third person, such third person was held to be a necessary party; and it was further held that an accounting should be had if necessary to adjust his claims: Glass v. Glass, 50 M. 289.

Further as to parties in suits to enforce trust or relating to trust property, see EQUITY, §§ 634-636, 662, 663.

Sufficient allegation of trust and breach, see EQUITY, § 836.

Averments in bills for accounting, see EQUITY, §§ 837, 838.

(c) Practice; evidence.

219. Trusts belong to the jurisdiction of equity; and the remedies connected therewith are so identified with the procedure that no departure from the general practice can be had unless permitted by statute or by rule of court: Ledyard's Appeal, 51 M. 623.

220. Injunction and receivership denied in suit against trustees where there was no allegation that they were insolvent, transient or irresponsible, or that fund was in a hazardous condition: Thayer v. Swift, H. 430.

221. Under a bill for an accounting by trustees any testimony that throws light on their management of the trust bears directly on the performance of their duty to keep the beneficiaries informed; and proof of misconduct and misappropriation by them is admissible whether anticipated and charged in the bill or not: Loud v. Winchester, 52 M. 174, 64 M. 23.

222. A wife, being desirous of devising her property so that her husband should have the benefit of it free from his creditors' demands, consulted an attorney, and at his suggestion devised the property in absolute terms to the attorney and another on an oral understanding that they should hold the same for the husband's use. The facts being undisputed, and the attorney admitting the whole case and signifying his readiness to perform on his part, the trust was enforced in equity against the other devisee: Hooker v. Axford, 33 M. 453.

V. DISCHARGE OR TERMINATION OF TRUSTS; REVOCATION.

223. Every trust in land ceases as soon as the purposes cease for which it was created: Montgomery v. Merrill, 18 M. 388.

224. A trust is not terminated until its purpose is fulfilled; and it is not revoked by the maker's death so long as a beneficiary remains: Lyle v. Burke, 40 M. 499.

225. Property granted in trust does not revert to the grantor until the cestui que trust or beneficial object of the grant ceases to exist in contemplation of law: Regents v. Detroit Board of Education, 4 M. 213.

226. Where A. had conveyed his farm in trust for his creditors, the conveyance being rather an encumbrance or security for debts than an absolute conveyance, it was held that when the purposes of the trust were satisfied the lands remaining would belong in equity to A. or his heirs, and if after A.'s death the grantee quitclaimed to A.'s heirs the latter would become vested with the legal title also: Detroit v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 23 M. 173.

227. The interest remaining in property after an express trust has been satisfied is a legal estate and requires no reconveyance where there has been no change in the property or the title held in trust: Steevens v. Earles, 25 M. 40.

And see BANKRUPTCY, § 60.

228. The trustee in a deed of trust cannot divest himself of the trust by simply withdrawing from it with the assent of the grantor, even though the latter is a beneficiary, if there are other beneficiaries who do not consent, or being infants cannot: Henderson v. Sherman, 47 M. 287.

229. An abandonment of a trust by the trustee and a surrender of the fund to the grantor constitute a breach of the trust and involve both in liability: Ibid.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN.

1. The history of the legislation relating to the university reviewed: Regents v. Detroit Board of Education, 4 M. 218.

2. The present university under the corporate title of "The Regents of the University of Michigan" is the same legal body with the university founded in 1817 and re-organized in 1831; so that grants made to the earlier corporation vest without further action in its successor: Ibid.

3. The conveyance by the governor and judges of Michigan territory of certain lands in Detroit to the trustees of the university of Michigan held valid: Ibid.

4. The regents have power to take, hold and convey real estate for any purpose tending to promote the interests of the university, to increase its funds, or otherwise to further the great public objects for which the corporation was created: Regents v. Detroit Young Men's Society, 12 M. 138.

5. Suit by the regents to recover the purchase-price of lands sold by them. The declaration averred their ownership, but did not show the nature of their title, nor how acquired, and it was demurred to on the ground that the regents had no power to make sale of lands without special legislative authority. Held, that as it was legally possible for the regents, in some modes and for some purposes, to be vested with the title to lands with the power to convey the same, judgment on the demurrer must be for plaintiff: Ibid.

6. As to the power of the regents to establish schools elsewhere than at Ann Arbor, see People v. Auditor-General, 17 M. 161.

7. The financial and other interests of the university are entrusted to the judgment and discretion of the regents. It is a sufficient answer to an application for a mandamus to show cause why they do not fill a professorship established by law that the appointment being likely to interfere with the harmony of the institution, and being one requiring great care and deliberation in making, they had commenced and were still making the investigations necessary to enable them to make a proper appointment; especially where there appeared to be no unnecessary delay or want of good faith in their proceedings: People v. Regents, 4 M. 98.

8. An act of the legislature appropriated to the regents of the university the proceeds of a certain tax, "Provided that the regents shall carry into effect the law which provides that there shall always be at least one professor of homeopathy in the department of medicine, and appoint said professor at the same salary as the other professors in this department." The regents adopted certain resolutions "that there be organized in the department of medicine a school to be called the Michigan School of Homeopathy, to be located at such place (suitable in the opinion of the board of regents), other than Ann Arbor, as shall pledge to the board of regents by June 20th next the greatest amount for buildings and endowment of said school," and appropriating $3,000, besides the salaries of professors, out of said tax, to be expended in establishing said school, and appointing, for the present, one professor in said school at the same salary as the other professors. Whether these resolutions constituted a performance of the condition of the appropriation, quere: People v. Auditor-General, 17 M. 161.

9. Whether the provision in H. S. § 4909 that there shall always be at least one professor of homeopathy in the department of medicine of the university is repugnant to Const., art. 13, which confers upon the regents the power of general supervision of the university, quere; the court being equally divided: People v. Regents, 18 M. 469.

10. An application was refused for a mandamus to compel the regents to appoint and maintain two professors of homeopathy in the department of medicine, in accordance with the provisions of the act of 1873: Attorney-General v. Regents, 30 M. 473.

11. By act 14 of 1869, appropriating money for the university, it was also intended to give to the university whatever should be collected under act 59 of 1867: People v. Auditor-General, 19 M. 13.

12. As to allowance by regents of expenditures by officers, and as to responsibility of director of laboratory for moneys received by assistant, see University v. Rose, 45 M. 284. See AGENCY, §§ 93, 143; EQUITY, § 693.

As to agreement between vendor and vendee to share costs of joint defence, see CONTRACTS, § 277.

I. CONTRACTS; RIGHTS THEREUNDER.

(a) In general; requisites; validity.

1. Where lands are transferred for other lands the transaction is practically a sale; so that a person responsible for the piece of land to be sold cannot exonerate himself by giving it away, or by exchanging it for other land instead of for cash: Huff v. Hall, 56 M. 456.

2. A party once shown to be a purchaser will be presumed to have still the rights of a purchaser unless something appears to the contrary. A lapse of two years is not enough to rebut the presumption; but whether the presumption might not in time be too weak to sustain judicial action, quere: Ormsby v. Barr, 22 M. 80.

3. Where a contract gives one the option of acquiring an interest in lands by paying a certain sum within a specified time, it vests him with no interest or estate in the lands; and if he fails to pay the money or any part of it within the time, the privilege given him by the contract is at an end, and his rights under it cease: Richardson v. Hardwick, 106 U. S. 252.

4. A written option for purchase binds if accepted within the time fixed by it; and where no method of acceptance is prescribed nor any arrangement made for a personal meeting, an acceptance sent by mail is good: Wilcox v. Cline, 70 M. 517.

5. When a vendor is negotiating with different persons for the sale of property, and it is known by all that a few days will decide on the establishment of a public improvement which will greatly affect its value, time may become so material that any delay by a proposed purchaser may justify the vendor in regarding the bargain as off: Hawley v. Jelly, 25 M. 94.

6. Where a contract for the purchase of standing timber provides that the purchaser shall also have the refusal of the land itself for a given time at a stated price, his taking possession within that time, with the exercise and assertion of ownership beyond what relates to the timber, amounts to an irrevocable election to keep the land: Curran v. Rogers, 35 M. 221.

7. A contract for the sale of lands does not become completed where the party offering terms withdraws them before they are agreed to: Wardell v. Williams, 62 M. 50.

8. A written instrument agreeing to sell standing timber on certain terms, and to make a contract, is not a contract, but merely an offer to make one, and will not of itself support an action: McDonald v. Bewick, 51 M. 79.

See, also, as to acceptance, STATUTE OF FRAUDS, §§ 11, 12, 18, 19.

9. Where a contract for the sale of land is executed in duplicate, each duplicate is to be treated as an original; and where the parties intend so to execute a contract, it seems that the contract is not complete and duly executed until duplicates at least substantially alike are executed and delivered: Crane v. Portland, 9 M. 493.

10. Where the papers so intended as duplicates were not substantially alike, and where the vendor's name was attached without written authority from him, it was held that the vendor's accepting one paper and signing his name to it without the vendee's knowledge or assent did not bind the latter: Ibid.

11. Where a land contract is, as to one vendor, executed without written authority, a subsequent approval indorsed by him upon the duplicate retained by the vendors does not validate the contract unless there is some distinct act of ratification on his part that establishes a mutuality of obligation between himself and the vendee: Dickinson v. Wright, 56 M. 42.

As to mutuality and completeness, see, also, SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE, I, (b), 3.

As to ratification of agent's unauthorized contract, see STATUTE OF FRAUDS, §§ 28, 89, 202, 205.

12. A parol contract to sell lands was good at common law, and is only made void by statute. That such a contract relating to land in Illinois is void cannot be assumed without proof of a statute avoiding it: Ellis v. Maxon, 19 M. 186.

See STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

13. An informal paper signed by an heir with but one witness, wherein she admitted payment "to her full satisfaction of all her right, title," etc., in the estate for which she "signed off" all such right, etc., held to have the effect of a written contract of sale and to convey an equitable title: Hyne v. Osborn, 62 M. 235.

That a deed without witnesses is good as a contract to convey, see CONVEYANCES, § 52.

14. Executory contracts for the sale of land need not be sealed to satisfy the requirements of the statute of frauds: Enos v. Sutherland, 11 M. 538; Hammond v. Hannin, 21 M. 374. (See H. S. §§ 5709-5718 as to the executing, attesting and recording of such contracts.)

15. And though bearing no certificate of acknowledgment, a land contract, if known to a subsequent purchaser, cuts him off (so held of a contract executed in 1873): Hains v. Hains, 69 M. 581.

16. Whether a land contract is invalid because not attested by two witnesses as required by the act of 1879 (H. S. § 5709), quere; the court not passing on the question: Wardell v. Williams, 62 M. 50.

17. A sale of standing timber with leave to remove it within three years is valid so far as the vendor is concerned, or any one claiming under him, though not owning it at the time of the sale, if he obtains title to it within the three years: Haskell v. Ayres, 35 M. 89.

(b) Construction of contract.

18. That certain other lands were agreed to be conveyed as collateral security for the vendee's performance of a contract of purchase of timber lands, does not affect the construction of the contract or the vendor's rights under it: Jennisons v. Leonard, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 302.

19. A contract for the sale of lands embraces only the lands specifically described and cannot be extended so as to include other lands, although it contains a clause that the purchase is intended to be of all lands still belonging to the vendor: Gibbs v. Diekma, U. S. Book 26 (Co-op. ed.), 177.

20. Under a contract to convey, at a gross sum, "fourteen lots of 20 feet front by 100 feet deep, part of the Benvilla plat, three lots fronting on F. street and eleven immediately back," and further promising if the vendee "should prefer the same number of lots on W. street or B. avenue" (then unplatted) "that he shall have his choice." Held, that the vendor had no right, upon the vendee's failure to select lots instead of those in the rear of the F. street lots, to substitute others on W. street for such lots; and further, that the vendor had no right to debar the vendee from his selection by so platting the lots on W. street and B. avenue as not to conform in size with the lots designated: Robinson v. Cromelein, 15 M. 316.

21. A vendor is bound by the exact terms of his contract of sale in reference to quantity: Heyer v. Lee, 40 M. 353.

22. A contract for the purchase of the north half of a certain lot which is bounded on the west side by a river running so that the north line of the lot is longer than the south line calls for the north half in quantity, divided from the remainder by an east and west line: Au Gres Boom Co. v. Whitney, 26 M. 42. See Dart v. Barbour, 32 M. 267; Jones v. Pashby, 48 M. 634, 62 M. 614.

23. L. contracted in writing, with H., in Chicago, to sell her "the south half" of his fruit farm in Michigan; but, after acceptance of the deed, she discovered that the bounds given therein included nearly half an acre less than half of the farm, and that the actual south half would include a valuable barn. Held, that she was entitled to a conveyance of the fraction including the barn: Heyer v. Lee, 40 M. 353.

24. A stipulation in the contract that the vendee shall "improve the premises," but specifying neither the kind nor the extent of the improvements, is so indefinite that the intention of the parties cannot be known; and it cannot be enforced: Morris v. Hoyt, 11 M. 9.

25. A contract for the purchase of land which provides for the payment by the purchaser of a stipulated price, and that he shall also "well and faithfully in due season pay or cause to be paid all taxes and assessments," etc., "upon the said premises," etc., is ambiguous as to whether it does not throw upon the purchaser the duty to pay back-taxes then known to be a lien upon the lands; the words "all taxes," etc., "upon the said premises," being as applicable to taxes then existing as to future taxes, and the requirement to pay in due season possibly meaning in season to prevent the land being sold for taxes: Jones v. Wells, 81 M. 170.

(c) Operation and effect.

1. Generally.

Buildings erected by vendee are realty, see REAL PROPERTY, §§ 6, 7.

26. C. and B. made a written contract by which B. was to manufacture lumber, and on settlement was to apply part of the amount due him in payment for land which he occupied under an oral agreement to buy it from C., and from which he cut timber. But on final settlement he refused a deed and sued for the amount that was to have been applied in payment for the land. Held, that he could not recover the amount under his contract, but could only recover a reasonable saw-bill, which could not be measured by contract rates: Cilley v. Burkholder, 41 M. 749.

27. A clause in a land contract providing that the vendors "are to have one-half of the proceeds of the hay raised on said premises until the whole amount is paid" gives them no title to or right of possession in the hay, but means that the vendee is to account to them in money for the value of one-half thereof: Witheral v. Muskegon Booming Co., 68 M. 48.

28. In equity a vendee, under a contract for the sale of lands, is considered as a trustee of the unpaid purchase money for the vendor, who is regarded as a trustee of the land for the former: Wing v. McDowell, W. 175; Michigan State Bank v. Hastings, 1 D. 225.

29. The estate of one in possession of lands under a contract of purchase is that of a tenant at will: Dwight v. Cutler, 8 M. 566; Crane v. O'Reiley, 8 M. 812; Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 M. 351.

30. A clause in a contract of purchase that on default by the purchaser the seller might declare the contract void, and the purchaser should thereafter be deemed a mere tenant at will, and liable to be proceeded against as such, confers no additional rights, and is merely declaratory of the actual relation and rights of the parties: Crane v. O'Reiley, 8 M. 812.

31. A contract for the future sale and conveyance of lands gives no present right of possession to the vendee without special provisions to that effect; nor does it even operate as a license to use the lands until it is performed: Druse v. Wheeler, 22 M. 439, 26 M. 189.

32. Any license to the vendee to enter and make improvements that is implied from an executory contract for the sale of lands is revocable at law, and is revoked by a subsequent conveyance to a third party: Buell v. Irwin, 24 M. 145.

As to licenses generally, see LICENSE.

33. The purchaser in a land contract may, in such contract, waive the right to a notice to quit on default: Crane v. O'Reiley, 8 M. 812.

34. A receipt for a payment on a sale of land does not of itself entitle the purchaser to take possession before he has fulfilled the terms of the sale: Gault v. Stormont, 51 M. 636.

35. In a contract for the conveyance of any interest in land which the vendor may have, an agreement by him that the vendee may enter on the land and cultivate the same is not an agreement to convey and transfer the possession of the land: Clee v. Seaman, 21 M. 287.

36. And if, in such a contract, the vendee agrees that if he violate any of its provisions he shall forfeit all right under it, and may be removed in the manner provided by law for the removal of a tenant holding over, while this might estop him to deny, in the particular proceeding specified, the right of the vendor to remove him, he will not be estopped in an action of ejectment to deny the plaintiff's title: Ibid.

As to estoppel against vendee from disputing vendor's title, see ESTOPPEL, §§ 107, 120, 121.

2. Passage of title.

37. An executory contract for the sale of land has no tendency to show any legal title in the vendee or in any one claiming under him: Buell v. Irwin, 24 M. 145.

38. But although at law the title remains in the vendor, equity regards the contract as conveying it to the vendee: Fitzhugh v. Maxwell, 34 M. 138.

39. The land is in equity the property of the vendee, who may dispose of or encumber it in like manner with land to which he has the legal title, subject to the rights of the vendor under the contract: Wing v. McDowell, W. 175.

40. But a mortgage given by the vendee conveys no legal interest, and the record of such mortgage is notice to no one: Ibid.

41. When timbered land is subject to a contract of sale which provides that no trees shall be cut until full payment is made, the equitable right to the timber is nevertheless in the purchaser, and becomes a legal right when he has made or tendered full performance, even if he or some other person has wrongfully cut the timber meanwhile: Haven v. Beidler Manuf. Co., 40 M. 237.

42. Under a contract for the absolute sale of the wood and timber on certain lands, to be removed at certain specified times, the wood and timber remain the property of the purchaser though not removed within the time provided; and the taking and removal of the same by the vendor is a wrongful conversion, for which the purchaser has a clear right of action, though he may himself be liable for a breach of his covenant to remove the same within the times specified: Green v. Bennett, 28 M. 464.

43. But if the sale be conditioned upon the provisions for removal, the vendor may hold everything not removed within the time specified, and this would be his only security against, and remedy for, the failure to perform the condition; but if he waive the condition, as he would by claiming and receiving damages from the purchaser for such failure, the wood and timber would remain the purchaser's property, to be removed within a reasonable time: Ibid.

44. A contract for the sale of all the pine timber on certain lands at a given price per thousand, to be removed within a stated time, gives no authority to cut and remove it after the time has expired, and conveys no title to logs thereafter cut on those lands by third parties: Huskell v. Ayres, 32 M. 93.

45. A sale of standing timber, to be cut and removed within a certain time, limits the time for cutting and removing, and is a sale only of so much as is cut and removed within that time: Utley v. Wilcox Lumber Co., 59 M. 263.

46. A contract for the sale of timber does not give the title thereto if it provides that, after being fully paid for, all that is not removed within a specified time, or all that is removed before it is fully paid for or consent is indorsed on the contract, shall belong to the vendor: Wasey v. Mahoney, 55 M. 194.

47. Under a contract transferring all the pine trees the vendee "may choose to take," the latter agreeing to pay a certain sum "for the said pine so cut," etc., title did not pass until the pine was cut; and until then the vendee had neither actual nor constructive possession, and could not bring trespass for damages against a grantee of the vendor who had cut timber on the land: Pfistner v. Bird, 43 M. 14.

48. A contract in writing, executed by the grantee in a warranty deed, and dated the day of the acknowledgment of the deed, which, after reciting the purchase of the land, provides that "all the sawing pine and white-wood timber that is now upon the above-described tracts of land belongs to" the grantor named in such deed, "who is sole owner thereof," and that he "has, by agreement, thirty months from this date to remove the same," is held to be something more than a revocable license, and as securing to the grantor, as against his grantee and all others having notice thereof, the existing ownership of such of the timber, whether severed or standing, as he should take off in thirty months. The contract and deed are to be construed together as parts of a single transaction: Johnson v. Moore, 28 M. 3.

49. Standing timber was absolutely sold by written contract, under seal, giving the vendee (who paid in full) the right for two years to enter and remove the same. Subsequent parol extensions were made by the vendor, who, before the last extension expired, sold the land to third parties acquainted with the facts, and they forbade the vendee to cut, as he had commenced to do. The court was equally divided as to whether the vendee, suing in trespass, should recover for the value of all the timber or only for that which was severed: Williams v. Flood, 63 M. 487.

50. A sale of all the "merchantable" timber on specified lands transfers the title at once; and the only question left open as to any particular timber on the lands referred to is one of fact as to whether it is or is not merchantable: Haskell v. Ayres, 35 M. 89.

51. A contract for the sale of lands and timber authorized the purchaser to sell the timber, but it was further agreed that the title to it should remain in the original vendors until full payment was made, and as soon as the purchaser effected a sale the proceeds should be applied on his own purchase. Held, that the contract gave the purchaser power to transfer title to his vendees: Oriman v. Shaw, 37 M. 448.

(d) Rescission.

Of sales of personalty, see SALES, IV, (b).

Of contracts generally, see CONTRACTS, XIII.

See, also, EQUITY, II, (j), 3.

52. One who purchases under a warranty deed, containing covenants of seizin and quiet possession, cannot rescind the bargain on the ground of a mistake as to the extent of the vendor's title if the mistake does not go to the entire consideration; as where he supposed the vendor had title in fee-simple instead of a mere life estate: Leal v. Terbush, 53 M. 100.

53. And where the vendee's mistake as to the extent of the vendor's interest is one of law, arising from the construction of a recorded will wherein the vendee is a devisee, it seems that it cannot avail him for rescission: Ibid.

54. One who buys land orally, paying part of the purchase price and agreeing that a mortgage on the premises shall be paid out of the purchase money, cannot, having gone into possession, and having been tendered a discharge of the mortgage and a sufficient deed, claim a rescission of the contract because of such mortgage: Bailey v. Cornell, 66 M. 107.

55. Where an oral bargain for the purchase of land is made by the vendee through the vendor's agent, and the vendee enters into possession under circumstances such that she could enforce the contract against the vendor, she cannot, after paying the price, and after the agent has remitted it to his principal, repudiate the contract and hold the agent for the money paid to him; her remedy, if any, is against the vendor: Ibid.

56. A bill was filed to set aside an exchange of real estate for fraud in representing defendant's lot to be unencumbered, and the main defence was that complainant's land was also encumbered. Defendant had sold the land obtained on the trade to a purchaser who had connived in the fraud. It appeared that the encumbrance on complainant's land was a mortgage which covered some adjacent property, and that the latter had been sold subject to the entire mortgage; and it was not shown that this mortgage had been concealed. Held proper to rescind the bargain, and that, under the prayer for cancellation and general relief, it was proper to decree that conveyances be made to restore the title: Knowlton v. Amy, 47 M. 204.

57. Where one conveyed land with the understanding that the grantee could and would maintain him for the rest of his life, but proved that the grantee did not and could not give him a quiet, comfortable and respectable home, held, that a reconveyance should be decreed: Humphrey v. West, 40 M. 597.

58. A few inches' deficiency in the area of land contracted for, to the vendee's damage of only $25, and not affecting the enjoyment of the rest of the land, will not sustain a bill to rescind the contract for false representation as to the area: Steinbach v. Hill, 25 M. 78.

59. A man had a contract from his brother for certain land, the vendor reserving the right to declare it void if any payment was a month overdue. The vendee was to pay all taxes. The contract was in duplicate. No one held continuous possession of the land. Only one payment was made on the contract, and several years later the vendor, in furnishing a tax-list of his lands, included the property in question as if it were land upon which it was his duty to pay the taxes, distinguishing it from some other land on which others ought to pay. After the death of both parties both copies of the contract were found among the vendor's papers, and his administrators filed a claim against the vendee's estate for the amount unpaid on the contract. Held, that on the facts above stated they did not make out a case; the facts indicated that the contract had been rescinded: Swain v. Baldwin, 54 M. 119.

60. The grantors under a land contract cannot repudiate it merely for a brief delay in performance when they have retained the first payment and taken no measures to forfeit the contract, and no injurious change has occurred in values or in any other way: Kimball v. Goodburn, 32 M. 10.

61. Where a man is defrauded in a trade for land he loses no rights by neglecting to pay up taxes assessed against the other party, when he has made his demand for rescission before the period for redemption expired and in time to enable the other to protect his rights by paying the tax: Place v. Brown, 87 M. 575.

62. A vendor's right, if any, to rescind his conveyance because the consideration turns out to be partially worthless is barred by his using the consideration or part of it and allowing the land to be improved and new interests to arise: Dunks v. Fuller, 82 M. 242.

63. A party defrauded in a contract of sale must make his election on the discovery of the fraud, or within a reasonable time thereafter, whether he will rescind the contract or resort to an action on the case for damages: Carroll v. Rice, W. 873; Merrill v. Wilson, 66 M. 232.

64. If the condition of the property has been so changed that the parties cannot substantially be placed back where they were before the sale, the party defrauded cannot claim rescission, but must resort to an action for damages: Ibid.

65. The vendee in a land contract went into possession and cut timber. The vendor could not make out a title, whereupon the vendee sued to recover money paid under the contract. Held that, as the value of the property was ascertainable, the vendee was entitled to rescind although he could not place the vendor in statu quo: Wright v. Dickinson, 87 M. 580.

66. Where the vendor in an executory contract for the purchase of lands receives from the vendee a quitclaim deed for the lands, this is a rescission of the contract; and he cannot afterwards maintain an action on notes which were given for the purchase price: Ives v. Lansingburgh Bank, 12 M. 361.

67. A vendor having on default by the vendee elected to treat the contract as void, and having given the vendee notice to quit, must be regarded as having relinquished the right to the amount then due on the contract. He cannot treat the contract as void in respect to the rights which it secured to the vendee, and valid in respect to those which it secured to himself: Goodspeed v. Dean, 12 M. 352.

68. Where the vendor in a land contract sells the land to some one else than the contract purchaser, without his consent, the latter has a right to consider the contract rescinded, and to have what he has paid thereon refunded, subject to any equitable deductions: Atkinson v. Scott, 36 M. 18; Weaver v. Aitcheson, 65 M. 285.

69. When a person who has contracted to sell land proceeds to rescind the contract and oust the other party, the latter may acquiesce and consider it at an end; and as there is a failure of consideration for whatever he has paid on the contract, he may recover it back: Davis v. Strobbridge, 44 M. 157.

70. The vendee's voluntary relinquishments of all rights under the contract of purchase, and his voluntary surrender of possession to the vendor, operate to terminate his equitable interest: Jennisons v. Leonard, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 302.

71. Where land is cleared in reliance on a contract for its sale, and the contract is rescinded without fault of the party relying on it, and the benefit of the work is appropriated by the other, the latter becomes liable to pay for it: Davis v. Strobbridge, 44 M. 157.

72. Where the vendor of land exchanged for personal property seeks to rescind the exchange for fraud, he must tender a reconveyance. A mere offer to "trade back" is not enough: Wilbur v. Flood, 16 M. 40.

73. A vendor by bringing suit to recover the unpaid purchase money on a sale of lands alleged to have been induced by fraud affirms the sale and cannot seek to rescind it; nor could he rescind it in any case without first returning the money received: Merrill v. Wilson, 66 M. 232.

74. A man exchanged land for a note and a corresponding interest in a mortgage securing this note and another. He afterwards acquired the other note independently. Held, that in demanding rescission of the trade he was under no obligation to surrender the second note: Place v. Brown, 87 M. 575.

75. Upon the rescission of a land contract by the vendor the vendee was held entitled to recover the value of the improvements made by him upon the premises, less the value of the use of the premises while in his possession, and also to recover, less the costs of collection, the sum recovered by the vendor on a note made by third parties which he had agreed to receive as part of the purchase price: Sheard v. Welburn, 67 M. 387.

II. FALSE REPRESENTATIONS.

In sales of personalty, see SALES, II.
And see FRAUD, I, (b).

76. Vendors acquainted with lands sold them, with false representations as to their quality for timber, etc., to vendees who had never seen them. The bargains were rescinded in chancery: Jones v. Wing, H. 301; Rood v. Chapin, W. 79.

77. False and material representations as to the character and surrounding advantages of lands traded for other land were made by the owners, knowing or having good reason to know that they were deceiving the other party. Held, that equity would grant rescission: Match v. Hunt, 88 M. 1.

78. Where one with full knowledge of the property, concerning which the owner knew little, designedly contrived by the concealment of material facts to deceive the latter as to its value, and by misrepresentations, etc., induced him to abstain from seeking information, and obtained from him a contract for the sale of the property at much less than its value, the agreement was held voidable for fraud. Such concealment is often sufficient to create fraud, and under such circumstances a party is strictly accountable for all of his representations: Swimm v. Bush, 23 M. 99.

79. Where a vendor of real estate, for the fraudulent purpose of effecting a sale, makes a positive false representation that there is no mortgage upon it, he is liable in an action for fraud, or the vendee may rescind: Bristol v. Braidwood, 28 M. 191.

80. False representations and concealments by a vendee as to the value of the lands held not to warrant setting aside the sale where the opportunities of both parties for knowledge were equally good, where there was no fiduciary relation, and where each party had in fact been trying to overreach the other: Williams v. Spurr, 24 M. 835.

81. One who, during the negotiations for the sale of lands, professes to have peculiar scientific knowledge as to the probability of the lands proving valuable for the production of oil, and falsely represents the value of the lands for oil, is liable if the purchaser relies upon such professions and is deceived by such false assertions of value: Kost v. Bender, 25 M. 515.

82. The representations of one who has been in the actual occupation and cultivation of land, and purports to speak from actual results, so far combine matters of fact with matters of opinion that a purchaser is justified in placing some reliance on them: Wright v. Wright, 87 M. 55.

83. False representations as to the value and location of land in Kansas, made by one who claims to have personal knowledge thereof, and who is seeking to sell the land or exchange it for land in Michigan, cannot be considered mere matter of opinion, and the buyer relying thereon is entitled to recover damages: Nowlin v. Snow, 40 M. 699.

84. A. exchanged a city lot for B.'s farm and $200, B. falsely stating that he had a good title, and exhibiting, to deceive A., an abstract which incorrectly — through the unintentional mistake of the register of deeds — showed a clear title in B. Held, that A. was entitled to have the bargain rescinded upon repayment of the $200 and tender of a quitclaim to B.'s land: Scadin v. Sherwood, 67 M. 230.

85. The vendor's false representation as to the rate of interest on a mortgage subject to which he sells is material in an action based on fraud in the transfer: Jackson v. Armstrong, 50 M. 65.

86. The constructive notice furnished by the record of a mortgage will not deprive a purchaser of the right to rely on the vendor's positive statements, fraudulently made, that the property is unencumbered; nor will it prevent him from suing for the false representations: Weber v. Weber, 47 M. 569.

87. A vendor of land who falsely represents its area so positively as to restrain the vendee from further inquiry cannot defend against the charge of fraud on the ground that the vendee saw the land and could judge of its extent for himself: Starkweather v. Benjamin, 32 M. 305.

88. One who obtains land in a trade, and before doing so goes upon and looks at it, has nevertheless a right to show that he was misled by the representations of the other party, if they related to matters of which no one could adequately judge on a casual inspection; such as the capability of the land for drainage and the reason why water was standing. The fact of fraud in such representations is for the jury: Jackson v. Armstrong, 50 M. 65.

89. Where a party is deceived into a purchase of land by the acts and misrepresentations of the vendor, however innocently done or made, and the deception went to the essentials of the contract and worked serious injury, it seems that a bill to rescind will be sustained: Steinbach v. Hill, 25 M. 78.

90. Where the vendor of land by misrepresenting its extent induces the purchaser to incur a liability for land which the vendor is unable to convey, the effect of the transaction in the contemplation of the law is a fraud upon the purchaser, even though both parties acted in good faith: Baughman v. Gould, 45 M. 481.

91. Damages may be recovered for misrepresentation of the value and quality of lands sold to plaintiff by defendant, whereby plaintiff was deceived, even though no actual fraud was intended: Holcomb v. Noble, 69 M. 896.

92. Advice by one party in an exchange of land to the other to visit the former's land before the trade took place, and an offer to go and show it to him, were held not to have avoided the effect of a fraudulent representation: Rood v. Chapin, W. 79.

93. Evidence of common report as to the area of a piece of land is not admissible to rebut the presumption of fraud arising from positive false statements thereon made by the vendor of the land to the vendee, even if the rumors are traced to the vendee himself. He would be justified in believing the vendor's statements to be based on better knowledge: Starkweather v. Benjamin, 32 M. 305.

94. A misrepresentation, however fraudulent, does not avoid a sale, unless it served to deceive the vendee at the time the sale became binding on him. So held where, pending the negotiations for the purchase of a salt well, and during the vendor's representations as to the strength of the brine and its freedom from gypsum, and before the purchaser was bound by the contract, the latter was working the well: Whiting v. Hill, 23 M. 399.

95. Where A., trying to sell lands to B., makes false and fraudulent representations to C., who believes these representations, and at A.'s request urges B. to purchase, a charge that A. is liable to the same extent as if the representations had been made directly to B. is too broad, as it does not show that the representations were ever communicated to B. or that B. was affected by them: Kost v. Bender, 25 M. 515.

96. Where one, as agent of his wife, made a fraudulent sale of her land and took a mortgage for deferred payments, and subsequently became the assignee of the mortgage and filed a bill to foreclose it in his own name, it was held that he might, as to all equities growing out of his fraud or deceit in making the sale, be treated directly as the vendor and mortgagee: Burchard v. Frazer, 28 M. 224.

97. Where such agent knew that the land in question contained twenty acres less than was represented in the proposal for sale, and knew that the purchaser was deceived by his misrepresentations as to the quantity, and still sold for a price corresponding to the larger quantity, he was guilty of deliberate fraud in thus misrepresenting and selling: Ibid.

98. The vendor of lands, at the time of conveyance, delivered to the vendee a written statement which contained part, but not all, of the parol representations that had been made by her and relied on by the vendee. Held, that those not contained in the writing were not cut off by the deed and writing, but were available to impeach the transaction for fraud: Match v. Hunt, 38 M. 1.

99. Where C., having no title to part of certain lands and a defective title to the rest, sold them to S.—representing that he had title and would convey it—and then quit-claimed them to S., it was held (1) that S. need not rescind the bargain or tender reconveyance before suing C. for obtaining his money by false representations; (2) that S.'s right of recovery was not affected by his having moved upon the premises soon after the purchase and by his not having as yet been ejected or disturbed; (3) that S. was entitled to recover the difference between the value of the title he had bargained for and that which he actually received; or, that he could recover what he was compelled to pay to perfect his title: Stockham v. Cheney, 62 M. 10.

As to damages for false representations in sale of land, see DAMAGES, §§ 110, 224, 225, 522, 523.

As to evidence, see EVIDENCE, §§ 110-114, 185, 196, 711, 770, 771.

III. WARRANTIES.

100. A vendor's representation that the land he sells is valuable for oil is no warranty, and therefore evidence as to subsequent expenditures by the vendee in boring for oil is immaterial in an action on his note for the price: Kost v. Bender, 25 M. 515.

No warranty implied against unsoundness in sale of standing timber, see SALES, § 146.

IV. PERFORMANCE; BREACH.

As to enforcement, see SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

As to part performance, see SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE, I, (b), 8; STATUTE OF FRAUDS, IX.

(a) Performance by vendor; the title.

101. Where a contract for the sale of land expressly fixes the time of performance—e. g., for the vendor to convey—it binds the parties, and no inquiry can be made as to what would have been a reasonable time for such performance: Abell v. Munson, 18 M. 306.

102. Where the owner of lands contracted with the trustees of an adjoining church to deed to the church certain premises in consideration of a certain quitclaim of lands to him, and of certain other things, as soon as the trustees could get legal authority to act, it was held that until they obtain authority, and deeded to him, he was not required to take any steps for their benefit: Druse v. Wheeler, 22 M. 439.

103. A purchaser gave his bond and mortgage for the purchase price, and received from attorneys who were acting for both parties a receipt therefor, stating that the attorneys were to hold the same without attempting their enforcement until conveyances of the property purchased were made. It was held that the vendors had performed on their part when they had executed the conveyances and left them with the attorneys: Van Dyke v. Davis, 2 M. 144.

104. Unreasonable delay by the vendor in tendering a deed is immaterial where the vendee keeps general control of the land and has not sought to rescind: time is not of the essence in such a case: Curran v. Rogers, 85 M. 221.

105. A contract provided that the vendee of a house should pay a certain sum on taking possession, when completed, on or before a certain date. Held, that payment in advance and taking possession while the house was still unfinished did not waive the vendor's obligation to finish it: William v. Hodges, 41 M. 685.

106. In every contract for the sale of lands, unless the contrary intention is expressed, there is an implied undertaking on the part of the vendor, available at law as well as in equity while the contract remains executory, to make out a good title clear of all defects and encumbrances: Dwight v. Cutler, 8 M. 566.

107. The vendee has a right to a good title, that the deed shall contain proper covenants, and that the title shall be a marketable one, not open to reasonable objection: Allen v. Atkinson, 21 M. 351.

108. The vendor, unless there is something in the contract to show a contrary intention, or unless he acts in a ministerial or fiduciary capacity, impliedly engages to convey by a deed containing the usual covenants; and in this state lands are usually conveyed by deeds containing a general warranty: Dwight v. Cutler, 8 M. 566; Allen v. Atkinson, 21 M. 351; Brand v. Frumveller, 82 M. 215; Gault v. Van Zile, 87 M. 22.

109. Where the deed tendered by plaintiff, as it did not contain a general warranty, was not such as the contract required, so that defendant was justified in refusing it, it was held that, as the failure to consummate the sale occurred through plaintiff's default, he was not entitled to recover for defendant's occupancy pending the negotiation: Dwight v. Cutler, 8 M. 566.

110. A vendee who is to have a deed of land, possession of which is to be reserved until October, is not bound to accept a deed which also reserves all crops produced before October: Colgrove v. Solomon, 34 M. 494.

111. Where the contract is silent as to the title to be conveyed, such title is presumed to be good, and the burden is upon the vendee to show a defect that will justify the refusal of a proper deed: Dwight v. Cutler, 8 M. 566; Daily v. Litchfield, 10 M. 99; Allen v. Atkinson, 21 M. 351; Baxter v. Aubrey, 41 M. 18.

112. But when there is an apparent encumbrance of record, the vendee has a right to demand a reasonable time for investigation. Thirty days is not unreasonable for this purpose when the mortgagee resides at a distance, and it does not appear that in the meantime the relation of the parties has been changed: Allen v. Atkinson, 21 M. 351.

113. Where the vendor in a land contract has conveyed to a third person subject to such contract and with notice of the vendee's right, by deed containing all the covenants called for by the contract, the vendee on completing his payments is entitled to receive from such grantee a deed containing equally full covenants: Lovejoy v. Potter, 60 M. 95.

114. Where the tender of title under a land contract satisfies the requirements of the stipulations for it in other respects, it is not objectionable for coming from a third person instead of directly from a party to the contract: Kimball v. Goodburn, 82 M. 10.

115. A vendee cannot refuse a proper deed on the ground that the title is not as clear and marketable as the law requires merely because certain mortgages upon the land, though paid, have not been discharged of record; nor because a litigation is pending between strangers which involves the land in question but does not affect the vendor's title: Curran v. Rogers, 85 M. 221.

116. The levy of an execution against one person upon lands belonging to another does not of itself excuse a contract purchaser of the land from fulfilling his contract; and though one who has agreed by parol to take the land makes such a levy an excuse for breaking off negotiations, his act cannot in law be treated as a natural consequence of the levy: Walkley v. Bostwick, 49 M. 874.

As to construction of agreement relating to clearing land from claim of dower, see CONTRACTS, § 876.

117. A contract for the sale of a store was not to be binding on the vendee unless he could acquire from the vendor an indefeasible right to remove the front stairway in the building, and should be under no obligation, legal or otherwise, to maintain any stairway therein. The store was one of a block of three stores which had been specifically devised by the vendor's father to his children—the store in question to the vendor, the others to his brother and sister. The estate was still unsettled. The stairway was used in connection with upper rooms in the other stores. Held, in an action by the vendor for damages for non-performance, that he could not recover, because he was in no position to comply with the terms of his contract to convey a perfect title and save defendant from all interference; for until the estate was settled he could have no indefeasible title, nor could the rights of the other devisees be settled in this suit: Platt v. Newman, 71 M. — (June 22, '88).

118. A deed was deposited in escrow with a written agreement by the grantor that the sale might be abandoned if the title to be conveyed should not be found by the depositary to be a full title in fee-simple and free from all encumbrances. Held, that this paper referred to the title as it stood when the arrangement in escrow was made, and did not bind the grantee to accept any future rectification: Fletcher v. Moore, 42 M. 577.

119. One who is entitled to a full conveyance waives nothing by taking a conveyance from the owner of a part interest in the legal title, and still retains his right to demand the remainder: Lamore v. Frisbie, 42 M. 186.

120. One who by the condition of a contract is entitled to a good and legal title to lands, and who accepts a warranty deed with collateral bond of indemnity against defects in the title, thereby waives strict performance of the condition, and becomes bound to pay the purchase money: Rorabacher v. Lee, 16 M. 169.

(b) Performance by vendee; payment; default; forfeiture.

As to interest, see INTEREST, §§ 12, 63, 68.

121. For a contract in which the agreements by a purchaser to take up two encumbrances were held not to be so connected that the necessity of paying a larger sum than was anticipated for one would excuse taking up the other, see Kibbee v. Thompson, 6 M. 410.

122. There is no known usage to fix periods of payment in contract for purchase of land: Gault v. Stormont, 51 M. 636.

123. Where a man, after making a contract of sale of land, leaves a life estate in all his property to his wife, and there is no administration, payments on the contract are good if made to her: Lamore v. Frisbie, 42 M. 186.

124. Up to the time when a large payment was made upon a land contract, payments were sharply looked after and promptly demanded; thereafter the vendee treated the property as his own, and no claims or demands were made until his death. The amount proved to have been paid being apparently sufficient to satisfy the original claim, the contract was treated as satisfied: Day v. Cole, 65 M. 129. Same case, on petition for leave to file bill of review, 65 M. 154.

125. A vendor's failure to take any steps to forfeit the contract of sale, or to demand further payment, or to dispossess the vendee, when, if his version of the contract were true, there were several instalments past due and unpaid, and his acceptance, as satisfactory, of payments which were much less than is now asserted to have been due at the time, are significant facts tending to discredit his testimony: Rogers v. Odell, 86 M. 411.

126. A contract was made for the sale of lands, the payments to be made to a third person who held a mortgage given by the seller. Payment was not made by the day and the seller declared the contract forfeited. The purchaser subsequently paid the money to the mortgagee, but without the seller's assent. It appearing that the land contract was designed to provide for the payment of the mortgage, it was held that when that was done, as it did not concern the seller whether the mortgage was paid one way or another, the contract was to be regarded as substantially complied with: Richmond v. Robinson, 13 M. 193.

127. Timber lands were sold by contract for a sum payable in three annual instalments, the vendee to have possession and to cut not less than 3,000,000 feet of logs in each of the three years, and to make monthly payments at the rate of a certain sum for each 1,000 feet cut; it being also provided that if in any year the monthly payments on the basis of the timber cut, taken together, fell short of the annual instalment due, the vendee should make up the deficiency, conveyance to be made on full payment. Held, that the payments were to be kept up in the ratio of the cutting, and that in case of a failure to pay, the vendor could enter and take possession of the "down timber" though the contract contained no clause of re-entry: Jennisons v. Leonard, 21 Wall. 302.

128. Pendency of suit against vendor and involving the validity of the title excuses failure on vendee's part to tender payment and demand deed: Dickinson v. Wright, 56 M. 42.

129. A land contract provided that on default the vendees should give up the property and pay all damages arising therefrom, the vendor to notify them in writing of the amount of the damages, such amount to stand as an acknowledged obligation; and if the vendees objected thereto by notice within ten days, arbitrators should determine the amount. The vendor, on default, gave notice that the damages amounted to $92, to which the vendees paid no attention, and suit was brought. Without deciding whether such a contract could be enforced according to its terms, held, that the statement of damages could include only such damages as could be recovered by suit, that it should be itemized, and might be disregarded if including, without means of separation, a claim for commissions paid by the vendor to his agent for making the sale: Hubbard v. Epworth, 69 M. 92.

130. The vendor will not be allowed to forfeit the contract for non-payment when, not having the title to convey, he is not in position to perform on his own part: Converse v. Blumrich, 14 M. 109.

131. A contract for the purchase of lands will not be treated as forfeited by non-payment at the day, where the parties themselves have not treated time as essential, and it is not expressly made so by the terms of the contract: Shafer v. Niver, 9 M. 258.

132. If, after forfeiture of a land contract and pending proceedings by the vendor to regain possession, the vendees without much delay tender payment of the purchase price and the costs of all proceedings already taken, the vendor should accept it; but a tender of mere taxable costs may not be enough; and in a particular case an allowance of $300 beyond those costs was held reasonable: Stickney v. Parmenter, 85 M. 287.

133. A party in default in his payments on a land contract cannot, as a matter of right, discharge himself from all responsibility by tendering or paying simple interest, and become thereby entitled to a deed, especially where the other party has declared the contract forfeited for the default; a court of equity can require compound interest in such cases if justice demands it: Richards v. White, 44 M. 622.

134. A contract for the sale of timbered land required A., the vendee, to pay current and back taxes and an instalment of the price annually, but stipulated against waste. Time was made essential, and the contract was subject to forfeiture on default. The purchaser did not pay the taxes, but within the first year cut a large quantity of pine, which he sold, besides selling a parcel of the land on time. The vendors also, within the year, sold their interest to W., who went on the land and began to lumber it without any objection from A., who did not offer payment, but some time afterwards assigned all his rights to G., who had full knowledge of the facts. G. then filed a bill against W. to restrain him from exercising acts of ownership. Held, that the bill could not be maintained, and that the complainant must be held responsible for all the expenses incident to the litigation, including charges, to which the suit gave rise, against lumber cut by W., who could include such charges in his costs: Gram v. Wasey, 45 M. 223.

135. A vendee of land who has neglected to comply with the terms of the written contract therefor will lose his rights under the contract if, after notice of forfeiture for such non-compliance, he allows the vendor to suppose that he has acquiesced in the forfeiture, and the vendor, in consequence, sells the land to another: Truesdail v. Ward, 24 M. 117.

136. Where one who occupied land under a contract to purchase made valuable improvements without any agreement with the owner at the time that he should be paid for them, and afterwards forfeited the contract or gave up the farm, he could not recover pay for the improvements unless it was agreed as part of the arrangement, or as one of the conditions upon which he gave it up, that he was to have pay for them: Sword v. Keith, 81 M. 247.

(c) Recovery of purchase price.

137. Where, in an action for the price of lands sold, the contracts of sale are declared on as valid at law, the suit must fail unless they are so; and if they were executed without authority as to one of the vendors they were not validated by mere acts of part performance on the vendee's part, even though they were acts of such a nature as would give a remedy in equity: Dickinson v. Wright, 56 M. 42.

138. Nor is the bringing of suit for the price an affirmance of the contract sufficient for the purposes of the case; the suit must fail unless there was a right of action previous to the time of instituting it: Ibid.

139. Where a vendee orally agrees with his vendor at the time of receiving a conveyance that if the premises when surveyed shall exceed the specified number of acres paid for he will pay for the surplus, there can be no recovery against him, even if such an agreement were valid under the statute of frauds, unless the deed describes and conveys more than the quantity paid for: Lewis v. Pond, 45 M. 46.

140. One who sues for the purchase price of land sold on contract is entitled to show that when he tendered the deed and other papers in fulfilment of it no objection was made to them: Gault v. Van Zile, 87 M. 22.

141. Where one refused to pay his promissory note given for land of which the vendor had fraudulently claimed to be owner, and had given a mere quitclaim, a tender of reconveyance was unnecessary, since if there was no title there was nothing to reconvey and no covenants to release: Reeves v. Kelly, 30 M. 182.

142. Where it was shown that one who defended against the payment of a promissory note had given it for the purchase price of land that he had taken possession of under the plaintiff's deed and still held, it was admissible for him to show in explanation of his possession that after the real owner of the land had recovered judgment against him in ejectment his wife had purchased the title and he held under her purchase: Ibid.

143. A vendor who, having put his vendee in possession and tendered a proper deed, sues for vendee's failure to fulfil, may recover the purchase price: Curran v. Rogers, 85 M. 221.

144. Lands subject to mortgage were conveyed by A. to B. upon an agreement that B. should pay to A. the balance of the proceeds when he should sell the lands. B. traded them for other lands, and was held liable for the value of the lands he received beyond the mortgage: Huff v. Hall, 56 M. 456.

145. Vendees in a contract binding them to keep the premises in as good a condition as at the date of their contract until, by their payments, they become entitled to a deed, cannot set up in defence, when sued on their note for the purchase price, damages suffered by them in being deprived, by reason of defects in the title, of the right of cutting timber; for they had no such right: Jennison v. Stone, 83 M. 99.

146. In an action for an unpaid balance on a land contract it is proper to show by way of recoupment that, in consequence of the institution of a suit involving the validity of plaintiff's title, payments were deferred by mutual agreement, and that meanwhile the timber on the land was so far destroyed by fire as to lessen the value of land: Dickinson v. Wright, 56 M. 42.

(d) Recovery by vendee.

147. A right of action accrues to the vendee as soon as there is a breach by refusal to convey on demand accompanied by a proper tender: Allen v. Atkinson, 21 M. 351.

148. And the vendee is not deprived of his right of action for breach because, for a consideration moving from a third party, to whom the vendor has conveyed the land, he has waived his right to a specific performance: Ibid.

149. A contract for the purchase price of land made by a father in the name of his minor son, held not to enable latter to recover back a payment made: Armitage v. Widoe, 36 M. 124.

150. One buying a growing crop by the acre and giving his note for the estimated quantity, with the understanding that the land was to be measured thereafter, is entitled after measurement to recover for any deficiency; he having paid the note to a bona fide purchaser: Bennett v. Beidler, 16 M. 150.

151. Where land is sold by virtue of the acceptance by the purchaser of a written proposition made to him by the vendor, naming the number of acres and proposing to sell it, "together with the house thereon, for the sum of thirty dollars for each acre of land, and fifty dollars for the house thereon," and the aggregate purchase price paid and secured to be paid amounts to the sum which the number of acres named in the proposition would amount to at the price named, with fifty dollars added for the house, it is to be regarded as a sale by the acre, and entitles the vendee, or those claiming under him, to a deduction for a deficiency in the number of acres from a mortgage given to secure payments: Burchard v. Frazer, 23 M. 224.

152. Where the vendor in a contract to convey land in fee is unable to make out a title the vendee need not tender performance to enable him to recover what he has paid less the benefits he has derived: Wright v. Dickinson, 67 M. 580, 590.

153. Even, though, having cut timber, he cannot put vendor in statu quo: Ibid.

154. Where the vendee tenders money in performance of his obligation the vendor has no right to the money except upon the condition of a simultaneous delivery of the deed; and therefore, in an action against the vendor for the breach of such a contract, it is not necessary to show that the tender has been kept good: Allen v. Atkinson, 21 M. 351.

155. Where the vendor of land rescinds his contract and ousts the vendee the latter may recover what he has paid: Davis v. Strobridge, 44 M. 157.

156. If the vendor, having title, refuses to convey, or if he disables himself from conveying, the measure of damages is the value of the land at the time of the breach: Allen v. Atkinson, 21 M. 351; Hammond v. Hannin, 21 M. 374.

157. And if, in such case, the vendee, for a consideration moving from a third party, has waived the right to specific performance, the measure of damages he may recover from his vendor is the difference between the actual value of the land at the time of the breach and the sum agreed to be paid, less the consideration received for the waiver: Allen v. Atkinson, 21 M. 351.

158. Where the vendor has acted in good faith, and is unable to convey a good title, the measure of the vendee's damages is the purchase money and interest, adding perhaps the cost of investigating the title; such measure being the rule where one who has no title conveys with warranty: Hammond v. Hannin, 21 M. 374.

As to damages for breach of covenant, see CONVEYANCES, §§ 361-368.

As to recovery back of payments made under contract void because in parol, see STATUTE OF FRAUDS, §§ 227-233.

V. VENDOR'S LIEN.

(a) When attaches.

159. The vendor of real estate has an equitable lien upon it for the purchase money, where no security for the payment has been taken by him: Carroll v. Van Rensselaer, H. 225; Payne v. Atterbury, H. 414; Palmer's Appeal, 1 D. 422; Sears v. Smith, 2 M. 243; Mowrey v. Vandling, 9 M. 39; Converse v. Blumrich, 14 M. 109.

160. The vendor of land who has taken no security, although he has made an absolute deed and acknowledged receipt of the purchase price, retains an equitable lien therefor (unless there be an express or implied waiver or discharge) against all persons except bona fide purchasers without notice: Dunton v. Outhouse, 64 M. 419.

161. As between grantor and grantee an estate is bound for the unpaid purchase money unless (1) there are arrangements between the parties which show that reliance is not placed on any unwritten claim against the land, or (2) such complications in their agreement that a court cannot define with certainty the precise amount due, or identify the lien to be enforced: Hiscock v. Norton, 42 M. 320.

162. The lien of a vendor of land for the purchase money does not attach unless the land is actually sold for an agreed consideration payable in any case and as the purchase price: Palmer v. Sterling, 41 M. 218.

163. A vendor's lien can exist only as collateral to a debt created simultaneously with the sale and a part of it: Ibid.; Dunton v. Outhouse, 64 M. 419.

164. If the vendor takes a distinct and independent security for the purchase money, other than the personal obligation of the vendee — as the note or other obligation of a third person, or the obligation of the vendee with sureties — the lien is gone: Palmer's Appeal, 1 D. 422; Sears v. Smith, 2 M. 243.

165. One cannot become a purchaser by a transaction of which he is wholly ignorant, nor can there be as against him a vendor's lien for a purchase price which he never agreed to pay: Weare v. Linnell, 29 M. 224; Dunton v. Outhouse, 64 M. 419.

166. One who fraudulently and with no purpose of fulfilment procures a conveyance in consideration of an agreement to obtain a conveyance of other lands to the grantor, and then retains title and possession, may be compelled in equity to pay the value of the premises, as if on a completed sale to him; and the existence of a legal remedy will not prevent a resort to equity to have the agreed consideration or the value of the premises out of which complainant has been cheated declared an equitable lien on the lands: Merrill v. Allen, 38 M. 487.

167. Complainant and defendant agreed jointly to build and keep a hotel on defendant's land, with an option to complainant to buy defendant's interest by paying for the land and repaying defendant's expenditures. Held, in a suit for specific performance, that defendant had an equitable lien for the purchase money, which should be sold to satisfy such lien as in mortgage cases: Johnson v. Fowler, 68 M. 1.

168. A vendor's right to a lien is not, it seems, confined to the sale of a legal title or of a title in fee, but extends to equitable titles, subject to the risk that bona fide purchasers from the legal holder may intervene and break it: Ortman v. Plummer, 52 M. 76.

169. Whether, where an infant buys land, giving back a mortgage for the purchase price, and after coming of age disaffirms the mortgage, the vendor's equitable lien does not attach to the land, quere: Young v. McKee, 13 M. 552.

170. In a case where a conveyance of land appeared to have been made without consideration and to overreach creditors, a court of equity refused to enforce a vendor's lien for an indebtedness due from the grantee to the grantor at the time of the transfer: Dunton v. Outhouse, 64 M. 419.

171. A woman deeded the west half of a quarter section of land to her brother, and took back a lease of it, and at the same time the parties made an agreement whereby he was to build her a house on the west half and she was to let him and his wife occupy a portion of it during their natural lives, and was also to let to him the whole quarter section for the term of her own natural life for a certain proportion of the crops. The conditions of the agreement were too indefinite to be estimated at a fixed sum. Held, that the three transactions must be construed together, and that an equitable lien on the land for the fulfillment of their conditions was not enforceable: Hiscock v. Norton, 43 M. 320.

172. A vendor's lien being in the nature of an equitable mortgage, an execution sale of the premises upon a judgment for the purchase price negatives, it seems, the claim of lien: Clark v. Stilson, 36 M. 482.

173. Where a person claiming to have a vendor's lien upon lands has mingled his claim for purchase money with a claim for the price of personal property in a single judgment in such manner as to render it impossible to determine how much of the judgment represents the price of the land and how much the value of personal property, and under this judgment has proceeded to execution levy and sale of the premises in question, his lien as vendor for the purchase money is lost: Ibid.

174. Where the purchase price of one parcel of land is so blended in a mortgage with that of another that it cannot be separated, no lien beyond the mortgage itself can properly be enforced: Ortman v. Plummer, 52 M. 76.

175. A bill to establish and enforce an equitable lien for a portion of the purchase price of certain primary school lands was brought by an intermediate owner of said lands against his vendee. Held sustained by a showing that after the original purchase, and an assignment of a portion by the original purchaser through mesne conveyances to complainant, and a sale by complainant of his portion to defendant, with delivery of possession, the defendant, through collusion with the original purchaser, procured new certificates from the state land office to himself and to such original purchaser for their respective interests, and that defendant afterwards, upon a settlement with complainant, assigned to him all defendant's interest in these lands as security for payment of the amount due him, which assignment, however, defendant repudiated as having been executed on Sunday, and under threats of criminal prosecution: Jones v. Sackett, 36 M. 192.

(b) Pleading; evidence; practice.

176. A vendor's bill to enforce a lien is uncertain if it alleges that the purchase price was to be paid in five or six years at ten per cent. interest: Waterfield v. Wilber, 64 M. 642.

177. A bill to establish and enforce a vendor's lien upon lands should set forth the contract of purchase, both as to the consideration and terms of payment; and the allegations with respect thereto should be clearly proved, in order that the court may compel the execution of the agreement of the parties, and not one of its own creation: Mowrey v. Vandling, 9 M. 39; Dunton v. Outhouse, 64 M. 419; Waterfield v. Wilber, 64 M. 642.

178. A joint bill to enforce a vendor's lien cannot be sustained where it appears that complainants are not joint owners, and that the contract of purchase is entire, no part being apportioned to the respective owners, and there being no evidence of the relative value of each parcel at the time of the sale: Waterfield v. Wilber, 64 M. 642.

179. Evidence that the vendee was to work out the unpaid portion of the purchase price will not sustain a bill which alleges a sale for a certain price, but does not state what mode of payment was agreed upon. And if the evidence were proper, the lien could not be enforced until a breach of the contract was shown by defendant's refusal to pay in labor: Mowrey v. Vandling, 9 M. 39.

180. The vendor's lien upon land sold for the unpaid purchase money exists, generally speaking, and the burden of proof is on the purchaser to establish that in the particular case it has been intentionally displaced by consent of parties: Sears v. Smith, 2 M. 243; Dunton v. Outhouse, 64 M. 419.

181. A vendor's lien being in the nature of an equitable mortgage cannot be strictly foreclosed; there must be a sale: Fitzhugh v. Maxwell, 34 M. 138.

182. Decree should allow defendant to purchase at the sale, should ascertain the indebtedness to be paid, and should direct the surplus, deducting such payment and above costs and expenses, to be paid to complainant: Johnson v. Fowler, 68 M. 1.

183. Where, upon a bill to rescind, it appeared that complainant's conduct had been such as to preclude him from that form of relief, but the facts set forth showed that he was entitled to a lien as vendor, such lien was established under the prayer for general relief: Merrill v. Wilson, 66 M. 232.

·VI. VENDEE'S LIEN.

184. A vendee who has paid the purchase money prematurely has a lien as against the vendor analogous to that of a vendor against a vendee who has not paid: Payne v. Atterbury, H. 414.

VII. RIGHTS, DUTIES, LIABILITIES, ETC., OF OTHERS THAN ORIGINAL PARTIES.

185. An assignment of a land contract held to be a forgery: Day v. Cole, 65 M. 129.

186. A vendor who takes from a vendee a surrender of his contract takes it subject to all the obligations assumed by the latter to third parties, and is obliged to perform his vendee's contracts with such parties: Woodward v. Clark, 15 M. 104.

187. One who purchases the title or rights of the vendors in a land contract, with knowledge of the vendees' equities, becomes liable to the same extent and in the same manner as those from whom he bought: Converse v. Blumrich, 14 M. 109.

188. One who received an assignment of the vendor's interest and had recognized the vendee's rights afterwards made a resale of the same property to the vendee at a higher price, and took back a mortgage for part of the purchase price. Held, that the new arrangement was void for want of consideration, and the mortgage could not be enforced: Ibid.

189. Surrender by vendee without wife's consent invalid where homestead right involved: McKee v. Wilcox, 11 M. 858.

190. If a purchaser has in good faith surrendered the contract for cancellation and the inchoate rights of third persons are protected, a subsequent levy upon the land under an execution against him will fail. But any conveyance of his interest must be subject to any lien of third persons thereon already obtained: Welsh v. Richards, 41 M. 598.

191. Where a vendor, covenanting against encumbrances, pays his vendee money expressly to take up an outstanding mortgage, the vendee is a trustee for the benefit of his own subsequent purchasers taking under similar covenants, and must apply the money in their favor; otherwise he is liable as for money had and received to any one of the latter who redeems in his stead: Twitchell v. Drury, 25 M. 398.

192. The statute of frauds does not require a vendee's agreement to pay the purchase money for land to be written to enable him to contract to sell the land again. It is therefore of no consequence, so far as such a contract is concerned, whether the vendee could have enforced his rights in the land as against his vendor or not; and the vendee's grantee is not concerned in dealings between the vendee and his vendor as to what the former shall receive out of any money to be paid for the land: Burke v. Wilber, 42 M. 327.

193. One who takes conveyance knowing that timber has been sold to another with indefinite term for removal is liable if he cuts timber without giving notice to remove in reasonable time: Wood v. Elliott, 51 M. 320.

194. Where one who has sold standing timber to be taken off in three years conveys the land, reserving the timber absolutely, he may extend the contract time for taking off the timber, but cannot do so indefinitely to his grantee's prejudice: Haskell v. Ayres, 85 M. 89.

195. Possession of land by a contract purchaser is constructive notice of his rights: Woodward v. Clark, 15 M. 104; Russell v. Sweeney, 22 M. 235; Farwell v. Johnston, 84 M. 342. See, also, NOTICE, I, (c).

196. Rights conferred by a land contract cannot, as against one in full possession under it, be affected by errors of description whereby deeds from the same grantor to subsequent purchasers are made to cover portions of the same land: Seager v. Cooley, 44 M. 14.

197. Where a deed is given in pursuance of a land contract it is presumed to secure and perpetuate all rights conferred by the contract, and an intermediate conflicting deed given by the same grantor has no priority against a vendee in possession: Ibid.

And see INJUNCTIONS, § 87.

WAIVER.

See ESTOPPEL.

1. There can be no waiver without knowledge of the defect waived: Waldron v. Murphy, 40 M. 668.

2. Waiver implies the right to object: English v. Franklin F. Ins. Co., 55 M. 278.

3. Waiver is voluntary, and implies an election to dispense with something of value, or to forego some advantage which the party waiving it might at his option have demanded or insisted upon: Warren v. Crane, 50 M. 300.

4. The question of waiver is one of intent, and is a proper subject of inference from surrounding circumstances: Hibernia Ins. Co. v. O'Connor, 29 M. 241.

5. A waiver may be proved by circumstances as well as by direct testimony: Cobbs

v. Philadelphia Fire Assoc., 68 M. 463 (Feb. 2, '88).

6. A waiver of a legal right is not to be implied from slight circumstances: Bird v. Hamilton, W. 381.

7. Evidence of the waiver of stipulated rights should be explicit: Gault v. Van Zile, 87 M. 22.

8. Waiver of a forfeiture will be assumed on slight evidence if equity requires: Lyon v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 55 M. 142.

9. Waiver by delay of the right to sue is one of fact and not of law in all cases that are not within the statute of limitations: Dayton v. Monroe, 47 M. 198.

10. A waiver cannot renew an estate that has expired by limitation: Grand Rapids Bridge Co. v. Prange, 35 M. 400.

11. By asserting a valid ground of defence one does not waive reliance on a different one that is equally valid and consistent with it: Vanneter v. Crosseman, 89 M. 610.

As to WAIVER in particular cases, see that heading in the Index.

WASTE.

I. WHAT CONSTITUTES; WHO LIABLE.

II. REMEDIES FOR WASTE.

I. WHAT CONSTITUTES; WHO LIABLE.

1. In this state it is not waste for a tenant to clear wild lands of their timber: Campbell's Appeal, 2 D. 141.

2. The cutting of timber into cord-wood by a tenant holding over after his lessor's death held waste under the circumstances of the case: Howard v. Patrick, 88 M. 795.

3. A tenant impliedly covenants to use the farm in a husbandman-like manner, and not to exhaust the soil by improper tillage; and it is waste for an outgoing tenant to plough up all the meadow land on a farm of 200 acres: Chapel v. Hull, 60 M. 167.

4. Taking ore from open mines on premises sold on execution during the period after sale in which the execution debtor is allowed to hold possession is not necessarily waste on such debtor's part: Ward v. Carp River Iron Co., 47 M. 65, 50 M. 522. As to sales of ore so mined, see Ibid.

5. A life-tenant is bound to keep the premises in repair and must not commit waste: Curtis v. Fowler, 66 M. 696.

6. Tenants for life not made punishable for waste by the person granting the estate are liable for both commissive and permissive waste: Stevens v. Rose, 69 M. 259.

7. A life-tenant punishable for waste can do all reasonable acts consistent with the preservation of the estate which would otherwise by law be waste; but he may not maliciously injure the estate, as by demolishing buildings that are a part of the freehold, or by cutting down fruit, ornamental or shade trees: Ibid.

8. A life-tenant—even though her estate arose by act of law—who has granted her estate absolutely to a third party without retaining possession is not liable for waste committed by her assignee: Beers v. Beers, 21 M. 464.

9. One holding over as against his own deed is not liable for permissive waste or for means profits: Payne v. Atterbury, H. 414.

II. REMEDIES.

10. For waste the proper remedy under our statute is an action on the case. And the action may be maintained by a landlord against the assignee of the lessee: Lee v. Payne, 4 M. 106.

11. Such action cannot be maintained against a tenant for life for waste committed by his assignee after such tenant has parted with all his estate and is out of possession; the action is regulated by H. S. §§ 7940, 7941: Beers v. Beers, 21 M. 464.

12. The reversioner, not the administrator, is entitled to recover for waste committed by a tenant or by any person in wrongfully cutting timber: Howard v. Patrick, 38 M. 795.

13. In case of waste by tenant for life in bequeathed personalty the testator's personal representatives cannot interfere; the right to complain belongs to those to whom the limitation over is made: Sutphen v. Ellis, 35 M. 446.

14. A foreclosure purchaser whose title is perfected by failure to redeem may sue in case for injury done to the estate, maliciously and with knowledge of his rights by the cutting and carrying away growing timber during the time for redemption: Stout v. Keyes, 2 D. 184.

15. So an execution purchaser may maintain an action of trespass on the case for waste committed pending the right to redeem: Ward v. Carp River Iron Co., 47 M. 85.

16. H. S. § 7956 was not intended to curtail the jurisdiction of courts of equity in matters of waste, but is merely in affirmance of their concurrent jurisdiction with courts of law: Chapel v. Hull, 60 M. 167.

17. The jurisdiction of chancery will be exercised where a trespass is calculated to do permanent injury to the freehold: Ryan v. Brown, 18 M. 196.

18. Injunction to restrain trespass in the nature of waste was granted to an execution debtor's grantee whose title was held to be prior to that of the execution purchaser: Drake v. McLean, 47 M. 103.

And see INJUNCTIONS, §§ 69-71.

19. Where plaintiff in ejectment applied for an order to stay waste, it was held that refusal was discretionary and was not reviewable on mandamus. A party entitled to a stay of waste can have no remedy for refusal to grant relief unless he seeks such stay in an affirmative suit at law or in equity: Parks v. Marquette Circuit Judge, 38 M. 244.

20. Granting a motion to stay waste is not within the jurisdiction of the supreme court after reversal and order of new trial in ejectment, though before remittitur: Crane v. Reeder, 23 M. 92.

XI. WATER COMPANIES; WATER SUPPLY.

Prosecutions for nuisance in maintaining dam, polluting waters, etc., see CRIMES, §§ 646-656.

I. NAVIGABILITY; PUBLIC USE.

1. Navigable waters at the common law are those where the tide ebbs and flows: Lorman v. Benson, 8 M. 18; Attorney-General v. Ewart Booming Co., 84 M. 462. But in this country those waters are regarded as navigable in law which are navigable in fact, whether tidal or not: Lorman v. Benson, 8 M. 18; The Daniel Ball, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 557.

2. The term "navigable waters" as used in H. S. § 9420 (relating to punishment of crimes) is not confined to waters where the tide ebbs and flows: Tyler v. People, 8 M. 320.

3. Rivers are navigable when they are used or susceptible of use in their ordinary condition as water highways over which trade and travel are or may be conducted in the customary modes: The Daniel Ball, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 557.

4. To render a stream a public highway it need not be susceptible of navigation by boats or vessels. A valuable capacity for floating rafts or logs creates a public easement, leaving the owners of the bed of the stream all other modes of use not inconsistent with it: Moore v. Sanborn, 2 M. 519.

5. A stream that is capable of being used in its natural condition for important purposes of navigation, such as floating forest products to market or the place of manufacture, must be regarded as a public highway: Thunder Bay River Boom. Co. v. Speechly, 81 M. 386.

6. The fact that a stream having capacity for valuable floatage has not been used by the public, or has only been used by persons following a particular occupation, does not prevent such stream's assuming a public character; in the new states of the Union user cannot, in the nature of things, be necessary to found a public right: Moore v. Sanborn, 2 M. 519.

7. And the ordinance of 1787 superseded the common-law doctrine of the necessity of usage or custom to establish a public right in the navigable waters of the northwest territory, even if that rule would otherwise have prevailed there: Ibid.

8. The public right is not affected by the fact that the stream has not a capacity for floatage, in its natural and ordinary stage, at all seasons of the year. It is a valuable, and not a continual capacity for use, which determines the right: Ibid.

9. A stream navigable only at certain seasons of the year during periodical stages of high water is to be considered a public highway at those seasons: Thunder Bay River Boom. Co. v. Speechly, 81 M. 386.

10. But the possibility of occasional use during annual and brief freshets does not make a stream a public highway: Ibid.

11. A stream is not a public highway if it cannot be used as such in its natural condition; nor has an upper riparian proprietor a right to make it such by detaining the water until a flood sufficient for floating logs can be caused, to the prejudice of the proprietor below: Ibid.

12. A stream in which, without improvements, no logs can be floated at any season of the year, and in which, even when improved, no logs can be floated without dams, is not navigable in any sense: East Branch Sturgeon River Improvement Co. v. White, etc. Lumber Co., 69 M. 207.

13. The fact that the waters of a stream eventually find their way through the lakes into the St. Lawrence does not bear upon the stream's navigability: Burroughs v. Whitwam, 59 M. 279.

14. Public use of a river, after a dam has been built across it, for pleasure-boating or fishing has no tendency to prove navigability, and evidence of such use is inadmissible: Ibid.

15. Water may be navigable without a current, and water having a current is not necessarily navigable: Turner v. Holland, 65 M. 458.

16. The Grand river is navigable water of the United States from its mouth in Lake Michigan to Grand Rapids: The Daniel Ball, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 557.

17. Thunder Bay river is a public highway for the purpose of running logs: Thunder Bay River Boom. Co. v. Speechly, 81 M. 886.

18. The Emerson bayou, an inlet of the Saginaw river, which has a depth of from six to nine feet, and which is capable of use and is occasionally used by vessels, is, it seems, navigable water: Turner v. Holland, 65 M. 458.

19. The Thread river, a crooked and shallow stream never used for travel or transportation, or for the floating of logs, and abounding in "rapids" where the depth of water — except in short periods of high water — is not more than five or six inches, is not navigable: Burroughs v. Whitwam, 59 M. 279.

20. Navigable waters are public highways at common law: La Plaisance Bay Harbor Co. v. Monroe, W. 155; Lorman v. Benson, 8 M. 18. And the use thereof is equally open to all persons: Butterfield v. Gilchrist, 53 M. 22. The difference between land and water highways indicated: Attorney-General v. Ewart Booming Co., 34 M. 462.

As to the use of streams for log-driving and booming, see infra, VIII.

As to use of improvements, see infra, II.

As to use of canals, see infra, §§ 36, 37.

As to the nature of the public easement of navigation, see EASEMENTS, § 2.

That actions for obstructing navigable streams are transitory, see ACTIONS, § 34.

Costs on judgment for obstructing stream, see COSTS, § 49.

II. IMPROVEMENT OF NAVIGATION.

(a) In general; corporations; tolls.

21. The public authorities can regulate and improve water highways as well as land ones, though the soil of neither belongs to the state: Lorman v. Benson, 8 M. 18. However, Const., art. 14, § 9, precludes the state from itself engaging in the work of improving its navigable waters: Ryerson v. Utley, 16 M. 269; Benjamin v. Manistee River Imp. Co., 49 M. 628; Watts v. Tittabawassee Boom Co., 52 M. 203; Manistee, etc. Co. v. Sands, 53 M. 598; Anderson v. Hill, 54 M. 478; Wilcox v. Paddock, 65 M. 23.

22. But the state may authorize the improvement of such waters by corporations: La Plaisance Bay Harbor Co. v. Monroe, W. 155; Benjamin v. Manistee, etc. Co., 42 M. 628; Nelson v. Sheboygan Nav. Co., 44 M. 7; Watts v. Tittabawassee Boom Co., 52 M. 203; Manistee, etc. Co. v. Sands, 53 M. 598, 128 U. S. 288.

23. And it may grant swamp lands to aid in improving the channel of a stream: Sparrow v. State Land Office Commissioner, 56 M. 567.

24. Unless compensation is made riparian rights cannot be taken for the purpose of making a stream that is only periodically navigable a public highway at all times: Thunder Bay River Booming Co. v. Speechly, 81 M. 886.

25. H. S. ch. 111 contemplates the improvement of navigable rivers, not the creation of navigable rivers from streams not naturally navigable: Clay v. Pennoyer Creek Imp. Co., 34 M. 204.

26. And as said statute does not contemplate the incorporation of companies to improve any but navigable streams, a company organized thereunder cannot subject the lands of other persons on a non-navigable stream to any easement or right of flowage: East Branch Sturgeon River Imp. Co. v. White, etc. Lumber Co., 69 M. 207.

27. That the act of 1869, prior to its amendment (see H. S. § 3849), was fatally defective in its provisions (adopted by reference to the plank-road act) relating to the inquiry before commissioners and the duties of such commissioners in condemnation proceedings, see Clark v. Pennoyer Creek Imp. Co., 34 M. 204.

28. In condemnation proceedings where a river is to be improved the petition is jurisdictional and must set forth all the facts necessary to show that the petitioning corporation is authorized to make the proposed improvement and has taken all the necessary preliminary steps: Ibid.

29. Where such a petition avers that the stream is navigable and that the improvements include dams, it must not only allege that the assent of the governor and attorney-general and the approval of the canal board have been procured, but also that authority has been obtained from the board of supervisors to dam the stream (Const., art. 18, § 4): Ibid.

30. An application, under act 94 of 1885, for the appointment of a special commissioner to superintend the improvement of Maple river, was held void because it failed to show — in compliance with the provisions of the act — of what townships the petitioners were residents, and because it was executed before the statute was passed: Wilcox v. Paddock, 65 M. 28.

31. Incorporation under H. S. § 3845 of a company to improve a navigable stream, and approval by the canal board of such company's application, cannot legalize previous unauthorized improvement and possession of the stream: East Branch Sturgeon River Imp. Co. v. White, etc. Lumber Co., 69 M. 207 (April 6, '88).

32. In proceedings by quo warranto against a corporation authorized by law to deepen the channel of a river, it pleaded that it had removed obstructions by cutting channels through jams, and by confining the water at various points. Held, on demurrer, that it could not be said as matter of law that this was not an exercise of the power given to deepen the channel: Benjamin v. Manistee River Imp. Co., 42 M. 628.

Statute for incorporation of slack-water navigation companies in certain counties held valid, see CONSTITUTIONS, § 497.

33. Corporations organized to improve navigable streams may be empowered to charge tolls at rates fixed by the legislature or by a board of control: Benjamin v. Manistee River Imp. Co., 42 M. 628; Nelson v. Cheboygan Nav. Co., 44 M. 7; Manistee River Imp. Co. v. Sands, 53 M. 593 (affirmed, 123 U. S. 288). But, it seems, such corporations cannot be empowered to charge toll at their own discretion: 44 M. 7.

34. The statute (H. S. ch. 111) empowering the board of control of the St. Mary's Falls ship canal to fix the rates of toll to be charged by the river improvement companies sustained; fixing such rates is not a judicial act, and the statute is not objectionable for not requiring a hearing and notice to parties interested; and the annual affidavit required to be filed by each company (H. S. § 3859) does not preclude the board from using its own methods of getting information: Benjamin v. Manistee River Imp. Co., 42 M. 628.

35. The action of said board of control in fixing tolls is not reviewable in the courts: Ibid.; Manistee River Imp. Co. v. Lamport, 49 M. 442. Hence, in an action to recover such tolls as fixed, the courts cannot assume jurisdiction to decide that the tolls are excessive or that the board was imposed upon — as by false testimony — in fixing them: 49 M. 442.

Who bound to discharge lien for tolls, see infra, § 196.

(b) Canals; canal companies.

36. A canal through a marsh in which a stream is lost, cut by private individuals through the land of one of them, for the purpose of affording floatage for timber and lumber through the same in connection with the stream — there being no evidence that the waters of the stream ever ran along its line, or that it was the improvement of an existing water channel — is a private way, and the public are not entitled to use it unless it be dedicated to their use: Ward v. Warner, 8 M. 508.

37. The Sault Ste Marie canal is an independent water-way, like a turnpike, which can only be used upon such conditions as the state, under the congressional grant, may lawfully impose: Ryan v. Brown, 18 M. 196.

38. The canal board has such a control over the Sault Ste Marie canal and its approaches that it is authorized to remove unlawful obstructions to the legitimate use of the canal; but the board's finding is not conclusive as to illegality, and its interference with private rights may be enjoined: Ibid.

39. The right of the Lake Superior Ship Canal, etc., Company, under the legislation of congress and of state legislature to the possession of the Portage ship canal, and to collect tolls, sustained as against the claim of the state as trustee of the United States: Attorney-General v. Lake Superior Ship Canal, etc. Co., 32 M. 233.

39a. A trust for the United States in the possession of the state was not created by the provision in the act of congress requiring the canal to be a public highway free of toll for United States vessels, or by the provision limiting the tolls that should be imposed after reimbursement: Ibid.

40. The action of the state fixed a contract right in said company with the right of possession, and it is not competent for the state to violate its contract and to assume to manage the canal—a work of internal improvement—for itself; but the act of 1878 (H. S. §§ 5503-5516), constituting a board of control, etc., does not undertake to do this: Ibid.

41. The duty imposed upon the governor of this state by the act of congress making a land grant for the construction of the Portage Lake & Lake Superior ship canal and harbor, and by the state legislation on the subject, to issue his certificate of the fact when he shall be satisfied that the work has been done in conformity with the law, is not one of a purely ministerial character, leaving him no discretion; and mandamus will not lie to compel such issue: Sutherland v. Governor, 29 M. 320.

As to grants in aid of canals, see PUBLIC LANDS, §§ 149-151.

Exemption of canal-grant lands from taxation, see TAXES, §§ 146, 147.

As to enforcement of decree in favor of canal and harbor company after franchises have expired, see CORPORATIONS, §§ 269-272.

III. FERRIES.

42. The authority to establish and regulate ferries is not included in the federal power to regulate commerce; a license under the act of congress of a vessel for the coasting and foreign trade does not confer upon it the franchise of a ferry; and the Detroit ordinance prohibiting, under a penalty, the keeping of an unlicensed ferry between the city and the Canadian shore, and charging a license fee, is valid: Chilvers v. People, 11 M. 43.

43. Such a license involves the transfer of a valuable franchise, which is a right of property and may be sold where nothing in the charter prevents: Kitson v. Ann Arbor, 26 M. 331. The franchise of keeping a rope ferry is property, valuable and transferable, and forfeiture of such a franchise can only be determined in a direct proceeding, not collaterally: Billings v. Breinig, 45 M. 65.

IV. BRIDGES AND DAMS.

44. Const., art. 18, § 4, prohibiting the bridging or damming of navigable streams unless authorized by the board of supervisors, does not apply to waters that form part of the state boundary: Ryan v. Brown, 18 M. 196. Or to streams that have no naturally valuable capacity for floatage purposes: Shepard v. Gates, 50 M. 495.

45. The authority conferred upon boards of supervisors to regulate the bridging of navigable streams is a trust that must be executed by themselves; they cannot delegate it to others, especially to parties concerned in any details requiring the exercise of their judgment, such as the location or character of the bridge: Maxwell v. Bay City Bridge Co., 41 M. 453.

46. Boards of supervisors have no jurisdiction to act upon petitions for leave to bridge navigable streams, unless the petitions comply with H. S. §§ 493-495. Such a petition must specify the proposed location of the bridge with reasonable precision; this may depend largely on the extent of the commercial interests that may be involved in the location, and the convenience of the public; greater particularity would be needed if the bridge is to be built where there is a town than where there is not. The petition must also describe the bridge with particularity; as by indicating the location of the draws: Ibid.

47. Where the legislature legalizes rates of toll fixed by a board of supervisors for the use of a bridge previously erected without authority of law, the action of the two bodies precludes the public from questioning the legality of the bridge; but such action does not cut off an existing claim for damages arising from the establishment of such bridge: Maxwell v. Bay City Bridge Co., 46 M. 278.

48. If even a lawful bridge or pier is constructed so near to a riparian owner's dock as to preclude its profitable use or to inconvenience its use, he is entitled to compensation: Ibid.

As to estoppel against grantee of petitioner for bridge from claiming damages, see ESTOPPEL, § 256.

As to pleading in action for appropriating land for pier of bridge, see PLEADINGS, § 536.

49. The assent of the supervisors of the county being essential to the right to construct or maintain a toll-bridge over a navigable stream, and such board being also the competent authority to fix the rate of tolls, a corporation organized to build a toll-bridge over such a stream which has obtained assent by resolution of the board of supervisors "to erect, rebuild, repair and keep up and use, for its sole use and profit, a toll-bridge," etc., "for the term of twenty years," the tolls being fixed by the board at the same time, has no authority after the expiration of the twenty years to enforce the payment of tolls, notwithstanding the corporation was organized for the period of thirty years, for the purpose of building this bridge, in pursuance of a statute authorizing it: Grand Rapids Bridge Co. v. Prange, 35 M. 400.

50. As the franchise of taking tolls is distinct from the corporate franchise of the company that takes them, and is not conferred by a direct grant from the state, but from the board of supervisors, the estate of the corporation in it ceases with the expiration of the period to which it was expressly limited by the grant, and the state's omission to institute proceedings to dissolve the corporation can have no force to continue this franchise or restore it to life: Ibid.

51. The forfeiture of a corporate franchise cannot be collaterally taken advantage of in a private action; but one who is sued for bridge tolls by a corporation may defend on the ground that the period of assent by the supervisors to the exercise by the corporation of the franchise of taking tolls has expired; for this is not a question of corporate existence. The franchise to be a corporation may continue to exist, though any particular franchise annexed to it may have been surrendered or forfeited: Ibid.

As to bridges over mill-races, see HIGHWAYS, §§ 86-89; CITIES, ETC., § 17.

Further as to BRIDGES, see that heading in the Index.

52. As Const., art. 18, § 4, forbids the damming of navigable streams except by authority of the board of supervisors, a petition under act 196 of 1873 (revising and amending C. L. 1871, ch. 221) to condemn lands for the erection of a dam for mill purposes must show whether the stream is navigable or not, and, if navigable, that the requisite permission has been obtained: Fox v. Holcomb, 34 M. 298.

53. The petition in such case is jurisdictional, and must allege every fact necessary to entitle the petitioners to make the alleged improvement: Ibid.

54. It must show affirmatively that the proposed dam will not injure any mill or mill-site above or below on the same stream: Ibid.

That the necessity for the taking must be passed upon, see CONSTITUTIONS, § 253.

That said statute of 1873 is invalid, see CONSTITUTIONS, § 254.

That authority from supervisors must be shown in petition to condemn land for improving navigable stream by damming, see supra, § 29.

55. The rights of the public in the use of internal water-ways for the floatage of logs are subject to the determination of the supervisors, who may, in the manner fixed by law, permit dams to be built according to such plans as they approve, and the public use is limited by these conditions and cannot be described as a right to the use of the water in its natural flow: Wood v. Rice, 24 M. 423.

56. A petition to the board of supervisors, under H. S. § 494, for leave to dam a stream and construct in connection therewith a shute or apron for the passage of rafts, but containing no description whatever of said shute or apron, is fatally defective and would not give the board jurisdiction to act. The petition must set forth in detail the whole plan of the proposed dam, and the capacity and character of any shute or passage to be constructed therein: Powers v. Irish, 28 M. 429.

57. The record of the proceedings of a board of supervisors upon a defective petition for leave to dam a stream would not be admissible to show that the dam was lawfully built in an action for damages for injuries caused by unlawfully obstructing the stream by a dam erected under such proceedings: Ibid.

58. Action taken by a board of supervisors permitting the erection of a dam across a navigable stream is no notice of the petitioners' intention to avail themselves of it for the purpose of flooding another's land: Stone v. Roscommon Lumber Co., 59 M. 24.

59. No one can lawfully complain of such an obstruction or interference with a water-course as has been permitted in conformity to law by the consent of the proper authorities: Wood v. Rice, 24 M. 423.

60. A declaration averring damages from such an obstruction of a navigable stream by means of a dam as hinders the natural flow of the stream and prevents the running of lumber from plaintiff's mill will not support a claim for damages arising from building a dam lawfully authorized in such a manner as to exceed the authority and make the obstruction greater than it should have been. The injury complained of should have been averred as arising from the dam's excess or insufficiency: Ibid.

Damages to individual from obstruction of public stream by unauthorized dam, see DAMAGES, §§ 45, 61.

Malicious injury to dam, see CRIMES, § 855.

As to flooding by unauthorized dams, and abatement of such dams, see infra, VII.

Prosecutions for nuisance in maintaining dam, see CRIMES, §§ 646-649, 651, 656.

V. HARBORS, WHARVES AND DOCKS.

61. The Grand river at a point three miles up from its mouth is not a harbor in the common-law sense or within the meaning of the statutes regulating fisheries; and the common council of Spring Lake has no power to establish harbor lines in said river: People v. Kirsch, 67 M. 539.

As to harbor regulations and powers of harbor-master of Detroit, see SHIPPING, §§ 3-5.

62. A city has a right to build a wharf for public purposes where any street that has been duly dedicated to the public abuts upon a public stream, without regard to the question whether the bank-owner has the title to the land under the water to the middle of the stream: Backus v. Detroit, 49 M. 110.

63. Ownership of a water lot abutting on a street gives one no rights in or control of the wharf at the extremity of such street: Scott v. Layng, 59 M. 43.

64. Public wharves are not subject to indiscriminate public use like highways: Horn v. People, 26 M. 221.

65. The wharves of Detroit, whether terminating highways or not, are not highways but private property, and where they are owned by the city may be leased, like other corporate property, to private lessees. The title is proprietary and not a public easement: Ibid.

66. And as the city may lease a wharf at the end of one of its streets, it can, it seems, lease a strip at the foot of the wharf for the purpose of a floating boat-house: Scott v. Layng, 59 M. 43.

67. Protection to private wharves from encroachments is to be sought from the general laws of the land; city ordinances cannot be passed for the purpose: Horn v. People, 26 M. 221.

68. The right of the public for purposes of navigation must be considered as appurtenant to the ordinary means of navigation rather than to small and insignificant boats, and it is no nuisance to erect wharves and similar improvements unless under exceptional circumstances, such as narrows, bends, etc.: Ryan v. Brown, 18 M. 196.

69. The construction of wharves may, it seems, be limited by the state to the line of navigability; but this is rarely done except under peculiar circumstances: Attorney-General v. Evert Booming Co., 34 M. 462.

70. The right of docking must not seriously impair the right of navigation: Bay City Gas Light Co. v. Industrial Works, 28 M. 182.

VI. RIPARIAN RIGHTS.

(a) In general.

As to wrongful flooding, see infra, VII.

As to relative rights of riparians and of log-drivers, etc., and as to injuries to former from operations of latter, see infra, VIII, (c).

71. A current is not essential to the existence of riparian rights. They may exist in lakes or ponds where there is no current, and they may exist where the waters are not capable of navigation: Turner v. Holland, 65 M. 453.

72. The ordinance of 1787 and the act admitting Michigan into the Union leave riparian rights in navigable waters to be settled according to the principles of the state law: Webber v. Pere Marquette Boom Co., 62 M. 626.

73. The principles governing the rights of riparian proprietors do not apply to a grant where no part of the land described is bounded by a lake or other water: Palmer v. Dodd, 64 M. 474.

74. Agreements between joint riparian owners, after making conveyance, cannot affect the grantee's rights, nor can deeds made in pursuance of such agreements: Fletcher v. Thunder Bay River Boom Co., 51 M. 277.

(b) Ownership on waters; boundaries.

75. In Michigan the title of the riparian owner is not limited to the bank but extends to the middle line of the stream or inland lake; the soil under navigable water is not regarded as belonging to the federal government or to the state: Lorman v. Benson, 8 M. 18 (overruling, on this point, La Plaisance Bay Harbor Co. v. Monroe, W. 155); Rice v. Ruddiman, 10 M. 125; Ryan v. Brown, 18 M. 196; Bay City Gas Light Co. v. Industrial Works, 28 M. 182; Maxwell v. Bay City Bridge Co., 41 M. 453; Webber v. Pere Marquette Boom Co., 62 M. 626; Clute v. Fisher, 65 M. 48; Bigelow v. Shaw, 65 M. 341. See Backus v. Detroit, 49 M. 110.

76. So held in regard to the Detroit river: Lorman v. Benson, 8 M. 18.

77. The ownership of lands bordering upon a stream extends over the bed to the middle of such stream when it is a river. Any erection which can lawfully be made in the water within those lines belongs to the riparian estate: Ryan v. Brown, 18 M. 196.

78. The state has no proprietorship in the soil under a small stream that is navigable only in a modified sense for floating logs and lumber; and, presumably, the riparian owner owns to the center of the stream, subject to the public easement of passage: Attorney-General v. Evart Booming Co., 34 M. 462.

79. The proprietor of lands bordering on a meandered stream owns to the center of the stream, and in platting his lands may plat up to the channel bank: Twogood v. Hoyt, 42 M. 609.

80. Private ownership of lands bounded on navigable fresh waters is not restricted to the meander line; and even if the owner of the bank did not also own land made within the meander line it would not belong to the United States, but to the state, which always concedes the right of the owner to the shore: Pere Marquette Boom Co. v. Adams, 44 M. 408.

81. Riparian rights upon the great lakes are, in theory, the same as upon navigable streams, and are not governed by any such proprietary division as high and low-water mark. The submerged lands are appurtenant to the upland so far as their limits can be reasonably identified; but in public waters the state law must determine how far rights in such lands can be exercised consistently with the easement of navigation: Lincoln v. Davis, 53 M. 375.

82. The owner of a fractional section or fractional subdivision of a section meandered by the United States survey along the margin of an inland lake, navigable or otherwise, owns so much of the bed of the lake as lies within the lines of his fractional subdivision extended into the lake to the limit of the entire subdivision: Clute v. Fisher, 65 M. 48.

83. In case of a lake so large that the lines of the sections or subdivisions of sections held by the proprietors of the lands adjoining or surrounding the lake, if extended, do not embrace the whole of the lake, then the rule of riparian ownership may be extended to the center of the lake, so far as the submerged lands can reasonably be identified with reference to the upland: Ibid.

84. The ownership of land bordering on Lake Muskegon carries with it the ownership of the land under the shallow water so far out as it is susceptible of beneficial private use, but subordinate to the paramount public right of navigation and the other public rights incident thereto: Rice v. Ruddiman, 10 M. 125.

85. If the water continues so shallow as to render the lands under it susceptible of beneficial private use to the center line of the lake the riparian ownership extends to such center line, unless there are intervening islands which the government has shown an intention to reserve from the grant of the mainland by surveying them as separate tracts, in which case the riparian ownership would extend only to the center line between the island and the mainland: Ibid.

86. Islands are susceptible of separate ownership, and where so separated the filum aquæ is to be drawn between them and the mainland: Lorman v. Benson, 8 M. 18.

87. The rights of riparian owners to half of the bed of the stream is not limited by a mere sand-bar or shallow place exposed only when the wind is favorable or the water low. Whether they are not affected by an actual island in the stream, quere: Watson v. Peters, 26 M. 508.

88. A lot bordering upon an inland lake was conveyed by the United States by patent. Afterwards a submerged fen within the limits of the patentee's riparian ownership was surveyed as an island under instructions from the federal land office, and was conveyed by patent to another. Held, that the later patent gave no title: Webber v. Pere Marquette Boom Co., 62 M. 626.

89. A grant of land bounded on a stream carries with it the bed of the stream to the center, unless a contrary intention clearly appears from the conveyance itself: Norris v. Hill, 1 M. 202.

90. Unless the contrary clearly appears a grant of land bounded by a water-course conveys riparian rights: Richardson v. Prentiss, 48 M. 88. So, on a lake or bay: Ibid.

91. The grant of a city lot bounded on a navigable stream with the water as a boundary conveys, in the absence of any express reservation, the land under the water to the middle of the stream; and the fact that the grantor, before conveying, platted the lands into lots and blocks, with distinct lines and distances marking the boundaries of each lot, and with the water boundary of the river lots indicated by a line representing the shore, and then conveyed according to the plat, will not limit the grant to the shore line, or operate to reserve to him proprietary rights in front of the lots conveyed: Watson v. Peters, 26 M. 508.

92. Riparian rights, unless expressly limited, extend to the middle of the navigable channel, and cover any shallows or middle ground not shown in the government surveys, but lying between such channel and the shore; and it makes no difference that the deed conveying the premises to which the rights attach describes them according to a city plat instead of the government survey: Fletcher v. Thunder Bay River Boom Co., 51 M. 277.

93. Where, in platting land, the proprietor bounds his lots upon a bayou, and conveys by number the lots so bounded, without indicating an intention of reserving the bayou as private property or restricting purchasers of lots to the margin of the water, the grantees take the riparian rights incident to the ownership of the shore: Turner v. Holland, 65 M. 458.

94. And the fact that in the plat the length of the lines of the lots bordering on the bayou are given in feet and decimals of a foot does not indicate an intention to limit the lot to the length of the line specified. A dedication by plat is to be construed by the same rules that apply in construing conveyances from one individual to another; and the rule that courses and distances give way to natural boundaries applies: Ibid.

95. A deed describing the land by a boundary running to a stream and thence along its bank, and reserving the right of using the river in front for a specified time, conveys the land to the water's edge and covers the riparian rights to the middle of the stream: Cole v. Wells, 49 M. 450.

96. A bill in equity claimed riparian rights upon a bayou and title to the middle of its channel. These facts being admitted by general demurrer, it was held that complainant could maintain his bill for relief against his grantor if the latter asserted title to the bayou, and so obstructed it by filling it with saw-logs as a booming ground that the riparian grantee was excluded from it: Turner v. Holland, 54 M. 800.

97. Location of land conveyed determined where the waters of a lake covering part of such land had been gradually receding for a long time after the conveyance (see CONVEYANCES, § 297): Verplank v. Hall, 27 M. 79.

98. The boundary between adjoining riparian owners is to be determined by extending a line from the boundary at the shore at right angles to the general course of the stream at that point: Clark v. Campau, 19 M. 325.

99. The boundary lines of water lots fronting upon a river in such a manner that their side lines strike the shore at right angles with the middle thread of the stream, but at a different angle with the shore, extend into the river at right angles with the thread of the stream without reference to the shape of the shore; and in this respect there is no distinction between streams that are subject to easements of passage and those that are not: Bay City Gas Light Co. v. Industrial Works, 28 M. 182.

100. Where city authorities, acting under the charter, have fixed a docking line which is not parallel either with the thread of the stream or with the bank, such line has no bearing on the determination of boundaries: Ibid.

(c) Use of submerged land; ice; fishing and fowling.

101. Any use of lands under rivers that is compatible with the full enjoyment of the public easement belongs with the upland to which it originally appertained, unless sold or granted separately so as to sever it: Bay City Gas Light Co. v. Industrial Works, 28 M. 182.

102. But the state can forbid any erections in navigable waters; and on navigable streams and along the great lakes can fix the distance beyond which private erections cannot be maintained: Lincoln v. Davis, 53 M. 375.

103. And even in a stream not susceptible of public use, riparian owners can seldom occupy by erections any large portion of its bed except where it is dammed; each must so use it as not to destroy the benefit of the water to his neighbors: Bay City Gas-Light Co. v. Industrial Works, 28 M. 182.

104. In the case of natural water-courses, the extent to which private improvements are compatible with the public use must depend upon circumstances, and is a question of fact. The owner's use is prima facie lawful: Ryan v. Brown, 18 M. 196.

105. When erections in a navigable stream by the owner of the bed are not encroachments on the ordinary navigation of the stream, the public has no right to remove them for the purpose of opening or improving canal navigation around rapids immediately above: Ibid.

106. The private appropriation of a part of the bed of a small stream, not navigable except for floating logs, is neither a purpresture nor a public nuisance of any sort, unless the public use is thereby unreasonably abridged or inconvenienced: Attorney-General v. Ewart Booming Co., 34 M. 462.

107. The owner of the bank is entitled to every beneficial use of the soil under the river which can be exercised with a due regard to the public easement, and any trespass which interferes with such use — like an obstruction which prevents the taking of ice — gives him a right of action for the damages thereby occasioned: Lorman v. Benson, 8 M. 18; Ryan v. Brown, 18 M. 196.

108. So the owner of the soil under the water of a lake may maintain trespass against one who cuts and removes the ice formed over such soil without his consent: Clute v. Fisher, 65 M. 48.

109. The owner of land covered by water is ordinarily the sole owner of ice formed upon such water; and this ownership is not confined to ponds entirely upon his land, but the riparian ownership of the bed of a stream carries with it the right to the ice forming upon the surface of such stream as far as such riparian right extends: Bigelow v. Shaw, 65 M. 841.

110. The owner of land which another has the right to flow for mill purposes owns and may gather the ice formed on the water, though he must not appreciably impair the flow for such purposes; and the equity, if any, resulting from the mill-owner's care to preserve the purity and formation of ice does not change the rule: Ibid.

111. The right of navigation, though paramount, is not exclusive, and cannot be so exercised as to wantonly destroy private rights or property that can be enjoyed consistently with it; such as the rights to maintain ice fields or stake-nets, or to run logs, or establish boom limits and dock lines: People's Ice Co. v. The Excelsior, 44 M. 229.

112. A steamer was run back and forth unnecessarily near a boom enclosing a field of ice that was to be stored for market, and the ice field was thereby destroyed. Held, that an action for damages would lie therefor: Id., 43 M. 386, 44 M. 229.

As to the measure of damages, see DAMAGES, § 175.

That ice is personalty, see ICE, § 1.

113. The owner of the surrounding land has a right to the exclusive control of small lakes or ponds within it; and this includes the right of fishing: Marsh v. Colby, 39 M. 626.

114. But, in the absence of knowledge of objection, one may be presumed to have a license from the owner to take fish in such lakes or ponds: Ibid.

115. Fishing in the great lakes in water remote from the land is a business open to all, and may be carried on even with stakes if not impeding navigation or forbidden by law. A riparian owner cannot object: Lincoln v. Davis, 53 M. 375.

116. One who has received a patent from the state of marsh and overflowed lands which subsequently to their grant by congress to the state had become covered with navigable water has the exclusive right to use the same for fowling purposes, although the public has the right of navigation: Sterling v. Jackson, 69 M. 488 (April 20, '85).

(d) Use of water, detention and diversion.

Easement to take water for mill lost by mill's destruction, see EASEMENTS, § 36.

117. A riparian proprietor has the right to drain his lands through his lands into the adjoining stream; and, unless he has parted with it, he has a right to the use of the stream in its natural flow, and to prevent any such interference with the natural flow as materially injures any of his legal privileges: Treat v. Bates, 27 M. 390.

118. Riparian proprietors on the same stream have an equal right to the use of the water, and the right of each qualifies that of all the others; the question as between them is whether the use made of the water by one is reasonable and consistent with a correspondent use by the rest. A fair participation and a reasonable use by each is what the law seeks to protect, and an injury that is incidental to a reasonable enjoyment of the common right can demand no redress: Dumont v. Kellogg, 29 M. 420.

119. Every person owning land along a navigable stream is entitled to a fair and reasonable use of its waters; the right is common to all such proprietors; and if such reasonable use by one injures another, the latter has no right of action. But the unreasonable use, detention or diversion of the water is actionable: Woodin v. Wentworth, 57 M. 278.

120. A mill-owner is not entitled to protection against incidental injuries or inconveniences arising from the lawful use of the same stream by another mill-owner higher up: Hoxsie v. Hoxsie, 38 M. 77.

121. An injunction restraining an upper mill-owner from allowing the water to flow over his dam in quantities greater than is required to run his machinery, but requiring him to allow it to flow into another's mill-pond to the amount of the natural flow of the stream, is erroneous, because it discriminates in favor of the lower owner: Ibid.

122. As between riparian proprietors, priority of appropriation of the waters of a running stream which is common to all for the driving of machinery gives one no superior right unless it has been continued for such a period of time and under such circumstances as would be requisite to establish rights by prescription: Dumont v. Kellogg, 29 M. 420.

123. As between riparian proprietors whose machinery is driven by the same stream, the question of the wrongful detention of the flowing waters to the prejudice and injury of proprietors below is essentially different from that of the diversion of the stream from its natural course so as to turn it away from the lower proprietor, and from that of an interference by a stranger to diminish the water, for these acts are wholly wrongful: Ibid.

124. One is liable in damages for any such detention of the waters of a navigable stream for the purpose of flooding as prevents a lower owner from getting enough to run his mill if he would otherwise have had enough: Woodin v. Wentworth, 57 M. 278.

125. Where, to facilitate the running of logs in a small river, parties built dams in the river and in its tributaries, and diverted water from other sources, thus at times increasing the flow so as to render difficult the use of a mill on the river, also endangering its safety, and at other times diminishing the flow so that the mill could not be used at all, an injunction was granted against adding to or diminishing the natural flow of the river in such a way as to impair the use of the mill or to jeopard its safety: Koopman v. Blodgett, 70 M. 610.

126. The legal rights of a riparian proprietor owning a dam and mill-site are not less because the mill has stood idle: Buchanan v. Grand River, etc. Log R. Co., 48 M. 864.

127. Where complainants had orally promised to allow defendants to draw water for running a mill from a certain lake, the outlet of which flowed through complainants' lands, and had suffered them to go on and construct a mill and race at an expense of $3,000 before informing them that they did not intend to abide by the promise, an injunction which had been granted to restrain the taking of the water of the lake for the mill was dissolved: Payne v. Paddock, W. 487.

128. Where complainant had stood by, without objecting, and allowed defendant to go on and expend a considerable amount of money in the erection of a mill, in violation of the terms of a grant made by complainant, in consideration of the erection of the mill, of the right to use the water of a creek in a particular manner, it was held that by his silence he had waived all right to relief in equity, by injunction, against diverting the water: Jacox v. Clark, W. 249.

129. It is not unlawful to change the course of a stream within the limits of one's own land, if the stream is returned to its original channel before leaving the land and its flow is not materially diminished: Pettibone v. Smith, 87 M. 579. See Pettibone v. Maclem, 45 M. 881.

130. When land is conveyed with a reservation of the right to divert a stream so that it shall flow out of the premises, and the use of the water is afterwards granted to subsequent grantees of property on the borders of the stream, to be used in the due enjoyment of the property, but to be returned to the channel above the point of diversion, neither they nor their successors can collect and divert the water for any purposes aside from those connected with their riparian rights above that point, and they may be enjoined from doing so: Hall v. Ionia, 88 M. 498.

131. Where complainants were authorized by their charter to erect works, etc., and improve the harbor of La Plaisance bay, held, that the diversion of a river at a point some distance above its mouth, in the bed of which they had no title, which flowed into said bay, and caused a channel to be kept open through it, created no damage for which they were entitled to compensation: La Plaisance Bay Harbor Co. v. Monroe, W. 155.

132. The measure of damages for such an interruption of the natural flow of a stream as prevents one from running his mill is what the use of such mill was worth during the period of deprivation: Woodin v. Wentworth, 57 M. 278.

(e) Grants and leases of water-power and flowage rights.

Requisites of STATUTE OF FRAUDS, see that title, §§ 82, 83, 95.

133. A right to the perpetual use of water need not be dependent on a particular estate with which it is connected, but may be reserved from a conveyance of the land: Hall v. Ionia, 88 M. 498.

134. So, the right to use a water-power may be conveyed separately from the land to which it is naturally appurtenant. In a particular case where water privileges had been so conveyed, a subsequent mortgage and foreclosure deed were held to pass no title to them: Winchell v. Clark, 68 M. 64.

135. Presumptively the conveyance of a mill and the power therefor includes a dam and race that are the only source of supply, and the foreclosure purchaser of the former may have the prior owner enjoined from meddling with such dam and race: Curtis v. Norton, 58 M. 411.

136. A written agreement permitting the establishment of a dam, granting a right of flowage, and providing for a perpetual use and for the settlement of damages, was held to be an irrevocable grant, not a license: Fitch v. Constantine Hydraulic Co., 44 M. 74.

137. Owners in common of land upon which a mill had been situated (then burned down), the power to operate which was obtained by a dam below the premises upon a stream running through them, of which power they were also tenants in common, made partition of their rights, and the mill-site was conveyed to one exclusively. Held, that he thereby became entitled to the water-power exclusively, unless a contrary intention clearly appeared from the conveyances: Manderville v. Comstock, 9 M. 536.

138. A deed reserving "the right of way for a mill-race," but not fixing the line thereof, does not save the right to authorize more than one race or authorize any change in the site when once established: Galloway v. Wilder, 26 M. 97.

139. In granting water-power one may restrict the use thereof to specified purposes: Manderville v. Comstock, 9 M. 536.

140. Where a grant of water-power was of a certain number of square inches under a certain head and fall, to be used for "the purposes only of a cabinet shop and the business connected therewith, and also furnace operations," relief as against a change of use was refused in equity because of doubt as to a subsequent removal of the restriction: Ibid.

141. While it is competent for grantors to limit the right of flowage to particular purposes, a grant in fee-simple, as a general rule cannot be restricted except by plain conditions: Hathaway v. Mitchell, 34 M. 164.

142. A grant of the right to keep up a mill-dam at a specified height, not restricting the use, cannot be confined to the use then presently contemplated; and the fact that the water-power granted is to be immediately used for particular ends is not inconsistent with a change of uses where change is not forbidden: Ibid.

143. A grant of "a right of flowage to raise the water in the flume at the mill ten feet head" does not vest in the grantee any right in the land flowed, or in the water itself, but a mere right to raise the water to a certain head at the flume, and thereby overflow the land: Bigelow v. Shaw, 65 M. 341.

144. Where a conveyance of water-power estimating that there was sufficient water in the stream for sixteen runs of stone gave the right to take from a mill-race water sufficient for four runs, with the necessary machinery for a grist and flouring mill, "subject to the assessment of its just proportion of all expenses on the dam and mill-race that supplied it with water," held, that the just proportion which the grantee should bear of the cost of repairs would be the proportion which the water to which he was entitled bore to the whole quantity in the river, if all was used, or, if not, to the quantity utilized: Bradfield v. Dewell, 48 M. 9.

145. An agreement, properly evidenced, giving the owner of a mill-site the right, for a stipulated annual compensation, to flow the adjoining lands of another for an indefinite period, by the erection of a dam upon his own premises, creates a tenancy in such lands: Morrill v. Mackman, 24 M. 279.

146. Water was leased by the following words: "The right and privilege of drawing from the west side of the race now making by the said party of the first part, in Ypsilanti, and leading to his new saw-mill, at any place within sixteen rods of the head-gate of said race, as much water as will run through an aperture of two feet square, under a head of four feet from the top of said aperture, for the use of carrying machinery for iron works, provided so much shall be needed by the said party of the second part for such use." And the lease further provided as follows: That "in case the two feet square of water should not be enough for the use of such iron works as the said party of the second part may hereafter erect near said race, he shall have as much more as shall be necessary for such use, by paying therefor at the same rate as for the two feet square aforesaid;" and also that "in case a sufficient quantity of ore cannot conveniently be procured for carrying on said iron works to advantage, the said two feet square of water may be used for such other machinery as the said party of the second part shall think fit and proper." Held that, construing the words of demise by the other parts of the instrument, the lessee was entitled to as much water as would run from the race into a flume conducting it to the iron works, through an aperture two feet square, made in the side of the race, not lower down than four feet below the surface of the water in the race; and not to as much water as would flow through an aperture of the size and under the head mentioned into open space or directly upon the wheel where it was applied: Norris v. Showerman, W. 206, 2 D. 16.

147. A covenant in a lease of a dam to pay half "of all tolls and money that may be earned by the use of said dam for driving logs or other purposes" includes any earnings from log-driving that are fairly traceable to the benefits of the dam, and is not confined to tolls: Rayburn v. Mason Lumber Co., 57 M. 273.

148. Rights under a lease of power to an hydraulic company and the amount of rent to be paid determined in a peculiar case: Lamb v. Constantine Hydraulic Co., 59 M. 597.

Damages where lessor fails to repair flume, see DAMAGES, § 182.

VII. WRONGFUL FLOODING.

(a) In general; actions.

As to flooding from log-driving, etc., see infra, VIII, (c).

Flooding from surface waters, see infra, IX.

149. A lower riparian has no right, either by maintaining a dam or by collecting logs in the river, to raise the water above its usual level so as to set it back upon the upper proprietors and impede the running of their mills: Richards v. Peter, 70 M. 286.

150. The fact that annual freshets on a river slightly impede the growth of hay on complainant's lands will not relieve a defendant from liability for erecting a dam in such a manner as to flood said lands, thereby destroying their value for the purposes to which they are best adapted and for which they were purchased: Stone v. Roscommon Lumber Co., 59 M. 24.

151. The prescriptive right to set back water upon another's land by means of a dam depends upon the height to which the water was actually set back during the prescriptive period, and not upon the height to which the water might have been set back if the dam had been tight: Turner v. Hart, 71 M. — (July 11, '88).

As to prescription, see, further, EASEMENTS, §§ 25-29.

152. A ditch dug by common consent as a neighborhood drain is to be governed by the rules that apply to other water-courses, and, in an action for damages caused by obstructing it, it is immaterial that it was not legally laid out by the commissioner, or that the parties did not originally agree as to the exact line of the ditch, if they acquiesced in what was done: Freeman v. Weeks, 45 M. 835, 48 M. 255.

153. If, however, a person affected by the construction of such ditch did not consent to its being opened, or, shortly after it was opened, claimed and exercised the right of laying a fence in or over the same, causing thereby an obstruction, there would be at most but a limited consent and acquiescence, and if no new act was afterward committed by him, but simply a passive continuance of such obstruction permitted, no action would lie, even though the natural sinking of the rails would cause a greater obstruction than at first existed: Freeman v. Weeks, 48 M. 255.

154. One who maintains a dam and stores logs in the pond formed by it is not liable though in times of freshets the water is thereby set back upon the upper proprietors more than it otherwise would: Richards v. Peter, 70 M. 286.

155. In an action for damages for setting back water by means of a dam, thus rendering useless plaintiff's mill, there can be no recovery if it appears that the injury was caused by plaintiff's neglect to use due precautions to prevent it, or by freshets or other causes not in defendant's control: Ibid.

156. D., who owned a shingle-mill, allowed refuse to fall therefrom into a stream and to float down to M.'s grist-mill on the same stream, where it obstructed the working of M.'s mill. M. felled trees across the stream on his own land to stop the refuse, thus setting back the water and interfering with D.'s mill. D. sued but was not allowed to recover, as his own unlawful conduct had contributed to the injury: Davis v. Monro, 66 M. 485.

157. In an action for damages to land caused by the setting back of water by means of a mill-dam, where the evidence discloses simply that defendant and his grantor of the mill-site for several years before him had flowed the land and paid a yearly compensation therefor, the doctrine of equitable estoppel does not apply in the absence of any showing that the original construction of the dam was in reliance upon any license, or that the course of defendant or his grantor was changed, or any expenditure made in reliance upon any conduct or promise of plaintiff: Morrill v. Mackman, 24 M. 279.

158. A. sued B. for overflowing his land by obstructing a ditch. B.'s wife and child were the persons who filled it up, but when A. cut trenches to let off the water, B. himself filled them up again, and asserted his purpose not to let the main ditch be cleared for less than $1,500. There was also some evidence that he knew where his wife was when she was at work. Held, that the jury was justified in finding him responsible for the mischief: Enright v. Hartsig, 46 M. 489.

159. Whether the grantee of land whereon there is a dam erected by the grantor which floods another's land can be sued before he is notified to remove the injury, quere; notice once given by the owner of the land flowed inures to the benefit of any one claiming title through or under the person giving the notice: Caldwell v. Gale, 11 M. 77.

160. Where, under a parol lease for more than a year of another's land for the purpose of flowing, the lessee has been put in possession, no action as for damages for unlawful flowing can be brought until the tenancy has been terminated by notice to quit: Morrill v. Mackman, 34 M. 279.

161. Where a declaration in a case for flowing land alleged that plaintiff was lawfully seized in fee and possessed of the land flowed, it was held that the whole averment was material and must be proved as laid: Lull v. Davis, 1 M. 77.

162. Suit for flowing land, the declaration alleging seizin and possession in plaintiff. On the trial the only evidence of title was possession for about one year previous to bringing the action. It further appeared in evidence that previous to and at the time plaintiff took possession a part of the tract was flowed by defendant. Held that, by reason of defendant's prior possession by flowing that part of the tract covered by water at the time plaintiff took possession, the latter could not sustain his action without showing title in himself to the land flowed, or that he entered and took possession of the tract by color of a paper title: Millerd v. Reeves, 1 M. 107.

163. One who seeks damages for the setting back, by means of a dam, of water, whereby his mill is rendered useless, cannot recover damages for a total abandonment of the mill unless it appears that the water was set back for so much of the time as to render it impossible to operate the mill with any degree of profit: Richards v. Peter, 70 M. 286.

164. In an action for damages for the wrongful flooding of plaintiff's lands he may show that a part of his orchard was overflowed and that the trees therein withered and died, while those in the other part were alive and thriving; such evidence tends to show that the trees were destroyed by the flooding complained of: Anderson v. Thunder Bay River Boom Co., 61 M. 499.

As to the damages from flowage, see DAMAGES, §§ 173, 174, 287.

Action for subsequent flooding barred with original trespass, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, § 63.

That none but the owner of the freehold can recover for the washing away of land, see PARTIES, § 67.

(b) Abatement of dams; compensation for unauthorized flowage.

As to abatement as nuisance, see, also, NUISANCE, II.

165. If one's land is injured by the flowage from an unlawfully erected dam he may abate the dam by pulling it down before the right to maintain it is acquired by adverse user; such a right was not acquired in the case of a dam built in 1868 and torn down in 1892: Winchell v. Clark, 68 M. 64.

166. A showing of a subsisting right of flowage for saw-mill or grist-mill purposes will prevent the abatement of a mill-dam erected to supply a paper-mill and causing only the like extent of flowage: Hathaway v. Mitchell, 84 M. 164.

167. An injunction to abate a dam which had existed about thirty years, and had been erected under permission to raise the water to a certain height, was denied where the proofs did not conclusively show that the height agreed upon had been exceeded. But as the case contained facts that might properly be submitted to a jury, the denial was without prejudice to any proceedings at law or in equity, if these facts should be found against defendant: Cobb v. Stimmer, 45 M. 176.

168. Any dam below which sets back the water of a stream to the injury of a riparian owner is a violation of his rights, and may be made the ground of equitable relief; and where the partial abatement of a dam would prevent the overflow of complainant's land, but its entire abatement was necessary to abate a public nuisance affecting his homestead, complete abatement was decreed: Treat v. Bates, 27 M. 890.

169. Upon a bill to enjoin defendant from flooding complainant's lands by means of his dam, where it appeared that in 1881 the dam had been raised and tightened and that since that time three hundred acres of said lands had been flooded and rendered useless, an abatement was decreed and defendant was enjoined from setting back the water to a greater extent than before 1881: Turner v. Hart, 71 M. — (July 11, '88).

170. The building of a dam in defiance of a preliminary injunction restraining its erection should not be allowed with impunity: Stone v. Roscommon Lumber Co., 59 M. 21.

171. One who never consented to the building or maintenance of a dam which caused his land to be overflowed, and who did not know of its erection or of the injury it was likely to cause until after it was built, but who, as soon as he had knowledge, prepared to abate and sought to have enjoined the erection of a new dam to take its place when it had worn out, is not barred as by acquiescence from asking relief: Ibid.

172. Where the proofs showed a wrongful flowage of complainant's land, but that no general unhealthiness was caused, and that to enjoin the flowage would practically abate defendant's dam and would injure defendant disproportionately to complainant's grievance, relief was confined to an allowance of damages: Fox v. Holcomb, 32 M. 494.

173. C., desiring to increase his water-power, proceeded to acquire rights from various land-owners, but made no agreement with B., whose lands were seriously damaged by the enlarged overflow, but who, during the rebuilding and raising of the dam, made no objection and allowed his minor sons to work for C. on the improvement. Held, that B.'s acquiescence would preclude him from relief by injunction for abatement; but, the damage being held to be a continuing one, B. was entitled to a gross sum as full compensation for past and future damage, injunction to issue in default of payment: Blake v. Cornwell, 65 M. 467.

174. Defendant having caused a mill-site to be condemned under a statute which they supposed to be valid built a new dam and mill at great expense. Complainant sued for damages for flooding his land, but after an agreement to arbitrate, which, for no apparent reason, he refused to carry out, he dismissed his action, and more than four years after the construction of the dam filed a bill for an injunction, showing no reason for the delay except the pendency of a suit by another party involving the same question. Held, that the case was one for pecuniary compensation — which was fixed at $1,500 for past and future flowage — instead of injunction or abatement; that the decree should not restrict defendants to any particular use of the water-power, if they paid what the decree required, but that the use of flash-boards on the top of the dam should not be allowed, as the testimony in the case related chiefly to the amount of damage caused by the dam without such boards: Miller v. Cornwell, 71 M. — (July 11, '88).

VIII. LOG-DRIVING AND BOOMING.

(a) Companies; use of stream.

175. The statute of 1855 (H. S. ch. 113) providing for the formation of companies for running, driving, booming and rafting logs, etc., is valid in so far as it provides for the formation of companies and the power to make contracts, etc.: Ames v. Port Huron, etc. Co., 6 M. 266; Beard v. Port Huron, etc. Co., 11 M. 155.

176. But in so far as it undertakes to authorize such companies to assume, without any necessity arising from the obstruction of their own business, the control and management of non-consenting parties, and to enforce compensation therefor, it is invalid: Ames v. Port Huron, etc. Co., 11 M. 139.

177. The affidavit of organization to be made by two directors of such a company (H. S. § 3897) must be made strictly according to the terms of said section; and it need not contain any detailed statement of the proceedings had in the formation of the company: Ames v. Port Huron, etc. Co., 6 M. 266.

178. The delivery by a person of a list of his log-marks (H. S. § 3903) to a company formed under H. S. ch. 113 does not operate as a contract for the receiving by the company of all logs so marked that he may have upon the stream within the limits of the company's operations. The object of the provision requiring such list was to entitle the person furnishing it to notice of sale in case, by any casualty, his logs should become so placed as to authorize the company to assume their management: Ibid.

179. In the absence of any contract such company is only authorized, by H. S. § 3901, to assume control of the logs of others, and acquire a lien for services in respect thereto, where, by reason of the logs having been put into the stream without adequate provision for running them without obstruction, some obstruction had actually been created: Ibid.

180. A company selling logs for charges, etc., cannot itself become the purchaser: Ames v. Port Huron, etc. Co., 11 M. 139.

181. In replevin for logs on which a boom company claims a lien for labor in running them down a particular stream, it is for the plaintiff to show that the company's articles of association did not authorize it to operate in that stream if it did in fact operate there: Hall v. Tittabawassee Boom Co., 51 M. 377.

182. No owner of logs can exclude another from the use of a navigable stream longer than is necessary, if he was first in occupation, to float his logs by the natural current: Butterfield v. Gilchrist, 53 M. 22.

183. Individuals driving their own logs have the same rights as log-driving companies in streams that are navigable for that purpose; but if an individual practically concedes the right of a company to regulate the time of letting his logs into the stream, he waives any objection to its customary action in that respect, and if he is not prepared when his logs enter the stream to take care of them, he cannot complain if they become intermingled with the logs of the company and subject to its control, which it must exercise, however, in its own interest and in that of the owners of logs in its keeping: Hall v. Tittabawassee Boom Co., 51 M. 377.

184. The right of navigation is not so far paramount as to make booming facilities a nuisance to be abated by force, wherever they encroach on navigable waters, and in any case the question of nuisance must depend on the particular facts. The necessity and convenience of the floatage of lumber in the Manistee river, in the region of which the manufacture of lumber is the prime industry, must be considered in any rules laid down for the public use of the stream: The City of Erie v. Canfield, 27 M. 479.

185. Some appropriation of the bed of the stream being essential to the reasonable operation of the booming companies, the state in authorizing by general law the formation of such companies must be deemed to have waived its right to complain of an appropriation that is not unreasonable: Attorney-General v. Ewart Booming Co., 34 M. 463.

186. The question of lawfulness in the action of a booming company in enclosing part of the stream for its own purposes is one depending on the particular facts, whether the general public desiring to avail themselves of the navigable rights are more inconvenienced than accommodated thereby; and inconvenience to another booming company occupying the same stream is not the test. Booming companies, as regards their reciprocal rights in the stream, are in a certain sense common carriers on the same route: Ibid.

187. A boom company is not authorized to obstruct a navigable stream needlessly or willfully, to the hindrance of persons driving their own logs, and for such an obstruction it is liable in an action: Watts v. Tittabawassee Boom Co., 52 M. 203. See 47 M. 540.

188. Usage cannot give log-drivers the right to block a navigable stream by putting a boom across it so that vessels cannot pass through: Gifford v. McArthur, 55 M. 535.

189. An action is maintainable against one who needlessly obstructs a navigable stream to the injury of one entitled to navigate his tug thereon. Keeping logs in the stream for an unnecessary length of time constitutes such an obstruction: Ibid.

190. Defendants sued for obstructing a stream that is also used by other log-drivers below are not liable for the detention caused by the latter unless they protected them: Ibid.

191. One who has helped to put logs into a stream is not thereby estopped from suing for damages from the obstruction caused by unnecessarily detaining them in the stream: Ibid.

192. One engaged in running logs sued a company whose business was to stop the logs by a boom until assorted for obstructing navigation. Held, that he could not maintain his action, as he was liable to be made a co-defendant for causing the obstruction: McGinnis v. Carrier, 39 M. 111.

(b) Contracts for driving, etc.; compensation.

As to liens for driving, etc., see LIENS, III.

193. A contract to clear a non-navigable stream and to run logs through it cannot be assumed to be void on the ground of public policy as contemplating trespasses on third persons' lands: Fuller v. Rice, 52 M. 435.

194. An express contract to pay a certain sum per M. for running certain logs and to furnish water for floating a part of them into the main stream is not divisible, and cannot be apportioned part to the running and part to supplying the water; and in an action on the contract the measure of recovery would be the full contract price as agreed, less any damages from breach of any part of the contract: Keystone Lumber, etc. Manuf. Co. v. Dole, 43 M. 370.

195. Failure to furnish the water is not excused by an accident whereby the dam was broken if the contract does not provide for accidents, or if it is a continuing contract and the dam can be repaired in time for substantial compliance: Ibid.

196. One who contracts to drive logs to a certain point at a fixed rate is bound to discharge any lien for tolls imposed by river-improvement companies: Johnson v. Cranage, 45 M. 14.

197. A common carrier's liability does not attach to a log-driving company for failure to deliver part of a quantity of logs received by it to be driven to a certain point: Mann v. White River Log, etc. Co., 46 M. 33.

198. The action of the superintendent of a boom company in taking an interest in a contract made with the company is no more than voidable, and may be ratified by the company if the latter is the only party affected by it: Richardson v. Welch, 47 M. 309.

199. In deciding what sums booming companies may properly charge for booming under H. S. ch. 114, it is proper to admit evidence of the fair market value of their booming-grounds as helping to afford a basis for a proper estimate, and the fact that they are generally of little value for any other purpose requires considerable latitude to be exercised in admitting evidence; the value is not conclusively fixed by their actual cost to the company: Pere Marquette Boom Co. v. Adams, 44 M. 408.

200. Whether a boom company must not tender delivery of logs before being entitled to demand boomage charges thereon, quere: Johnson v. Cranage, 45 M. 14.

201. H. S. § 2037 gives to one who breaks a log-jam a right of action in assumpsit against the log-owners for the expense incurred: Chapman v. Keystone, etc. Co., 20 M. 358.

202. But such claim is not the subject of set-off: Woods v. Ayres, 19 M. 345.

203. The statutory assumpsit for breaking a log-jam lies, if at all, against the owner of the logs and not against those whom he has hired to run them: Butterfield v. Gilchrist, 53 M. 22.

204. Under H. S. § 2035 (prior to its amendment by act 66 of 1887), giving a right of action for services in breaking jams of logs and driving the logs, when necessary for the person so doing to get his own logs down stream, no right of action arose when the stream was not naturally in a navigable condition, and artificial means, such as flooding, had to be used to create a floatage: Kroll v. Nester, 52 M. 70; Shaw v. Bradley, 59 M. 199.

205. The statutory compensation for breaking a jam and driving logs cannot be recovered unless the owner of the logs has neglected to take measures to keep them out of the way; nor does it cover labor expended in putting logs into the stream, or items not included in the declaration: Butterfield v. Gilchrist, 53 M. 22.

206. One who is sued for compensation for breaking a jam of his logs is entitled to show the circumstances of the situation complained of, and in so doing can show that plaintiff had no boom in which to receive the logs after breaking the jam. He can also show that he looked after the business and did not move the logs, because up to the time of the interference therewith he thought it useless to touch them, and afterwards they were in plaintiff's possession: Ibid.

207. In assumpsit for breaking a log-jam there can be no recovery if it appears that defendant had a sufficient force under his control to move out the logs in a reasonable time, but did not do it by reason of the interference of plaintiff's employees: Butterfield v. Gilchrist, 53 M. 155.

208. Plaintiff in assumpsit for breaking a log-jam cannot recover if the evidence shows that others first in possession had acquired the whole capacity of the stream so as to render it impracticable for defendant to move his logs: Ibid.

209. In assumpsit for breaking a log-jam one cannot recover for running logs in the main stream, or for work in rolling logs from a distance back from the stream, and can recover only for rolling in and removing such logs originally banked or placed there afterwards by defendant's contractors as constructed the stream: Ibid.

210. One who has ordered floods for an immediate purpose, and to continue until directed to be stopped, is not liable for floods sent without a new order after a stoppage of several weeks and after the original necessity has passed: Hall v. Woodin, 35 M. 68.

211. In an action by a boom company to recover for running and sorting logs which have been allowed to mingle with those in its charge, it is for the jury to decide whether any of the various items of the account properly enter into it, and whether the charges of the company are reasonable; whether it was proper for the company to interfere to take care of defendant's logs, or to detain them temporarily to prevent loss to other owners; and whether an artificial channel provided by the company was useful for clearing the river and securing the safe delivery of logs: Sturgeon River Boom Co. v. Nester, 55 M. 113.

212. The cost of running the logs of cut-siders which have become mingled with a drive cannot be charged against the owners of the logs constituting the original drive; the drivers must look to the owners of the intermingled logs to satisfy their claim therefor: Edson v. Gates, 44 M. 253.

213. Recovery may be had for extra services in running a drive of logs where the original contract only bound plaintiff to run them within a reasonable time and with reference to existing conditions, and the extra services were such as became necessary and were agreed upon in consequence of the failure of the stream in which they were run: Davis v. Ladue, 58 M. 226.

214. When parties in banking logs on the same grounds mix them indiscriminately, each, in the absence of a special agreement, or of some general usage, or other controlling circumstances, ought at the proper time to put on a force of men proportioned to his share of the logs to break the rollway and put the logs afloat, and if either fails in that duty he is liable to the other on an implied assumpsit for the reasonable value of the extra work done by the latter in consequence: Peters v. Gallagher, 37 M. 407.

215. In defence to such an action, however, he can show that from the manner in which the work was done it was of no benefit to him, or was a positive injury. And when the other has put his own logs afloat he is not bound to continue putting in the remainder, and if he does so without the owner's knowledge or authority he cannot recover for his services, and will not be liable for any damages resulting from his not putting them all in: Ibid.

216. A declaration under act 145 of 1881, which avers the performance of services and labor in breaking rollways, and running and driving defendants' logs, specifies an amount due therefor, and alleges that in consideration, etc., defendants undertook and promised to pay, etc., held sufficient to permit a recovery: Shaw v. Bradley, 59 M. 199.

217. In such a case defendant cannot introduce under the general issue, without notice, testimony that a third party had a large amount of logs afloat in the river above those plaintiff had contracted to drive for defendants, and that by reason of plaintiff's failure to put on a sufficient force to keep the river unobstructed this party was obliged to drive defendants' logs in order to drive his own, and claimed pay from defendants for such driving, under H. S. § 2085: Ibid.

218. A personal judgment was not authorized by act 185 of 1878, providing for a lien for labor or services upon logs and timber: Clark v. Adams, 88 M. 159.

219. But under H. S. §§ 8412-8427 (act 145 of 1881), a judgment in personam is authorized where it is found that no lien in fact existed: Shaw v. Bradley, 59 M. 199.

(c) Concurrence of floatage and riparian rights; injuries to latter.

220. The public right of floatage and the private rights of riparian proprietors must be exercised with due consideration for each other: Thunder Bay River Boom. Co. v. Speechly, 31 M. 336.

221. The rights of the public to run logs in a navigable stream are not subordinate to the rights of riparian owners, but are concurrent, and each must be exercised without unnecessarily interfering with the other and without negligence: White River Log & B. Co. v. Nelson, 45 M. 578.

222. On a stream which is valuable for floatage, but not for navigation in the more enlarged sense, it cannot be said that the right of floatage is paramount to the use of the water for machinery. The enjoyment of each right must have due regard to the existence and protection of the other: Middleton v. Flat River Booming Co., 27 M. 533.

223. The right to use the water of a stream for milling purposes and the right to use a stream for the floatage of logs modify each other; and though the exercise of each right may render the other less valuable there is no ground for complaint if it is considerate and reasonable: Buchanan v. Grand River Log Co., 48 M. 364.

224. A river, so far as it is navigable for vessels or capable of floating logs, is only a public highway by water, and the right of navigation or floatage is only a right of passage, including only such rights as are incident to the use of the stream for that purpose and necessary to render such use reasonably available: Grand Rapids Booming Co. v. Jarvis, 30 M. 308.

225. A booming or log-running company has no right to flood the land of a riparian proprietor without his consent: Middleton v. Flat River Booming Co., 27 M. 533; Grand Rapids Booming Co. v. Jarvis, 30 M. 308; Stone v. Roscommon Lumber Co., 59 M. 24.

226. Persons exercising the public right of navigating a stream by running logs down it, or by collecting, dividing and storing them, must do it with due regard to the concurrent rights of riparian owners to the use of their lands, and are liable in damages to the latter if they raise the water for their own convenience so as to overflow such lands: Grand Rapids Booming Co. v. Jarvis, 30 M. 308.

227. The right to flow the lands of riparian proprietors without the latter's consent cannot be inferred from H. S. § 8917, authorizing the formation of corporations for running, booming and rafting logs; nor does this statute exempt such corporations from liability for damage caused by such overflowing as shall necessarily result from the successful exercise of the franchises granted thereby: Ibid.

228. A booming corporation organized under H. S. 8917 is as much responsible for damages resulting from a rise in the water caused solely where logs owned by others, or even masses of floodwood, are detained by obstructions which the company has interposed to the natural flow of the current, as they would be if the logs, etc., were their own, in so far as the rise exceeds that which would have occurred if the logs or driftwood had been allowed to pass unobstructed down the stream: Ibid.

229. A booming company built a dam to collect the water of a stream periodically navigable, and, by sending it down in floods in the dry season, enable the company to float the logs, which could not otherwise be floated at that season. A proprietor below was therefore prevented from operating his mill for a considerable portion of the year. Held, that he was entitled to maintain an action therefor: Thunder Bay Co. v. Speechly, 81 M. 836.

230. Any injury which riparian proprietors receive in consequence of a proper use of the stream for floatage they must submit to as incident to their situation upon navigable waters: Ibid.

231. A booming company is not liable for damages caused to riparian owners by a proper and reasonable use of the right of floating logs; but it is liable if by wilful or negligent management it creates or enlarges jams in the stream and thereby overflows its bank to their injury: White River Log, etc. Co. v. Nelson, 45 M. 578.

232. A booming company has a right to navigate a river by running logs down the same as a natural highway for that purpose, and if in so doing the water in the stream is not raised higher than it would have been by reason of the logs moving down upon its natural current and surface, any injury to riparian owners is an incident to the use of the stream in its natural condition for the purposes of such floatage: Anderson v. Thunder Bay River Boom Co., 61 M. 489.

233. A boom company has no right, by using a dam or by neglecting to pick a channel, to increase the damage to adjacent land above what would be incident to the ordinary and natural course of navigation: Ibid.

234. The public easement in small streams for floatage purposes does not justify crowding them beyond their fair capacity; it is not competent to subject such streams to burdens from distant sources at the expense of other than logging interests: Koopman v. Blodgett, 70 M. 610.

235. The fact that a stream during unusual and brief freshets or at periodical times overflows its banks and floods the lands of a riparian proprietor does not justify a log-runner in so increasing, by artificial means, the volume of the stream as to cause such overflow: Witheral v. Muskegon Booming Co., 68 M. 48 (Jan. 5, '88).

236. A log-runner has a right to use a stream in its natural capacity to float lumber or timber, and is not responsible for any damage arising therefrom incidentally and without his fault; but he has no right to deal with his logs in such a way, by the formation of jams or otherwise, as to cause the water to overflow the adjoining lands more than it would were the logs left to themselves and allowed to float down naturally and without interference: Ibid.

237. If a log-running company on a navigable stream uses a sufficient number of men to prevent the unnecessary formation of jams, and to break the jams already formed within a reasonable time after it took charge of them or had the right to take charge of them, and does not run logs unnecessarily against such jams, it cannot be held liable for flooding adjoining land: Ibid.

238. Those who put, or cause to be put, logs into a navigable stream are liable to riparian proprietors for injury to their lands and crops caused by log-jams raising the water to such an extent as to overflow said lands: Bauman v. Pere Marquette Boom Co., 66 M. 544.

239. A boom company engaged in running and driving logs placed by others in the stream is not liable for damages to plaintiff's land and crops from floods caused by jams of logs, unless, by the exercise of due care, the formation of such jams could have been prevented or the jams broken: Ibid.

240. But, it being the duty of the company to exercise due diligence in running logs and in breaking jams formed by natural causes, it is liable for such damages as may arise from unnecessary or unreasonable delay in removing such jams: Ibid.

241. A boom company engaged in running logs is liable for damages if it, knowing of the existence of a jam at a sand-bar, and its inability to move it, cuts a channel in the ice above, or otherwise assists in bringing down more logs and adding to the jam, thus raising the water so as to flood plaintiff's land: Ibid.

242. In an action against a booming company for injury to plaintiff's land resulting from jams of logs and consequent overflows, a charge is erroneous which assumes that the company is an insurer against such injuries, and which makes no account of evidence tending to show that some of the overflows were caused by extraordinary rainfalls: White River Log, etc. Co. v. Nelson, 45 M. 578.

243. Where a boom company which has built a series of dams in a river lets to contractors the work of driving and delivering to itself at the mouth of the river a large quantity of its logs, it is liable for the damages caused to a third person by floods which the conditions of the contract rendered necessary in the contractors' operations: McDonald v. Rifle Boom Co., 71 M. — (June 22, '88).

244. In an action for flooding plaintiff's land by the use of a dam in driving logs it appeared that during the years covered by the declaration third parties had made like use of other dams owned by them on the same stream and its tributaries, and the evidence failed to distinguish the floods, though defendant's testimony tended to show the number and seasons of the floods raised by him. Held, that defendant was not liable for damages caused by others' floods, but that the testimony as to the number and seasons of his floods afforded some data from which the jury could estimate the damage caused by them: Bauman v. Pere Marquette Boom Co., 66 M. 544.

245. In an action against a boom company for a negligent injury to plaintiff's land it is for the defendant to show the actual condition of the logs and of the water, and to state what was done to remove the logs and prevent the overflow; and then it is for the jury to determine whether or not there were unnecessary jams causing the flowage and damage: Anderson v. Thunder Bay River Boom Co., 61 M. 489.

246. The right to raft logs down a stream does not involve the right of booming them upon private property for safe-keeping and storage: Lorman v. Benson, 8 M. 18.

247. Act 142 of 1885, amending H. S. § 2058, in regard to damages caused riparian proprietors by running logs on their lands, provides for certain arbitration proceedings, but the provision therein for a lien on the logs for such damages is also found in § 2058. Held that, in a proceeding merely involving the claim of a lien for damages, the question of the constitutionality of the arbitration provision of the act of 1885 is immaterial: Gratwick, etc. Lumber Co. v. Lewis, 66 M. 588.

IX. SURFACE WATER.

248. Adjoining owners of land must respect the valuable rights that accrue to each other from the relative situation of their lands in respect to the flow of surface water: Boyd v. Conklin, 54 M. 588.

249. In a particular case it was held that there was no warrant for complainant's claim of a natural passage-way or easement for the flowage of surface water from his lands into and through an alley as through a drain: Morgan v. Meuth, 60 M. 288.

250. An easement whereby water collecting upon land must be allowed to find an outlet, even though it overflows adjacent land, may be acquired by prescription; and evidence is admissible as to the length of time it has so overflowed without objection from the adjacent proprietor: Conklin v. Boyd, 46 M. 56.

251. One has a right to discharge the surface water of his land through a ravine where it has run naturally and has been permitted to run for more than twenty years: Gregory v. Bush, 64 M. 37.

252. User, whereon a prescriptive right to a way for water may be based, cannot begin until the person claiming it enjoys the way adversely, or while the title to both parcels of land is in the same owner: Morgan v. Meuth, 60 M. 288.

253. A land-owner has no right to obstruct by artificial barriers the flow from his neighbor's land to his own of surface water for which there is no other escape, in order to reclaim the bed of a pond that has always existed on his land and get rid of the inflow: Boyd v. Conklin, 54 M. 588.

254. Nor has one a right, by digging ditches or laying tile-drains, to empty the waters collected in sag-holes on his premises into a ravine upon the land of an adjacent proprietor: Gregory v. Bush, 64 M. 37.

255. One from whose house rain drips, without fault or neglect on his part, is not liable to one whose estate is injured thereby: Underwood v. Waldron, 38 M. 282; Barry v. Peterson, 48 M. 263.

X. SUBTERRANEAN WATERS.

256. Owners of the soil have no rights in sub-surface waters not running in well-defined channels, as against their neighbors, who may withdraw them by wells or other excavations: Uppjohn v. Richland Board of Health, 46 M. 542.

As to complaint for polluting such waters, see CRIMES, § 650.

XI. WATER COMPANIES; WATER SUPPLY.

257. Where a corporation has been granted the privilege of supplying a village with water, the subsequent incorporation of a city as the legal successor of such village does not destroy or abridge the privileges conferred: Grand Rapids v. Grand Rapids Hydraulic Co., 66 M. 606.

258. A corporation chartered for the purpose of supplying a city with water has the right to lay its pipes in the streets and alleys of such city subject to a reasonable regulative system to be established by the city: Ibid.

259. A right of flowage secured by a company organized for hydraulic purposes resembles the rights secured by other corporations, such as railways and canals, of subjecting lands to permanent conditions in the use of permanent structures: Fitch v. Constantine Hydraulic Co., 44 M. 74.

260. Damages for a right of flowage secured by an hydraulic company are a proper subject of statutory arbitration, as H. S. § 8475 excludes only freehold estates; the president and secretary of the company may agree for it upon an arbitration, and the award need not require a conveyance where the submission does not; nor is it avoided by the fact that two arbitrators only, instead of three, signed, unless it is made to appear, on motion to vacate, that they signed in disregard of the conditions regulating submission by a majority: Ibid.

A contract for the construction of water-works, and the hiring thereof by a city, construed, see CONTRACTS, § 375.

Contract to supply city with water held void as conflicting with charter, see CITIES, ETC., § 149.

261. In proceedings by a village to condemn land for the purpose of securing water supply, the statute must be strictly followed: Houghton v. Huron Copper Mining Co., 57 M. 547. See CITIES, ETC., § 812.

262. Water rates paid to the Detroit board of water commissioners by consumers are not taxes, but are nothing more than the price paid for water as a commodity; no one can be compelled to take water unless he chooses, and the lien, though enforceable in the same way as a lien for taxes, is really a lien for indebtedness. The board may fix the price of water at discretion: Jones v. Detroit Water Commissioners, 84 M. 278.

263. That assessments against vacant lots in front of which water-pipes are laid are not apportionable by frontage, see Ibid.

As to powers, etc., of water boards, see CITIES AND VILLAGES, §§ 150-152; MANDAMUS, § 177.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

1. There can be no comparison of weights and measures so as to charge a person with incorrect weighing, except by reference to the legal standards provided by H. S. ch. 84: McGeorge v. Walker, 65 M. 5.

2. The extent of the duty of one who, not acting officially as weigh-master, but in a private capacity, for a fee, does weighing for others, is to use reasonable diligence to know that his scales are correct, and reasonable care to avoid mistakes in using them: Ibid.

3. An agreement to furnish timber suitable for a particular market contemplates its measurement by the standard customarily used for that market: Merick v. McNally, 26 M. 374.

4. A contract for the shipment of timber in providing that it should be paid for "on the returns of each load shipped" contemplates its measurement at the port of destination: Gillett v. Bowman, 43 M. 477.

Further as to custom and usage of measurement, see CONTRACTS, §§ 353-355, 363, 445, 446.

Further as to measurement, see that heading in the Index.

IX. AGREEMENTS TO MAKE WILLS.

X. RIGHTS, ETC., OF DEVISEES AND LEGATEES.

As to executors, their appointment, powers and duties, see ESTATES OF DECEDENTS.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

1. A will is the legal declaration of a party's intentions which he directs to be performed after his decease: Jameson's Appeal, 1 M. 99.

2. R. S. 1838, p. 270, § 4 (H. S. § 5788), was merely declaratory of the right that every person had at common law to dispose of his personal property by will: High's Appeal, 2 D. 515.

3. The power to devise land does not exist at common law, but is governed by statute: Gibson v. Van Syckle, 47 M. 439.

4. The power to make wills, the formalities with which they shall be executed, and their efficiency, depend upon the statute: Beaubien v. Cicotte, 8 M. 9.

5. Every one has a right to make his will as he chooses: Pierce v. Pierce, 88 M. 412.

6. It is intended by the statute of wills that every person shall be at liberty, in making his will, to select the objects of his bounty among his relations at discretion, or to pass them all by if so disposed: Fraser v. Jennison, 42 M. 206.

7. Courts cannot interfere with a testator's voluntary and intelligent bequests: Latham v. Udell, 38 M. 238.

8. Courts cannot inquire into the propriety of any disposition which a testator sees fit to make of his property by a legally-executed will so long as it is not unlawful: Toms v. Williams, 41 M. 552.

9. The right of a testator to dispose of his property by will extends to all his property, and is available against all persons except in so far as the law has prescribed claims superior to his power: Miller v. Stepper, 32 M. 194.

10. The existence of an ante-nuptial contract securing certain property to the wife does not prevent the testator from making such a will as he pleases: Rice v. Rice, 53 M. 482.

11. A will cannot cut off testator's creditors nor the expenses of administration, and it cannot exclude widow's dower or her right to allowance under H. S. § 5847: Miller v. Stepper, 32 M. 194.

12. But prior to Sept. 10, 1881 (H. S. §§ 5824, 5825), a will could cut off widow's right to distributive share of personal property: Ibid.

13. Where will makes no provision for testator's widow her dower right is the same as though he had died intestate: Burrall v. Bender, 61 M. 608.

And see, generally, DOWER.

14. Testamentary appointment of guardian cannot deprive mother of custody of her child: Goss v. Stone, 63 M. 319.

15. A will was held not good as against the testator's subsequent conveyance to his daughter upon conditions that were afterward performed: Goff v. Thompson, H. 60.

That courts cannot compel conveyance by will, see SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE, § 23.

II. TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY.

Evidence to prove or disprove on probate, see infra, VI, (e).

16. The testator must be of full age: Beaubien v. Cicotte, 8 M. 9; Simmons v. Simmons, 8 M. 318.

17. Testator's soundness of mind at the time he makes his will is essential to the will's validity: Beaubien v. Cicotte, 8 M. 9.

18. A will is not valid unless the testator not only intends of his own free will to make such disposition, but is capable of knowing what he is doing, of understanding to whom he gives his property, and in what proportions, and whom he is depriving of it as heirs, or as devisees under the will he revokes: Beaubien v. Cicotte, 13 M. 459; Kempsey v. McGinniss, 21 M. 123.

19. All persons are in law either of sound or unsound mind. If the decedent was not of sound mind, the law treats him as of unsound mind, and he is to be compared with himself and not with others in determining whether he was of sound mind or not: Aikin v. Weckerley, 19 M. 482.

20. To make a testator competent he must have sufficient active memory to recollect without prompting the elements of the business to be transacted, and to hold them in his mind a sufficient length of time to perceive their obvious relations to each other, and to be able to form a rational judgment in regard to them: Ibid.; Kempsey v. McGinniss, 21 M. 123.

21. But testator need not have the same perfect and complete understanding and appreciation of any of these matters in all their bearings that a person in sound and vigorous health of mind and body would have; nor is he required to know the precise legal effect of every provision in his will: Kempsey v. McGinniss, 21 M. 123.

22. It is not sufficient in law that the testator had memory when he made the will to answer familiar and usual questions: Aikin v. Weckerley, 19 M. 482.

23. One who has capacity to make a contract is competent to make a will: Rice v. Rice, 50 M. 448.

24. A less degree of mind is requisite to execute a will than a contract: Kempsey v. McGinniss, 21 M. 123.

25. Average mental capacity is not required for the making of a will; power to buy and sell, to deal in property on the basis of contract, to give deeds and leases and make gifts by delivery, implies sufficient capacity to devise property: Hoban v. Piquette, 52 M. 346.

26. A will is not to be set aside merely because its maker was weak, or sometimes foolish, or lacked the average mental capacity of his neighbors, or did not dispose of his property as others who knew nothing of his reasons might think he ought to have done: Rice v. Rice, 50 M. 448.

27. The facts that one is an invalid, nervous, reserved, and disinclined or even hardly able to read and write, do not of themselves prove anything against one's testamentary capacity: Hoban v. Piquette, 52 M. 346.

28. Derangement of the mental faculties does not incapacitate one from making his will unless it renders him incapable of acting in the ordinary affairs of life or manifests itself in the testamentary provisions: Fraser v. Jennison, 42 M. 206.

29. A will is not necessarily to be set aside on proof that the testator suffered from a mental disorder when it was executed; it must also be shown that it affected the provisions of the will: Ibid.

30. Delusions as to "greenbacks," or to the effect that one is holding or running for office, or that his wife courted him or had maltreated him after marriage, do not necessarily render a man incompetent to make a will if they do not influence its provisions: Rice v. Rice, 50 M. 448.

31. One who is under the delusion that he is a great man and likely to be called to the cabinet is not thereby deprived of testamentary capacity if his will is itself rational and its provisions are not affected by his delusion: Rice v. Rice, 50 M. 448.

32. Intoxication of the testator does not of itself avoid his will if it does not prevent him from knowing what he is about: Pierce v. Pierce, 38 M. 412.

33. It is proper to consider the character of a will — whether simple in its provisions and application, or otherwise — in determining the question of the capacity to make it; the question always relates to the capacity to make and understand the will in controversy: Kempsey v. McGinniss, 21 M. 128.

And see infra, VI, (e).

III. UNDUE INFLUENCE.

As to evidence, etc., see infra, VI, (f).

34. There can be no fatally undue influence unless there is a person incapable of protecting himself as well as a wrong-doer to be resisted: Latham v. Udel, 38 M. 238.

35. Undue influence, to defeat a will, must be such as to destroy freedom of action at the time of making it; but it may have been exerted before and be operative in subsequent effects: Potter's Appeal, 53 M. 106.

36. Influence cannot destroy a will unless it amounted to a degree of constraint such as the testator was too weak to resist, and such as deprived him of his free agency, and prevented him from doing as he pleased with his property: Maynard v. Vinton, 59 M. 139.

37. Advice, persuasion or argument cannot vitiate a will made freely from conviction, though such will might not have been made but for such advice or persuasion: Ibid.

38. A wife may justly influence the making of her husband's will for her own benefit or that of others so long as she does not act fraudulently or extort benefits from her husband when he is not in condition to exercise his faculties as a free agent: Latham v. Udel, 38 M. 238.

39. A testator is not unduly influenced by his wife unless she defrauds him or exercises such mastery over his will as deprives him of free agency; she has a right to exert any wisely influence over him: Pierce v. Pierce, 38 M. 412.

40. The facts which show undue influence upon a testator must, in the case of married persons, be inconsistent with any other hypothesis; and such as will show that the influence amounted to coercion or fraud. But where there is no relationship, or the relation is only fiduciary, the inferences from the evidence may be different from what they would be in the case of a will made by husband or wife in the other's favor: Potter's Appeal, 53 M. 106.

41. Influence obtained by modest persuasion and arguments addressed to the understanding, or by mere appeal to the affections, cannot properly be termed undue influence in a legal sense; but influence obtained by flattery, importunity, superiority of will, mind or character, or by what art soever that human thought, ingenuity or cunning may employ, which would give dominion over the will of the testator to such an extent as to destroy free agency, or constrain him to do, against his will, what he is unable to refuse, is such an influence as the law condemns as undue when exercised by any one immediately over the testamentary act, whether by direction or indirection, or obtained at any one time or another: Schofield v. Walker, 58 M. 96.

Further on this subject, see infra, VI, (f).

IV. FORMAL REQUISITES.

42. It is not necessary that any particular form of words be used in making a will. An instrument in the form of a letter probated in this case: High's Appeal, 2 D. 515.

43. A will of personal property regularly made according to the requirements of the law of testator's domicile passes such property in whatever country it is situated: Ibid.

44. The formalities of execution required by statute, R. S. 1888, p. 270, § 5, as amended by S. L. 1889, p. 220, § 14 (see H. S. § 5789), as to attestation by witnesses, etc., apply only to wills executed in this state. As to wills executed abroad by persons domiciled here, the common law prevails: Ibid.

45. By the common law it was not essential to the validity of a will that it should be attested by witnesses. Accordingly it was held that a will of personal property executed abroad by a person who died there, but whose domicile was at the time in Michigan, was valid though not attested by three witnesses: Ibid.

46. The statutes do not authorize a will of land to be executed without two witnesses except in the single case of a will probated elsewhere and established here on such probate: Gibson v. Van Syckle, 47 M. 489.

47. A citizen of Michigan, who died in Iowa while on his way to a place in which he intended to settle, left a letter purporting to be written by an amanuensis but signed in his name, in which occurred the sentence: "I want the proceeds of my estate to go to Robert and Elizabeth Gibson." The signature of a third person was attached to the letter, thus: "Attest, J. E. Shellady." Held, that this instrument could not be originally probated in Michigan as a devise of land: Ibid.

48. A declaration by a husband on his death-bed to his wife that, if she pays off the mortgage on his farm and supports the family the land will be hers, cannot, even after full performance by her, be supported either as a valid nuncupative will, or as a valid contract: Campbell v. Campbell, 21 M. 488.

49. A legatee is a competent witness to a will where the statute (R. S. 1888, p. 271, § 7; H. S. § 5791) renders a legacy to a witness void: High's Appeal, 2 D. 515.

50. A will containing bequests to certain religious societies was executed with only two attesting witnesses, previous to the passage of the act concerning churches and religious societies, § 25 of which (C. L. 1857, § 2038; repealed in 1867) required proof in open court by three subscribing witnesses of wills containing such bequests; testator died after the act took effect. Held, that the will was good and that these bequests were valid: American Baptist, etc. Union v. Peck, 10 M. 341.

51. Whether it is necessary to the validity of a will executed in Michigan that the testator should declare it to be his last will, quere: McGinnis v. Kempsey, 27 M. 868.

52. The condition and position of the testator when his will is attested in reference to the act of signing by the witnesses, and their locality when signing, must be such that he has knowledge of what is going forward, and is mentally observant of the particular act in progress, and, unless he is blind, the signing by the witnesses should occur where the testator, if so disposed, may see them sign: Aikin v. Weckerly, 19 M. 482.

53. A will is witnessed in the testator's "presence" if he, being sensible of what he is doing, is in such a position that he can, if he chooses, see the witnesses sign their names thereto: Maynard v. Vinton, 59 M. 189.

As to gifts causa mortis, see GIFTS, §§ 2-5, 9, 11, 12, 23-25.

V. REVOCATION AND REVIVAL.

54. Marriage alone, without birth of issue, does not revoke a man's will; whether, under our statutes concerning children born subsequently, the birth of issue has its common-law effect, quere: Noyes v. Southworth, 55 M. 178.

55. A woman's will is not revoked by her subsequent marriage so long, at least, as no children are born: Ibid.

56. A man cannot by contract render his will irrevocable during his life, for it is of the essence of a will to be revocable until death: Mandlebaum v. McDonell, 29 M. 78, 91.

57. A will made in pursuance of an oral agreement may be revoked by the testator; if the agreement is to devise land it is void under the statute of frauds: De Moss v. Robinson, 46 M. 62.

58. A will made to carry out an agreement to leave property to a party in consideration of his taking care of testator was destroyed, and land conveyed to other parties with notice. After testator's death chancery set aside conveyances on ground of grantor's mental incompetency, and left legal existence of will to be determined in probate court: Leonardson v. Hulin, 64 M. 1.

59. After the death of a testatrix a will twenty-five years old was discovered in a barrel among waste papers, and either worn or torn into several pieces, which were scattered loose among the papers in the barrel. Whether the injury to the instrument was done by the testatrix or by some other persons, and, if by her, whether accidentally or intentionally, and for the purpose of revoking the will, are questions of fact for the jury; and to aid them in determining these questions, and not as separate and independent evidence of a revocation, the declarations of the testatrix, made after the date of the will, that she had destroyed it, are competent evidence: Lawyer v. Smith, 8 M. 411.

60. In a suit to test the validity of a missing will, the questions litigated being whether the decedent had not so destroyed the will as to revoke it, and whether it was not originally procured by undue influence, declarations of the decedent manifesting dissatisfaction with the dispositions of the will, though not made at the time of the alleged acts of spoliation, are competent evidence, bearing both upon the question of the destruction of the will by the decedent and upon the intent of his acts: Harring v. Allen, 25 M. 505.

61. Where the execution of a will has been conclusively established and it has been regularly probated, and a later will is afterwards produced which does not revoke the former one in terms, the question of revocation cannot be determined in a mere proceeding for the probate of the later will if there is any room for a dispute as to construction. And if probate is allowed the former probate should be left to stand for what it is worth, and its effect may be decided elsewhere: Besançon v. Brownson, 39 M. 388.

62. A will is not revived by the destruction of a subsequent will when the latter or any intermediate will had contained a clause revoking all former wills: Scott v. Fink, 45 M. 241.

63. When a will has once been expressly revoked by a later one, nothing can ever be claimed under it, even though the later will has been lost or destroyed: Stevens v. Hope, 52 M. 66.

VI. PROBATE.

As to costs, see COSTS, §§ 295, 296.

(a) Jurisdiction; laches; nature of proceedings.

64. With us all wills are subject to probate; but an original probate can in no case be granted here except by the court that has jurisdiction of the estate: Lloyd v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 56 M. 236.

65. Act 25 of 1883, attempting to provide for the ante-mortem probate of wills, held inoperative and invalid, as not providing for any proceedings of a conclusive or judicial nature, and as inconsistent in its enforcement with the maintenance of a widow's right to administer or to nominate guardians: Ibid.

66. To give a probate court jurisdiction of proceedings to prove here a will already proved elsewhere, a copy of the foreign will and the probate thereof duly authenticated must be presented to the court: Pope v. Cutler, 34 M. 150.

67. The record of a will with the proof of it and the letters issued thereon constitute, it seems, the probate of it in New Jersey, without a distinct judicial act or decree; and such record and proof entitle the will to be presented for allowance here: Wilt v. Cutler, 38 M. 189.

68. Technical or unsubstantial objections should not be permitted to defeat foreign probate: Ibid.

69. Although a probate judge is a legatee named in the will his preliminary orders (of hearing and notice) before probate thereof are valid: McFarlane v. Clark, 39 M. 44.

70. One who holds or has knowledge of a will under which he claims as legatee should secure its probate within a reasonable time after he knows of the testator's death, and failing to do so he may bar himself from making claim thereunder; and a lapse of fourteen years after a knowledge of the death, under such circumstances, is an unreasonable time: Foot v. Foot, 61 M. 181.

71. Proceedings to prove wills are not suits or actions in the ordinary sense of contentious litigations between parties; they are summary and statutory, and partake of the character of proceedings in rem: Allison v. Smith, 16 M. 405; Frazer v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 39 M. 198; Stevens v. Hope, 52 M. 65.

72. The object of probate is to dispose of all questions of execution, and ascertain whether the instrument propounded as the last will of the decedent is such last will, and whether the case is wholly or in part one of intestacy or not: Allison v. Smith, 16 M. 405.

73. The probate of every will, whether in the original or appellate tribunal, must be single and complete in one hearing: Frazer v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 39 M. 198.

74. So that several appeals from the allowance of a will are merely appearances in a single and indivisible proceeding, and consolidation of such appeals is unnecessary, though proper from abundant caution: Ibid.

75. And on the same principle a proceeding for the probate of a will is not severable for the purpose of removal to federal court: Frazer v. Jennison, 106 U. S. 181.

(b) Parties.

76. All persons who are concerned or interested in the probate of a will are parties to the proceedings: Allison v. Smith, 16 M. 405; Stevens v. Hope, 52 M. 65.

77. A guardian has such an interest as entitles him to petition for the probate of a will in his ward's favor: Morford v. Dieffenbacher, 54 M. 594.

78. A widow's right to administer upon her husband's estate or to name a guardian for children under fourteen is substantial, and gives her such an interest as entitles her to notice of any judicial proceedings that may be taken to establish a will which might divest her of it and which she claims to be illegal: Lloyd v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 56 M. 236.

79. Unless the foreign probate of a will is presented by an executor or other person interested in the will, it cannot be allowed here. This is a necessary and jurisdictional condition which should appear in the record: Besançon v. Brownson, 39 M. 388.

80. No one can contest a will which only disposes of property, except the heir at law or next of kin of the testator: Taff v. Hosmer, 14 M. 249.

81. Where a will appoints a guardian for a minor any one may contest it who would be entitled to be heard upon an application for guardianship, e. g., the minor's next of kin; but they cannot oppose it on any ground except that it is not a valid will, as a father's testamentary power cannot be reviewed: Ibid.

82. The proponents of a will, when they appeal from a decree refusing probate, become actors responsible for costs, and shape the issue to suit themselves. If the circuit court has power to allow some of them to renounce and be discharged, such power is discretionary and refusal is not reviewable on error: Beaubien v. Cicotte, 12 M. 459.

83. Where a will appoints a guardian for a minor, the latter's next of kin may appeal from its allowance if he has opposed the will in the probate court: Taff v. Hosmer, 14 M. 249.

84. Executors under a will that gives them exclusive powers and trusts and provides for unborn heirs may appeal from a refusal of probate though all the beneficiaries named in it, and all who would have been interested in it had decedent died intestate, should settle the estate among themselves and oppose the appeal: Cheever v. Washtenaw Circuit Judge, 45 M. 6.

85. Where one interested in the allowance of a will admitted to probate did not take or join in an appeal, it was held that he had no right to contest the will on the trial in the circuit, his true position being that of an appellee; nor could he maintain a writ of error to reverse the action of the circuit court affirming the decree of the probate court: Jackson v. Hosmer, 14 M. 88.

86. Dismissal of such writ for that reason does not bar another party, aggrieved by the judgment, from suing out a new writ: Taff v. Hosmer, 14 M. 249.

87. And if, instead of moving to dismiss an appeal in the circuit court, the proponents of the will join issue on the merits with an appellant, and the judgment affirming the will is also in form a personal judgment against the appellant for costs, this liability is a personal grievance upon which appellant may bring error; but if he has no further interest in the judgment below he cannot dispute the will itself: Ibid.

(c) Petition; issues.

88. A petition for the allowance of a will proved in another state which avers that the will was duly probated in such state, that the petitioner is one of the executors named therein, that a duly authenticated copy of said will and the probate thereof in such state was then filed in the probate court to which the petition is directed, which petition is signed by such petitioner by A. & B., as her proctors, is properly signed, and sufficiently shows the petitioner to be a person interested in the estate, and that a copy of the will was produced to the judge of probate in which her interest appeared: Feustmann v. Gott's Estate, 65 M. 592.

89. A probate judge should entertain a petition for the allowance of a foreign will if there is any law to authorize him to do so; it is unimportant that the petitioner makes his application under the wrong statute; so held where the application was made under H. S. §§ 5805, 5806, instead of first proceeding under H. S. §§ 5826-5830: Schober v. Wayne Probate Judge, 49 M. 323.

90. A petition for the probate of a will need not, it seems, allege testamentary capacity: Hathaway's Appeal, 46 M. 326.

91. The issue upon the probate of a will is in a measure marked out by the statute, and cannot be contracted to the detriment of those "concerned or interested" by the act of others who happen to be proponents: Allison v. Smith, 16 M. 405.

92. In proceedings for the probate of a will the only main issue is whether or not the paper propounded is a will, and if there are also minor issues they belong to the same inquiry and cannot be presented separately: Hathaway's Appeal, 48 M. 326.

93. A written issue need not be made or joined in the probate court, but the party aggrieved may appeal to the circuit court where an issue may be framed if deemed essential: Turnbull v. Richardson, 69 M. 400 (April 20, '88).

94. Upon an appeal from the decree of a probate court allowing or disallowing a will, the substance of the controversy must be the same as on the issue of devisavit vel non: Baptist Missionary Union v. Peck, 9 M. 445.

95. While it is proper to make in the circuit court a new issue in the common-law form, the issue cannot differ materially from that necessarily made on the application for probate; and it makes no difference that a formal issue is not made up in the circuit court, since the substance of the issue is the same whether made up in form or not: Ibid.; Ellair v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 46 M. 496.

96. The averments on the part of the propounders of a will for the purpose of forming an issue upon its validity should include everything necessary to constitute a valid will under the statute, so that a verdict finding the truth of all these averments, without more, would bring the instrument within all the express requirements of the statute: Beaubien v. Cicotte, 8 M. 9.

97. The testator's soundness of mind at the time of the execution of the will must be averred: Ibid.

98. No matter how many different persons appeal from the probate of a will they can only raise one issue, and there can be but one trial of that issue, which is to determine the question of will or no will: Frazer v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 39 M. 196.

99. Whether, after appealing from probate on the sole ground of testamentary incapacity, contestant can raise the question of undue influence, quere: Hoban v. Piquette, 52 M. 347.

100. Where an issue is formed in the circuit court on an appeal from the allowance of a will, it is not necessary for contestant to plead specially the decedent's soundness of mind; the general issue is sufficient: Taff v. Hosmer, 14 M. 309.

101. The issue on appeal may be tried without a jury if neither party demands one: Baptist Missionary Union v. Peck, 9 M. 445.

(d) Evidence generally; subscribing witnesses; evidence of later will.

102. The proponents open and close the case, both with the evidence and on the argument: Taff v. Hosmer, 14 M. 309.

103. Where a subscribing witness to a will was called to prove it upwards of thirty years after its date, and testified that he signed it as a witness, but that he had no distinct recollection of seeing the testatrix sign it, held, that questions to him whether, looking at the attestation clause, he had any doubt she signed it in his presence, and whether he ever witnessed an instrument in that form without knowing what it was, and whether he had any doubt that the persons whose names were to it were present at the time of its execution, were not incompetent, and it was for the jury to give such weight to his evidence in answer thereto as they might think it entitled to under all the circumstances of the case: Lawyer v. Smith, 8 M. 411.

104. H. S. § 5802 does not require all the subscribing witnesses to be sworn on a contest of a will, though it possibly implies that they should be sworn in the probate court. But the failure to produce them in the circuit court on an appeal, if within the jurisdiction and easily reached, would be a suspicious circumstance: Abbott v. Abbott, 41 M. 540.

105. Subscribing witnesses to a will are presumed to have had, when signing, full knowledge of what they were doing; and if dead, their attestation when proved is prima facie evidence that everything was done as it ought to be. But in contested cases the regularity of the proceedings is open for general testimony: Ibid.

106. The probate of a will does not depend on the recollection or veracity of a subscribing witness: Ibid.

107. On appeal from the probate of a will the omission to ask one of the subscribing witnesses some particular question, as with regard to the testator's capacity, does not hinder the contestant from showing by cross-examination the knowledge or ignorance of the witness: Ibid.

108. The error of admitting a will in evidence without having called a particular subscribing witness out of several to prove its due execution is cured by calling him afterwards and allowing the contestants to cross-examine him: Fraser v. Jennison, 42 M. 206.

109. If the circuit court on appeal can discharge a proponent so as to make him a witness such power is discretionary: Beaubien v. Cicotte, 12 M. 459.

Legatee a competent witness in support of will, see EVIDENCE, § 1685.

110. A surety in an appeal bond is not a party to the appeal, nor one "in whose immediate and individual behalf the appeal is prosecuted;" he may, therefore, testify for the appellant: White v. Bailey, 10 M. 155.

111. Such facts in regard to a testator's fortune and the circumstances and relations of his family, within his knowledge, as would naturally influence him in his testamentary dispositions, are admissible on proceedings to prove his will: Stevens v. Hope, 52 M. 65.

112. Evidence of declarations made by a decedent and tending to show a change of mind in regard to the disposal of his property and an actual alteration thereof are admissible in proceedings to contest his will to corroborate the testimony of a witness as to the existence and contents of a later will: Hope's Appeal, 48 M. 518.

113. Where the existence of a later will is in question, in proceedings to prove an earlier one, the facts as to a motive and opportunity for its destruction cannot be ignored; and it is proper to show that if the will had ever existed it would have fallen under the control of persons who were beneficiaries in the other will: Stevens v. Hope, 52 M. 65.

114. The non-production of an alleged revoking will is immaterial in contesting a proceeding to prove a former one, if there is sufficient evidence that it ever existed: Ibid.

115. Where a will is contested on the ground that there was a later will, the existence of which proponents deny, the proponents cannot, it seems, object to parol evidence of its contents on the ground that the alleged will itself is the best evidence: Hope's Appeal, 48 M. 518.

(e) Evidence on issue of testamentary capacity.

As to testamentary capacity generally, see supra, II.

Testator's physician may testify, see PHYSICIANS, § 19.

1. Burden of proof; presumptions; prima facie proof.

116. The burden of proof is on the proponent of a will to show the soundness of mind of the testator at the time of its execution. But upon questions of evidence, growing out of any presumption of sanity affecting the burden of proof, the court express no opinion: Beaubien v. Cicotte, 8 M. 9.

117. The proponent of the will has the affirmative, and must first make out his prima facie case, both as to the fact of the execution of the will and the competency of the testator. The evidence at the opening is usually of a formal character, confined to inquiries of a general nature respecting the signing and attestation, and whether, at the time, the testator understood the business in which he was engaged. The proponent is not required to put in his whole case on the question of mental competency before resting, and the case will be fully open to affirmative proofs on his part after the contestants have put in their evidence: Taff v. Hosmer, 14 M. 809; Aikin v. Weckerly, 19 M. 482; Kempsey v. McGinniss, 21 M. 123.

118. Proponent before resting is bound to make a prima facie case on the averment of soundness of mind; and this involves the production of some other evidence of testamentary capacity than is furnished by the legal presumption: Aikin v. Weckerly, 19 M. 482.

119. In the probate of wills, when the capacity of the testator is contested, after a prima facie case has been established by the proponents, the case, for all purposes connected with the order of proof upon that question, stands the same as if the burden of proof throughout rested upon the contestants to show mental incapacity. The contestants before they rest are bound to introduce all their testimony in support of their case, and cannot, after proponents have gone fully into their evidence and rested, go again into evidence in support of their own case, but are confined to strictly rebutting evidence upon such new facts as had been brought out by the proponents not pertaining to the contestants' case, or, though bearing upon it, yet could not reasonably have been anticipated by them while giving their evidence in chief: Kempsey v. McGinniss, 21 M. 123.

120. There is no special rule as to the amount of proof necessary to establish an affirmative in testamentary cases; a preponderance is required. The burden of establishing testamentary capacity remains with the proponent to the end of the trial, and he must produce evidence sufficient to outweigh that which is opposed. And the whole evidence, whether presumptive or offered by either party, is for the consideration of the jury: Aikin v. Weckerly, 19 M. 482.

121. It was not error to decline to charge that "If the jury should find that, upon the other testimony relating to the testator's mental soundness, the evidence was balanced, they should allow the legal presumption of sanity to decide the question in the testator's favor;" the burden of proof is on the proponents of a will to establish capacity by other evidence than the presumption of sanity, and that presumption cannot have the force of an independent fact to serve as a substantial make-weight against counter-proof: McGinnis v. Kempsey, 27 M. 363.

122. The presumption from keeping a will uncanceled is that its execution was not procured against the testator's will or against his intelligent consent, whether fraud, undue influence or the testator's intoxication is alleged against it: Pierce v. Pierce, 38 M. 412.

123. A probate order adjudging a man "incompetent to have the care of his property," and appointing a guardian for him, is not prima facie evidence that he lacks testamentary capacity; nor does it become so by the recital in the order that he is insane, if the petition for guardianship does not put his sanity in issue. But such an order may be put in evidence as bearing on his condition: Rice v. Rice, 50 M. 448.

124. A recital that a man is insane is superfluous, even if it be proper, in an order adjudging him incompetent to manage his estate; and such a recital is not such evidence of testamentary incapacity as to be admissible for that purpose in resisting probate of his will: Rice v. Rice, 58 M. 432.

2. Relevancy and materiality; remoteness.

125. A testator's disposition of his property has no bearing upon a contest of his will except as it tends to show whether or not he was sound of mind: Brown v. Bell, 58 M. 58.

126. The fact that a testator had expressed regret that he had made a particular bequest has no bearing on his mental capacity: Fraser v. Jennison, 43 M. 206.

127. Where an alleged will is contested upon grounds relating to the mental condition of the testator at the time it was executed, declarations by the testator, whether made before or after the will, in opposition to its dispositions, are competent evidence bearing on mental capacity: Harring v. Allen, 25 M. 505.

128. Statements of a testator that he wanted a first will to stand are inadmissible on the issue of his mental competency to make a second one: Wurzell v. Beckman, 52 M. 478.

129. Evidence may be given to show that the reputation of an executor was bad, for the purpose of reflecting upon the testator's capacity, it having already appeared that the testator had knowledge of the executor's character: McGinnis v. Kempsey, 27 M. 363.

130. Where wills are contested on the ground of testamentary incapacity, courts must exclude all evidence that is merely calculated to rouse prejudice without throwing light on capacity: Pierce v. Pierce, 38 M. 412.

131. The reception of testimony as to testamentary incapacity should be carefully guarded where it is apparent that the witness bases it upon his knowledge that the testator is subject to delusions which, in fact, do not affect such capacity: Rice v. Rice, 58 M. 432.

132. In a proceeding to set aside a will for insanity and undue influence there is no apparent relevancy in testimony that the testator, who was an old, married man, had once, while away from home with his son, wanted to stop at another man's house to see the latter's daughter: Ibid.

133. Where testator's recollection as to a certain transaction was the question at issue, and had not depended on the witness' recollection, the question as to what recollection witness himself had was properly excluded as immaterial: McGinnis v. Kempsey, 27 M. 363.

134. Held error to allow a physician to testify that it is the duty of a physician when called to treat a patient to examine into his mental condition. The material fact is, what examination was made: Maynard v. Vinton, 59 M. 189.

135. Where the contestants of a will attack the competency of the testator, but make no case entitling them to go to the jury on that point, they cannot be injured by any rulings as to the admission of rebutting evidence: Hoban v. Piquette, 52 M. 346.

136. Facts tending to show testamentary incapacity are admissible even if they antedate the making of the will; the difference of time only affects their weight, which is for the jury to determine: Conely v. McDonald, 40 M. 151.

137. Letters showing friendly relations with a brother are not admissible many years afterward as tending to show that the writer, in not leaving any bequest to the brother's children, with whom friendly intercourse had not been kept up after the brother's death, had so lost his natural affection as to indicate insanity; and affectionate letters to and from other relations, equally remote, to whom, however, he had left bequests, though they may not be strictly inadmissible, may be properly excluded: Fraser v. Jennison, 43 M. 206.

138. Where intoxication is alleged as a reason for testamentary incapacity, testimony must be confined to the time involved in the transaction: Pierce v. Pierce, 38 M. 412.

139. Proof of such imbecility of mind as disqualifies one from making a will should be shown, if it does not amount to idiocy, by the testimony of witnesses who have had personal knowledge of the facts within twenty years before the will was executed: Hoban v. Fiquette, 52 M. 846.

3. Opinions of witnesses; experts; questions.

140. To what extent and in what manner the mind of the testator was affected by a disease, or what was his mental condition, is a question of fact, upon which it is competent for professional witnesses to express their opinions: Kempsey v. McGinniss, 21 M. 123.

141. But witnesses cannot be allowed to fix the legal standard of testamentary capacity: Ibid.; White v. Bailey, 10 M. 155.

142. Before any witness, expert or otherwise, can give an opinion upon mental capacity, the circumstances and facts whereon the opinion is based must be shown: White v. Bailey, 10 M. 155.

143. Opinions by non-professional witnesses are admissible when they can speak from personal observation, but such witnesses are expected to describe as well as they can what has led to their conclusions as well as their means of observation: Beaubien v. Cicotte, 12 M. 459; Rice v. Rice, 50 M. 448.

144. In the case of professional witnesses as well as in that of unprofessional ones — who are allowed to give their opinions only from personal observation — the facts upon which the opinion is founded must be stated, and the jury must be left to determine whether the facts as well as the opinions are true or false: Kempsey v. McGinniss, 21 M. 123.

145. Expert's opinion incompetent if it assumes as true testimony of certain other witnesses, the whole of whose testimony he did not hear, it not appearing what facts stated by them he did and what he did not hear: Ibid.

146. The effect of intoxication upon the capacity of the intoxicated person is not a scientific question to be determined by experts: Pierce v. Pierce, 38 M. 412.

147. The opinion of physicians upon questions of mental competency, aside from the question of insanity, is entitled to no greater consideration than that of laymen having equal facilities for observation; and an instruction to the contrary is not cured by the court's saying that the effect of their testimony is for the jury: Maynard v. Vinton, 59 M. 139.

148. The question in a will case whether or not the testator was an eccentric man, held not objectionable as calling for a conclusion instead of a fact: Fraser v. Jennison, 42 M. 206.

149. On a question of capacity to execute a will it was held proper to ask a witness, who had seen and conversed with the decedent near the time of executing the instrument, whether, from the conversation then had, or from what the witness then saw, the decedent was capable of comprehending or understanding a document of any considerable length if it had been read to him: Beaubien v. Cicotte, 12 M. 459.

150. Also what capacity the decedent had at the time to understand business matters, and whether he was then capable of holding a conversation like one testified to by another witness: Ibid.

151. It was held proper to ask a professional witness, upon the assumption of certain facts, "Was the testator, in your opinion, at the time, etc., capable of planning and executing such a paper as is here offered as his will?" Also, "Was he in a mental and physical condition to transact any business requiring an exercise of the judgment, the reasoning faculties, and a consecutive continuation of thought?" Kempsey v. McGinniss, 21 M. 123.

152. The opinion of a physician as to testator's capacity to plan and execute the paper propounded as a will was held admissible: McGinniss v. Kempsey, 27 M. 363.

153. A will was contested on the ground of want of mental competency and for undue influence. The provisions of the will were simple and the bequests few. An old acquaintance of the decedent was asked, as a witness for contestants, the following question: "Having reference to the extent of her [decedent's] property, I ask you whether, at the time of making this will, in your opinion decedent had sufficient mental capacity to take into consideration the state of her property, the amount of it, and the relation of her children to her, so as to be competent to make this will?" Also, "From what you know of decedent, from your acquaintance with her from the time you first knew her up to 1875, what could you say about her mental ability to comprehend and understand a disposition of her property, and her ability to make her will to the extent of this paper here" [the will]? Held, that both questions were competent: Porter v. Throop, 47 M. 313.

154. The question whether a testator was competent to make a will dividing his property among his family is not objectionable for failing to specify the particular will in suit if that will is as simple as any will could be: Rice v. Rice, 53 M. 483.

155. A complicated hypothetical question put to a non-professional witness criticised as misleading: Rice v. Rice, 50 M. 448.

156. A long question to an expert excluded in a particular case: Fraser v. Jennison, 42 M. 266.

(f) Evidence upon issue of undue influence; instructions; verdict.

157. He who objects to a will for undue influence has the burden of proving affirmatively that it has been exerted; and the proof must often consist of circumstances trivial in themselves and convincing only when taken together: Potter's Appeal, 53 M. 106.

158. Where a will is contested on the ground of fraud or undue influence, a very broad inquiry is permitted into the whole chain of circumstances attending its preparation; and the transaction must be deemed to embrace all the immediate preliminaries: Beaubien v. Cicotte, 12 M. 459.

159. Undue influence being charged against the testator's wife, statements of the decedent that he regretted the marriage; that he was not master at home; that he was afraid of his wife, and was compelled to submit to her demands, or otherwise there would be trouble in the house, were held admissible in evidence: Ibid.

160. The will disinheriting the decedent's relatives in favor of the wife and her relatives, it was held competent to prove the wife's abuse of the husband's relatives, and her quarrel with him about a former will by which he had made provision for them. A wide range of inquiry into the family relations, and the terms upon which they lived, is allowable in these cases: Ibid.

161. Evidence that the decedent made no complaint of any importunities on the part of his relatives is also admissible, where it appears that the wife made charges to him of their rapacity: Ibid.

162. Evidence of former wills and of other pecuniary arrangements for the wife is also admissible, as having a bearing upon the question whether the decedent has understandingly and of his own free will changed his settled views: Ibid.

163. Where the instructions for executing a will contemplated that the attending physician should be sent for to attest it, the res gestæ necessarily embrace this as one of the steps actually taken; and what message was sent or received and acted upon is therefore admissible, as a circumstance which may have weight or not, as made significant or not by other proofs: Ibid.

164. Where a will disinheriting the testator's children is contested for fraud, it is competent for the propounder to put in evidence all those facts which might have contributed to alienate the testator's feeling from his children, as such a state of mind would furnish a motive for giving his property to another, and tend to repel the suspicion of undue influence: White v. Bailey, 10 M. 155.

165. A testator's declarations, whether made before or after the will, in opposition to its contents, are not admissible on the distinct fact of undue influence: Harring v. Allen, 25 M. 505.

166. Ancient scandals concerning a husband's relations with his wife before their marriage are irrelevant to the question of her undue influence as a wife in the making of his will: Pierce v. Pierce, 38 M. 412.

167. Where a will is contested on the ground that it was procured by the undue influence of the testator's wife, his general condition and surroundings and his relations with her may be properly shown, but only for such a period as can reasonably be regarded as bearing on the act of disposing of his property; and recent facts are more trustworthy than those that are long past: Ibid.

168. A doctor who had parted from his wife but had not yet been divorced was treating a sickly widow who had means. Being afterward divorced he married the widow, and in less than seven weeks she died. Before the divorce the two had talked about making their wills each in the other's favor, and the woman had actually made a will with which the man was dissatisfied. On the day of her death she made another, in which she gave her husband an absolute estate of inheritance, though she had evidently been made to suppose that it conveyed a life estate only. They had not been acquainted three years altogether. Held, that in contesting the probate of the will for undue influence a broad latitude of inquiry should have been allowed, and the relations of the pair before marriage as well as afterwards, including letters passing between them, might properly be shown so far as they tended to throw any light on the question of undue influence: Potter's Appeal, 53 M. 106.

169. The ground upon which divorce proceedings were taken against a man is inadmissible upon the issue whether he exerted undue influence in obtaining a will in his favor from a subsequent wife with whom he had business relations before the divorce was granted: Ibid.

170. In proceedings to set aside a will for undue influence exerted by testator's wife, evidence whose manifest purpose and only tendency was to prejudice the jury against the wife was held improper; such as that the testator had said she had courted him before and maltreated him after marriage; and also that there was an ante-nuptial contract by which she was to have certain property. And in the absence of proof of undue influence it was also improper to show that some deeds prepared by testator had never been executed, because, as he had said, his wife would not sign them, and that once when out late he had expressed the fear that his wife would scold him and that he did not mean to stay at home that night if she did: Rice v. Rice, 58 M. 482.

171. Certain specified facts held admissible upon the issue of undue influence claimed to have been used by a son upon his mother, the decedent: Porter v. Throop, 47 M. 813.

172. A trustee named in a will was also a subscribing witness, and testified to its due execution and the testator's sanity. He was asked on cross-examination as to whether he had proved a claim against the estate, and an offer was made to show that the witness had himself drawn the will; that testator was very old, and that before his will was made he had been prompt to pay his debts. Held proper to exclude the question and the testimony: Fraser v. Jennison, 42 M. 206.

173. A husband contesting the probate of his wife's will on the ground of undue influence cannot testify as to confidential conversations had with her during marriage: Maynard v. Vinton, 59 M. 189.

174. Where the contestant of a will does not allege undue influence in his pleadings, and submits his case upon the theories of mental incompetency and the defective execution of the will, there is no error in refusing requests to charge that suggest for the first time the theory of undue influence: Brown v. Bell, 58 M. 58.

175. The refusal of certain instructions concerning undue influence in a case where the probate of a will was resisted upon the ground of such influence over the mind of testatrix by her pastor and his wife, in whose family she was a boarder, held not error: Schofield v. Walker, 58 M. 96.

176. The issue was submitted to a jury whether an alleged will was the last will and testament of the decedent, and whether at the time of executing it he was of sound and disposing mind, and not under the undue influence of the devisee therein named. The jury returned a verdict that the will was the last will and testament of the decedent, and that at the time of executing it he was of sound disposing mind and memory, and capable of disposing of his property by will. Held, that it covered the whole issue, and necessarily negatived all undue influence: White v. Bailey, 10 M. 155.

(g) Adjudication; conclusiveness and effect; relation back; effect of foreign probate.

177. A record made in 1847 by the probate court of a decree made by the same court in 1837, admitting a will to probate, was proper: Ives v. Kimball, 1 M. 308.

178. Denial of probate should not be affirmed without hearing on merits — affirmance asserts jurisdiction; on refusal of ante-mortem probate proper order on appeal is one quashing whole proceeding: Lloyd v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 56 M. 286.

179. Dismissal by circuit court of appeal from allowance of probate cannot be set aside by circuit court after two years if at all: Ellair v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 46 M. 496.

That error lies to review decision on appeal, see ERROR, § 16.

180. Probate of a will is conclusive against all the world while unrevoked: Allison v. Smith, 16 M. 405. See JUDGMENTS, § 197.

181. There is no statutory provision concerning the revocation of probate or its effect on existing rights. The probate court, on probating a later will, has no authority to revoke an earlier probate: Besançon v. Brownson, 39 M. 388.

182. The statute respecting probate makes no distinction between kinds of wills; and a will giving all the property to a college allied but in fact only to a religious body (see C. L. 1857, § 2082) must be fully proved, once for all, as under the general law, and probate thereof covers the question of the legal authority to make such a disposition: Allison v. Smith, 16 M. 405.

183. Probate of a will, if allowed, cannot be collaterally assailed for the want of a showing that the proponent had not proved the allegations on which his right to petition was based: Morford v. Dieffenbacher, 54 M. 594.

184. Upon probate a will becomes fully operative and retroactively from testator's death: Allison v. Smith, 16 M. 405.

185. The probate of a will affirms the title of a beneficiary under it from the time of the testator's death; and it relates back so as to make valid whatever had been previously done, which under the will the beneficiary could lawfully have done after probate: Sutphen v. Ellis, 35 M. 446.

186. Probate of a will for all purposes relating to the existence and transfer of title relates back to the death of the testator: Richards v. Pierce, 44 M. 444.

187. Subsequent probate and administration granted here sustain claim filed by the foreign executor in behalf of the estate: Feustmann v. Gott's Estate, 65 M. 592.

188. Foreign probate cannot be enforced here without re-allowance: Dickinson v. Seaver, 44 M. 624.

189. The probate of a will in another state is sufficient to entitle a residuary legatee to intervene and contest the allowance in this state of an administrator's account upon proceedings here: Mower's Appeal, 48 M. 441.

VII. CONSTRUCTION.

Devisees who have conveyed realty but retain interest in personalty may appeal from construction: See APPEAL, § 358.

Costs of proceedings to obtain construction, see COSTS, §§ 290-294.

(a) General rules.

As to extrinsic evidence to control or vary construction, see EVIDENCE, §§ 1369-1377.

190. The interpretation and legal consequences of a will are the only matters that can come in question after it has been duly admitted to probate: Toms v. Williams, 41 M. 552.

191. It is the duty of courts, in the construction of wills, to give full and complete effect to the testator's intention: Jameson's Appeal, 1 M. 99.

192. The primary object in interpreting a will is to reach, if possible, the intent the testator had in his mind and give effect to it: Rock River Paper Co. v. Fisk, 47 M. 212.

193. Wills are to be so construed as to carry out the evident intentions of the testators so long as they are lawful: Cummings v. Corey, 58 M. 494.

194. The cardinal principle in the interpretation of wills is to arrive at and carry out the testator's intention if it is lawful: Eyer v. Beck, 70 M. 179; Morrison v. Sessions, 70 M. 297.

195. The intention of the testator as ascertained from the words of the will must govern the construction; but the expressed intention governs only so far as it is consistent with the laws of the land: Fraser v. Chene, 2 M. 81.

196. A will must be so construed that each word means something, if possible: Rivenett v. Bourquin, 53 M. 10.

197. The general intent of a will, if it can be gathered from the whole instrument, governs its construction; and neither the usual sense of technical language, nor the order of clauses, may disappoint the apparent and real purpose of the testator: Jones v. Jones, 25 M. 401.

198. A testator's intent is to be determined from the whole will, which is to be given effect as far as it may lawfully be done: Teucksbury v. French, 44 M. 100.

199. Wills are usually informal, and the question of construction is not so much what words are actually used as what was intended by them; the law favors testamentary arrangements, and when they contravene no rule of law they should be fairly interpreted and enforced according to their real intent: Tracy v. Murray, 49 M. 35.

200. The courts will so interpret the condition of a will where the language is obscure or ambiguous as to carry out the testator's intention, when such intention is legal and can be clearly gathered from the whole body of the instrument: Palms v. Palms, 68 M. 355 (Feb. 2, '88).

201. Courts are bound to carry out the real design of the testator, as derived from a comparison of all the parts of the will; and the meaning of all words and phrases must, if possible, be harmonized: Bailey v. Bailey, 25 M. 185.

202. A will must be construed as a whole, and its provisions harmonized to give effect to the testator's evident intent: Ireland v. Parmenter, 48 M. 631.

203. Language creating rights should be construed according to its ordinary and commonly-accepted meaning if used by persons who are unacquainted with any different technical significance which it may have in law: Rivenett v. Bourquin, 53 M. 10.

204. Terms used in wills are generally to be construed as having the meaning which has become generally accepted, but they are also to be construed in connection with the rest of the will: Porter v. Porter, 50 M. 456.

205. The general words in a will may be restrained in their meaning, or rejected entirely to carry out the intention of the testator. So general words may be construed by the particular words which follow: Jameson's Appeal, 1 M. 99.

206. In construing a will the evidence should place the court in the position of the testator when he made it, and from that stand-point its language should be read and applied unless its uncertainty prevents: Tuxbury v. French, 41 M. 7.

207. The established rules governing the construction of wills should not be departed from for new views of policy, or because of the hardship of a particular case: Fraser v. Chene, 2 M. 81.

208. Courts cannot adopt astute constructions to defeat provisions claimed to be unjust: Toms v. Williams, 41 M. 552.

209. Substance rather than form must be regarded in construing wills; and all intendments must be made to prevent a partial intestacy: Ibid.

210. The presumption that a testator means to die intestate as to a part of his estate will not be raised where the will does not naturally lead to that inference: Bailey v. Bailey, 25 M. 185.

211. Wills should be construed if possible in favor of vesting interests; and future interests should be treated as vested where there is any present interest in the income of the property: Toms v. Williams, 41 M. 552.

212. Such a construction of a will is favored in law as conforms the distribution thereunder, as nearly as the language will permit, to the general rule of inheritance, and regards equities rather than technicalities: Rivenett v. Bourquin, 53 M. 10.

213. While a testator may perhaps be supposed to have a reasonably correct idea of the condition of his estate at the time of making his will, it cannot be presumed that he expects his circumstances to remain unchanged and that he disposes of his property on that theory: Kinney v. Kinney, 84 M. 250.

214. Judicial tribunals cannot inquire into a testator's hopes and expectations as to what his fortune may turn out to be when his will shall take effect any further than he has seen fit to express them; where he has clearly expressed a wish consistent with the rules of law, they must give it effect; they are not at liberty to surmise that his real wishes were something different: Ibid.

215. A will is often made when death is not imminent, and such a will may well provide for the contingency of a change of fortune; a small but certain legacy is therefore proper as an alternative to one which may be large and may be worthless: Ibid.

216. A gift by will cannot be defeated by any ambiguity that would not defeat a deed or bill of sale: Ibid.

217. Where a will disposes of real and personal property in the same terms the testator's language cannot receive one construction for one class of property and another for the other, unless the context requires it to be differently construed: Ireland v. Parmenter, 48 M. 631.

218. A testator's intent to forgive a debt due him from a legatee should be clear and unambiguous to warrant that construction: Baldwin v. Sheldon, 48 M. 580.

219. The language in a will which gives an executor his authority is presumed to have been made with reference to the statutory provisions relating thereto, and must be construed as if it embraced those provisions: Vernor v. Coville, 54 M. 281.

220. Intestacy as to property purporting to be disposed of by will is a question of construction for the court, and cannot be settled by the admissions of parties: Turner's Appeal, 48 M. 369.

221. The supreme court cannot revise the construction of a will if the finding below does not set forth the facts on which it was based: Tuxbury v. French, 41 M. 7.

222. Dispositions of property created by mutual benefit associations partake of the nature of testamentary dispositions, and are to be governed by the same rules of construction: Union Mutual Assoc. v. Montgomery, 70 M. 587.

(b) Description of persons.

223. Where the context determines the sense in which the word "heirs" is used in a will, effect must be given to the will accordingly: Hascall v. Cox, 49 M. 485.

224. Where a testator, who at the time of the execution of his will and at the time of his decease had a sister and several brothers and a nephew and nieces, children of a deceased brother, living, devised his lands to said sister "and her heirs, forever, and in failure of heirs to the children of" said deceased brother, held, that to give effect to the plain intent of the testator the word "heirs" should be construed to mean issue of the body of the sister living at the time of her decease; and that upon her death without issue living, the lands went to the said children of the deceased brother, and not to the heirs generally of the sister. The devise to the sister was what at common law would be an estate-tail, with remainder over to the children of said deceased brother, in the event of her dying without such issue; and this was a valid contingent limitation under H. S. § 5520: Goodell v. Hibbard, 33 M. 47.

225. The term "heir," as generally used, refers to one who takes an estate of inheritance himself: Bailey v. Bailey, 25 M. 185.

226. The word "heirs," though technical, and when used in legal instruments more or less forcibly presumed to have its technical meaning, may also be understood, when used in common speech or in wills, which are often informal instruments, to mean those who come in any manner to the ownership of any species of property by reason of the owner's death; and it may include a testator's wife, next of kin and legatees as well as those who take by descent: Hascall v. Cox, 49 M. 435.

227. Where a childless testator gave control of all his property to his executors, and by the chief provisions of his will specified certain distinct bequests to his wife, leaving the rest of his property, after certain minor bequests, to "descend to his lawful heirs according to law," it was held not to be his intention that the term lawful heirs should include his wife for further share in the estate: Bailey v. Bailey, 25 M. 185.

228. A testator declared that all the residue of his estate, after all charges were paid, should be divided among his legal heirs, according to the laws of Michigan. His heirs at law would be identical with the distributees of his estate, and consisted of his wife, a brother, two sisters, and the five children of a deceased sister, four of whom were males. He also provided that these four nephews should receive a certain farm "in full of all claims they might have as heirs." Held that, notwithstanding the use of the word "heirs," the residue should be divided among the heirs at law, except the nephews, according to the provisions of the statute of distributions; and that, although the nephews were provided for, the niece should not receive the full share to which her mother would have been entitled, but only what she would have received if her brothers had been included among the distributees: Hascall v. Cox, 49 M. 435.

229. Under H. S. § 6379, A., and B. his wife, adopted a child, whose mother, C., joined in the declaration of adoption. B. dying, the child returned to her mother, and on application by A. and C. the probate judge revoked his order of adoption. Subsequently A. made a will leaving his estate to his "lawful heirs." Held, that the child was not such an heir within the testator's intention, whether the revocation of adoption was valid or not: Morrison v. Sessions, 70 M. 297.

230. A testator devised a life estate to his widow, remainder to his children "now living, or who may be at the time of her decease," to be equally divided. All his children survived him, but two died before the widow, and one left a widow and children. Held, that the estate in remainder vested on the testator's decease, and that the heirs at law of the deceased son were entitled to the share of their ancestor: Rood v. Hovey, 50 M. 395.

231. A testator gave his widow an estate for life in his entire property, and added a residuary clause providing that on her decease it should be equally divided between his "surviving children." Held, that the will vested an estate in all the children surviving at his death, and that the heirs at law of any child who died before the widow were entitled to the share of their ancestor unless the will indicated otherwise: Porter v. Porter, 50 M. 456. As to survivorship, see infra, § 266.

232. A will which provides that, "after the death of testator's daughter, he gives her children and grand children," etc., contemplates descendants then unborn who shall be in being at the time of the daughter's death: Cheever v. Washtenaw Circuit Judge, 45 M. 6.

233. A testator devised property "to the surviving children of [her] brothers." Held, that she meant those surviving at her death, and not those who were alive when the will was made: Eberts v. Eberts, 42 M. 404.

234. The words "if living" and "if not living" in a bequest refer to living at the time of testator's death: Union Mutual Assoc. v. Montgomery, 70 M. 587.

235. A woman willed her property to her four children equally, and added that if either died before she did her estate should be "divided among the survivors or their legal representatives, share and share alike." One of the four did die before the testator, leaving two children. Held, that they were entitled to the share of their mother: Rivenett v. Bourquin, 53 M. 10.

236. A man deeded certain property to one of his sons in consideration that the son should relinquish all right to any of his estate as heir. Afterwards, in making his will, he set apart a fund of $7,000 for the support of his wife and infant child, and further provided that when the child should become of age he should have $2,000 of the fund in lieu of all claims on the estate, except that on his wife's death he should have a distributive share of the remaining $5,000 "with the rest" of the testator's heirs. Held, that this amounted to a bequest of the $5,000 to the whole class of heirs, and that the son to whom the deed was made was entitled to share: Turner's Appeal, 48 M. 369.

237. A will provided that the estate should be equally divided among testator's "lawful heirs," giving the name of each child, but not of any grandchild, describing the grandchildren only as "the children of C. B., deceased." Held, that the grandchildren together took but as one child: Eyer v. Beck, 70 M. 179 (May 11, '88).

(c) The estate created.

238. A will contained the following devise: I give and bequeath to my beloved son, G. C., the farm I now reside on, for and during his life-time, with all the appurtenances thereon; and after his decease, then the right, title and appurtenances of the aforesaid farm is to become the property of the said G. C.'s male heirs. Held, that G. C., by the will, took an estate-tail, which by the statute of 1827 — see H. S. § 5519 — changed into a fee-simple: Fraser v. Chene, 2 M. 81. (The rule in Shelly's case is now abolished in this state by H. S. § 5544.)

239. Where a will provided that the testator's sister, who was named as a devisee, should support her mother and pay to certain children a specified sum within a week after the testator's death, she having received a bequest of personal estate also, it was held that this could not prevail to enlarge the sister's estate in the realty against the clear purpose of the will: Goodell v. Hubbard, 32 M. 47.

240. A devisee's interest is not enlarged from a life estate to a fee merely by the fact that the terms of the will impose the burden of maintaining the testator's wife upon the devisees: Gaukler v. Moran, 66 M. 353.

241. A devise of lands to testator's daughter "during her natural life-time, and, after her death, to her heirs and assigns forever," to have and to hold the premises above described to the said F. during her natural life and afterwards to her heirs and assigns forever, gives her only a life estate, with remainder to her heirs: Ibid.

242. A devise of property for the devisee's natural life, with authority to dispose of enough for his support, if the use of it should be insufficient, gives only a life estate with conditional power of disposal. And so long as any money bequeathed by the will is available for the devisee's support, the real property cannot be sold for that purpose: Morford v. Dieffenbacher, 54 M. 594.

243. A widow who was made life tenant of the real estate and co-executrix with another was charged by the will with removing the bodies of the testator's former wife and family from where they were buried to his place of interment. There was no provision in the will for defraying the expenses of the removal. Held, that it not appearing that there was not sufficient personal property to pay the costs of removal, and the widow not being sole executrix, her life estate was not enlarged into a fee: Curtis v. Fowler, 66 M. 696.

244. The testator devised to his wife all his real estate, to remain to her use and benefit while she should remain a widow, it at her decease to be and remain to his daughter's use and benefit. Held, that the daughter took the remainder of the real estate on the death of the wife, and that her estate prior thereto was an estate of expectancy as of the date of the testator's death, under H. S. § 5557: Ibid.

245. Where a will indicates that the testator's intention was to confer upon his wife an absolute estate in all his real and personal property, the clause, "And after the death of my said wife, it is my will that my estate, real, personal and mixed, that shall remain, should be distributed in manner following," etc., was held to be intended simply as the expression of a wish as to the distribution of any possible unspent remainder, and not to affect the unconditional gift and power of disposition already granted to the wife: Jones v. Jones, 25 M. 401.

246. Whether a will whereby the testator gives to his wife all his estate "during her natural life, for her use," but after her death gives to others "what may be left" of his estate after her death, conveys to the wife a life estate only in the property, or whether it does not rather confer upon her full power of final disposal and confine the limitation over to such as she may see fit to leave undisposed of at her death, quere: Sutphen v. Ellis, 35 M. 446.

247. Whether an absolute bequest of a specific mortgage to testator's wife, and a further bequest of the residue of the mortgage to a son after her death, does not transfer to the wife an entire and absolute interest, instead of a life interest merely, or a partial or qualified one, quere. But assuming that it conveyed a qualified interest only, leaving a contingent interest, or a possibility of benefit, in the son, the widow would be entitled to the possession of the securities, and to bring suit upon the same to enforce collection thereof. She was immediate legatee of the specific property, with the right to consume the whole if she desired: Proctor v. Robinson, 35 M. 285.

248. A devise of an estate in remainder to a woman on condition of her ceasing to live with her husband, the property to go to another if she continues to live with him until her death, gives an estate clear of conditions. It provides for a forfeiture on breach of condition, but does not state a condition precedent: Conrad v. Long, 88 M. 78.

249. An estate cannot vest and lapse from time to time according to circumstances: Ibid.

250. A devise of the rents, profits and income of lands to the widow during her life, so long as she should remain a widow, is construed to convey an estate for life on condition that she did not marry: Mandlebaum v. McDonell, 29 M. 78.

251. An absolute and exclusive devise of the proceeds of lands when sold, with no provision whereby any other person should in any event have any right or interest therein, and subject only to a life estate in the widow of the devisor, is held to be in legal effect a devise of the remainder in fee: Ibid.

252. A mother left to her daughter, who was her sole heir at law, certain property which certain other persons were to take in case the daughter died childless in her minority, as she did. Held, that the devise to the daughter was conditional, and therefore did not carry the same interest which she would have taken as heir at law, and that the estate never vested in the daughter: Plant v. Weeks, 89 M. 117.

253. A devise of an estate in trust, providing that one-half of the income shall be paid to testator's son and one-half to his daughter for life, is a devise to each in severalty of a life estate in half the property: Palms v. Palms, 68 M. 355.

(d) Powers in trust.

254. A will directing executors to sell real estate to the best advantage and invest the proceeds is a general power in trust, and authorizes sale without probate license: Battelle v. Parks, 2 M. 581; King v. Merritt, 67 M. 194 (Oct. 13, '87).

255. Where a will, after making gifts that embraced the whole estate, appointed two persons "as executors to sell and dispose of all my estate and carry out the provisions of my last will," etc., it was held that the executors had power, without probate license, to sell real estate, if necessary, to pay debts and legacies: Tracy v. Murray, 49 M. 35.

256. A particular will was held to invest executors with an active trust, and to authorize them to sell lands, control and invest the proceeds, and use them for the benefit of the cestui que trust: Haddon v. Hemingway, 89 M. 615.

257. A will empowering two executors to sell and convey real estate warrants a sale made by one if the other has renounced the trust: Vernor v. Coville, 54 M. 281.

(e) Particular devises and bequests.

258. A will, after devising the real estate of the testator, contained the following clause: "It is my will that all my furniture and property be in common to my beloved wife Elizabeth and daughter Jane, so long as they live and keep house together, and that whenever they separate or break up housekeeping that the furniture be divided between them at their own discretion, and the stock of cattle to be given up to my beloved wife Elizabeth, for her sole use and behoof." Held, that a claim which the testator had against the Chippewa Indians, and which was allowed and paid over to the executor under a treaty concluded after the testator's death, did not pass under the will to the widow and daughter: Jameson's Appeal, 1 M. 99.

259. A will provided for sales of the real property and for a distribution of the proceeds by the executors, without stating who should make the sales, though it clearly expressed the intent to debar the devisees to whom the proceeds were to be paid from making them. Held to confer the power of sale as a naked power, without estate or interest, upon the executors, but not to invest any estate or title in them; under such a will the title must have vested in the meantime either in the heirs at law of the devisor or in the devisees named in the will: Mandlebaum v. McDonell, 29 M. 78.

260. A clause in a will giving testator's wife so much of his property, real and personal, as is allowed by law to widows in cases where no will is made, or in lieu of personal property allowed her by law, $500 to be taken by her in case she so elect in lieu of said personal property, is held not to be ambiguous, and it is construed so as to give effect to the apparent intent manifest in it. The "personal property allowed by law," to which the sum of $500 is made an alternative, refers to the specific property to the value of $450 which by law the widow is allowed to select: Kinney v. Kinney, 84 M. 250.

261. A testator began his will with the words: "To my wife the provision made for by the statutes of this state I deem sufficient," and after providing sundry legacies to others he added a clause giving to his son "all the residue of my estate after paying the above bequests, legacies and my debts and the expenses of settling my estate." Held, that he meant to give his wife what she would have received if he had died intestate: Kelly v. Reynolds, 39 M. 464.

262. A devise of stores attached to the freehold and forming a part of realty also belonging to the testator covers the ground on which they stand: Toms v. Williams, 41 M. 552.

263. A will required the executors to put up a building on certain land, and provided that, "should it become necessary to sell real estate for the purpose of building," they might sell certain other specified premises. The lot and buildings were to go to the testator's grandson, but in case the latter died under eighteen, "all the real estate" was to go to the testator's brother. The grandson died at the age of fifteen, and his administrator claimed a quantity of personalty, not specifically bequeathed by the will, as belonging to the estate of his intestate as his grandfather's sole heir at law. Held, that the will evidently intended that this residuum of personalty was to be used in building the stores, and that it therefore went with the lot on which they were to be put up, to the testator's brother: Allen v. Stead, 38 M. 756.

264. A man bequeathed to his wife his house and all his personal property "to her sole use forever." His will also provided that she should have the use of all his moneys during her natural life; that after her death a specified legatee should have $500 out of any money that she might have at her death; and finally that residues of the money should be divided among certain other legatees. There was a mortgage among his assets which it was agreed should be considered as money. Held, that the widow was entitled to the possession and management of the fund represented by the mortgage. It seems also that the word "use" in the will does not mean interest, but enjoyment: Patterson v. Stewart, 38 M. 402.

265. A testator provided for the disposition of a certain bequest to his wife "in case of her death before his estate was settled." Held, that the settlement meant was the stage of proceedings when the funeral expenses, debts and legacies had been paid and nothing remained but to divide the residue: Calkins v. Smith's Estate, 41 M. 409.

266. A devise to the minor children of a specified person or to the survivors of them of the net accumulations of a fixed fund of realty and personalty to be paid to them annually after the youngest reached majority until a certain date, the entire estate being in trust till then for the purpose of freeing it from an encumbrance, and to be then turned over to the devisees as tenants in common, was held to create a present vested estate in the legatees; to contemplate survivorship at the testatrix's death, and not that the last survivor should take the whole estate to the exclusion of the descendants of the other legatees; and in effect to give to the same devisees the entire present and future beneficial estate subject to certain distinct and independent trusts for retaining the income during their minority and for finally freeing the estate, which were also for their benefit: Toms v. Williams, 41 M. 552.

267. A man devised to one of his daughters the S. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. $\frac{1}{4}$ of a specified quarter section, and further described it as containing fifteen acres, and as being fifteen rods wide by one hundred and sixty long. There was a similar devise to another daughter, and another was to have a strip twelve and one-half rods wide, and containing twelve and one-half acres. There were three remaining daughters, who were to receive the residue, share and share alike. The actual quantity in each of the first devisees, according to the first clause in the descriptions, would be thirty acres; but if they were construed as giving thirty acres each, there would have been no residue for the last three devisees. Held, that they covered only fifteen acres: Tewksbury v. French, 44 M. 100.

268. A clause in a will described certain property as "being the same land on which the said Sidney Tewksbury now lives." It seems that such a description does not necessarily cover the entire tract within the enclosure: Ibid.

269. A man devised certain real estate to two nephews, to be sold when they became of age and the proceeds to be equally divided between them; but he also provided that his wife was to have control of the property until they became of age. Held, that she was to have meanwhile the exclusive and beneficial right of enjoyment: Hogan v. Hogan, 44 M. 147.

270. A testator devised all his property to his wife, who was to pay his debts. The next clause was as follows: "The half of the residue after her decease to be paid to my two sisters in Scotland, share and share alike; if either should die before my wife's death, then the other to have the full half; if both should be dead, then let it be divided between their nearest heirs; the other half to be disposed of as my wife may direct." Held, that the widow took the entire estate, and that the will contemplated that if she sold it and did not use all the proceeds during her life, one-half of the proceeds should be paid to his sisters or their heirs, and the other should be disposed of as the widow should direct: Weir v. Michigan Stove Co., 44 M. 506.

271. A woman devised to her husband the undivided half of certain descriptions of land, referred to as "containing 240 acres," and she made the devise subject to a right reserved by her grantor to occupy one-half of the dwelling-house thereon. She devised the other undivided half to her children. The descriptions were according to the government subdivisions, but embraced only 140 acres, which was only a part of the 240 acres actually granted to her in one compact body, and no other disposition was made of the rest of this grant. The dwelling-house was not upon the 140 acres devised. Held, that the testator's evident intent was to devise the entire 240 acres: Waldron v. Waldron, 45 M. 350.

272. Where a will merely designated certain persons as executors, employing no words of grant or devise to indicate a purpose that any estate should pass to or be vested in them, and the only powers conferred upon them beyond those of executors were that they should have the "control and direction of" testator's son, and should determine the ultimate disposition of the estate by the judgment they should form and express upon the son's past and probable future conduct, held, that no trust was thus created, and that the legal title was left to descend according to the rules of law: Rock River Paper Mill Co. v. Fisk, 47 M. 212.

273. A provision in the will for the son's dying without issue meant his dying without issue after it had been determined by the executors, as provided by the will, that the conduct and promise of the son were unsatisfactory, and that determination having never been made, and the son remaining owner at the time of his death, the estate passed under the will of the son to his devisee: Ibid.

274. Where a will disposed of realty after the decease of testator's wife, but made no express directions concerning its disposal during her life, held, that if to that extent an intestacy it would during that period pass to the person or persons entitled to hold it in case there had been no will; and as the widow — there being no descendants — was entitled to possession during life of intestate lands, the life estate belonged to her. Whether such an intent could not be gathered also from the will, quere: Langrick v. Gospel, 48 M. 185.

275. An annuity of $50 required to be payable monthly out of any money which should come into the hands of the executors by their right as executors construed to mean $50 a month, and not $50 a year, and made chargeable on the entire personalty of deceased, so that as to that there was no intestacy: Ibid.

276. A will declared that "all the foregoing legacies are intended and declared to be for the individual estate of the said legatees, exclusive of any indebtedness to me at this date or others." Held, that this did not release legatees from any indebtedness due to testator: Baldwin v. Sheldon, 48 M. 580.

277. A devise of a farm, saying that devisee is to have it on same terms as devisor bought it on, except that he is not to pay any interest on the mortgage thereon after devisor's death, does not require him to pay interest accruing before or after such death: Enders v. Enders, 49 M. 132.

277a. A bequest to D. of a seventh part of the residuary estate, such share to be ascertained by deducting, valuing it at $6,000, certain property specifically bequeathed to D., is not ambiguous, and D.'s share is found by including $6,000 with the balance of the estate not specifically bequeathed, and dividing the total into sevenths; if one-seventh exceeds $16,000, D. takes the difference; if not, the remainder — leaving out the $6,000 — belongs to the residuary legatees: Mann v. Hyde, 71 M. — (July 11, '88).

277b. Where one of the seven parts into which the residuary estate is divided is assigned to H., Mrs. H. and their son "in equal terms to each of the three," the share of Mrs. H., she dying before testator, does not lapse, but the entire one-seventh goes to H. and the son: Ibid.

277c. A bequest to testator's sister-in-law who died before him lapsed, there being nothing in the will requiring her to be treated as a blood relation; H. S. § 5812 does not apply: Ibid.

278. A will giving to the testator's wife all his real estate, lands, tenements, etc., together with all his chattels, personal moneys, credits, etc., that shall remain after discharging his legal debts; to have and hold the same in sole possession and to enjoy the sole use and benefit thereof during the term of the legatee's natural life; provided, that any heir afterwards born shall receive out of such property or out of its proceeds or annual income all needful and proper support, maintenance and education during minority, and shall at age receive half the property, or the whole if the legatee named be dead, is held (1) to dispose of the entire estate, real and personal, without leaving any portion to be dealt with under the statute of descents or of distribution; (2) to bestow it absolutely upon the wife and expected children: Chambers v. Shaw, 52 M. 18.

279. A testator left his wife all the personal property "belonging to or used in connection with" his farm and being thereon at the time of his death, to be used by her until his youngest son came of age, it being his intention to keep it in their hands until all should die. Held, with some hesitation, that the proceeds of wheat that was in his barn when he died belonged to his residuary legatees: Kempff's Appeal, 58 M. 352.

280. A fund provided for the "support" of a person cannot be appropriated to the building or completion of a dwelling place: Morford v. Dieffenbacker, 54 M. 594.

281. A wife who had a separate estate when she was married made her husband, who was an insolvent debtor, the executor of her will, in which she provided, after making other bequests, that he should have the use of the remainder during his life-time, and that on his death it was to be divided as directed. It was to be kept invested, and no encroachment was to be made upon the principal except in emergencies. Held, that this will created a trust for the husband's benefit, and that the fund was beyond the reach of a creditor's bill against the husband: Cummings v. Corey, 58 M. 494.

282. A woman devised to her granddaughter a life interest in her estate, remainder to the issue of such devisee, but should the latter die without issue the estate was to pass in equal shares to the deviser's brothers and sisters, and if any of them should have died his share was to be equally divided between his children. The grand-daughter died without issue, but before she died the only child of a deceased brother of the deviser died, leaving a will in which he disposed of all the estate of which he should die possessed. Held, that whether this will did or did not cover his contingent chance or interest under the devise in question, such interest was determined by his death, and his will conveyed no share of the original estate: Fitzhugh v. Townsend, 59 M. 427.

283. A bequest to executors of a sufficient sum of money in trust, to be by them invested in the best government bonds to the amount of $75,000, one-third of which — $25,000 worth — shall be at once given to my said wife, . . . the remaining $50,000 worth to be held in trust," etc., requires a purchase of bonds to the face value of $75,000: Wisner v. Kleinhans, 69 M. 807.

284. A man devised certain lands to his wife, and in a further provision of his will devised the same lands to his children after the decease of his wife. Another clause devised them to his wife "during her natural life." He then disposed of "all the residue of [his] estate, real, personal and mixed, . . . to have and to hold the same to her use and benefit during her natural life, and then to be divided equally between [his children] or their heirs." Held, that after the wife's death whatever remained passed immediately to the children and not to the wife's administrator: Ireland v. Parmenter, 48 M. 631.

285. A testator, after specifying a number of legacies, bequeathed the whole of his estate to two certain persons as executors, in trust for the payment by them of debts, expenses and legacies. The trust duties related to the distribution of the estate and were not substantially different from those of executors. To one of the executors he had made a specific bequest. He also empowered them to employ a certain person as counsel. He afterward, by codicil, revoked the specific bequest to the executor and appointed in his stead the person named as counsel, adding that it was his intention to so change his will that the superseded executor should not receive any legacy or benefit whatever by virtue thereof. Held, that this revoked also his appointment as trustee, and substituted the later appointee to perform the trust duties in his place: Palmer v. Keam, 54 M. 617.

286. A man after deeding some land to one of his sons in consideration of the latter's relinquishing all claims of inheritance made a will in which his wife and another son were the only legatees specifically named. He provided that his wife should have the use of $7,000 until this son became of age, when the son was to have $2,000 of it. When the mother died the remaining $5,000 was to revert to the estate and the son was to share in it "with the rest of my heirs." Held, that this clause practically revoked the former arrangement by which the other son was excluded from any right of the inheritance, and entitled him not only to a share in the $5,000 but in any surplus for disposition: Turner's Appeal, 52 M. 398.

VIII. VALIDITY OF PROVISIONS.

(a) In general.

287. The courts will, if possible, sustain a will where there is no doubt of the testator's sanity and competency, and that it was executed without duress or undue influence: Palms v. Palms, 68 M. 855.

288. The general intent of a testator may be sustained by cutting off a void trust which is separable from valid trusts and dispositions and is not an essential part of the general scheme: Ibid.

289. A power may be created by will: Battelle v. Parks, 2 M. 581.

290. Whatever a testator might do in life he may leave trustees to do: Toms v. Williams, 41 M. 552.

291. Municipal corporations, cities and villages may take money bequests for educational purposes; a bequest to a village of money to be used in erecting a building to be used as a high school and to be suitable for that purpose, held valid: Hatheway v. Sackett, 32 M. 97.

292. A bequest to a school-district board named, and its successors, in trust to invest at interest, and expend the interest annually for purchasing and adding to a school library such books as will be suitable for people of all ages and classes in the district, and so used by them under proper rules and regulations as shall best promote the interests of education, general literature and morality, is a valid bequest: Maynard v. Woodward, 86 M. 428.

293. A devise of lands cannot be made to an unincorporated society by name: Ticknor's Estate, 18 M. 44.

294. But a bequest of money generally, and not upon permanent uses, to an unincorporated association capable of clear identity, is valid: Ibid.

295. The object of C. L. 1857, §§ 2032-2034 (repealed in 1867), concerning bequests, etc., to religious societies, etc., was the restriction and regulation of religious bodies here, within the legislative control of this state, and did not embrace foreign associations not undertaking to exercise their peculiar functions within the state as if lawfully incorporated within it: Ibid.

296. The receipt of money under a will, and the institution of legal proceedings to recover it, held not to be regarded as the exercise of corporate franchises such as were forbidden by said statute to any but domestic corporations; foreign corporations, therefore, were entitled to recover bequests made in their favor by a testator in this state: Ibid.

297. C. L. 1857, § 2032 (repealed in 1867), concerning devises, etc., to institutions "connected with" religious bodies, did not mean necessarily an organic connection by charter, but denoted any relation, organic or conventional, by which one society is linked or united to another: Allison v. Smith, 16 M. 405.

(b) Conditions.

298. Conditions are not favored when they defeat estates, and should not be subject to continuance at the option or through the misconduct or neglect of others than the beneficiaries where any other conclusion is reasonable: Calkins v. Smith's Estate, 41 M. 409.

299. A stipulation in a will for the separation of husband and wife as a condition to the enjoyment of an estate is void as against public policy: Conrad v. Long, 33 M. 78.

300. A husband devised lands to his widow to go to his children in case of her death or marriage. In ejectment by the children, claiming under devise by their father and by deed from their mother, it was held immaterial whether this limitation was valid or not; or, if valid, whether it was in the nature of a mere condition that could be forfeited only by entry of the heirs, or a conditional limitation that determined the estate and passed it over to the heirs ipso facto upon the widow's marriage. If valid and simply in the nature of a condition subsequent so that the widow could continue to hold until entry should be made for its forfeiture, her conveyance would have divested her of that right and vested it in plaintiffs as completely as entry. If in the nature of a conditional limitation, no entry was necessary, but her estate terminated and vested in her heirs immediately upon her marriage. The devise to the widow being in either case a life estate only, it was merged in the fee when it became vested in the owners of the fee subject only to their less estate. If the condition or conditional limitation was void, the widow became absolute owner of a life estate, to which only the real estate owned by the heirs was subject, and her conveyance transferred the life estate to the heirs and it merged in the fee: Ryder v. Flanders, 80 M. 336.

(c) Restraints upon alienation; perpetuities; accumulations.

301. Provisions in restraint of alienation are not to be favored: Walton v. Torrey, H. 259.

302. The provision in a will that the estate shall remain undivided until the youngest of the devisees becomes of the age of twenty-one years is not such a limitation as will inhibit any one of the devisees from conveying his interest in the premises: Ibid.

303. Where a will provided that each disposal of real estate made by it should only be for the use and benefit of the persons in whose favor it was made, his or her life lasting; that no parcel of the real estate should be sold or alienated in any manner; but after the decease of those several persons to whom shares or parcels of the estate were assigned, said shares should remain for the use and benefit of the descendants of him or her to whom a share had been assigned, their lives lasting, and so on; and in case of demise without posterity, the said share should accrue to the use and benefit of the owners being of the testator's relations or descendants, their lives lasting, of the next share or shares, and so on, as long as any posterity should exist, and in case of extinction to the next heirs,—it was held that the will, inasmuch as it sought to create an indefinite succession of life estates, and to render the property inalienable, was void as being against the policy of the law: St. Amour v. Rivard, 2 M. 294.

304. Such devise cannot be sustained as an executory devise. An executory devise directing limitations beyond the period allowed by law is void for the whole, and not merely for the excess beyond the legal period: Ibid.

305. The doctrine of approximation, generally called the cy pres doctrine, cannot be applied in support of a will of this description, there being no general intention of the testator, not conflicting with the law, which the court could sustain by sacrificing the testator's particular intention: Ibid.

306. R. S. 1838, p. 258, § 5, provided that "When lands are given by deed or will to any person for life, and after his death to his heirs in fee, or by words to that effect, the conveyance shall be construed to vest an estate for life only in such first taker, and a remainder in fee-simple in his heirs." (See H. S. § 5544.) It is not competent under this section so to construe the above devise (supra, § 303) as to give a life estate to the first takers, remainder over in fee to the second takers: Ibid.

307. Under an absolute devise directly to the devisees without condition or limitation, and conveying an absolute vested remainder in fee so that no one holds any adverse interest, a restriction upon the right of the devisees to sell their interest or estate during a period named is invalid. The question of the validity of such a restriction upon the alienation of a remainder which is subject to an intervening life estate is precisely the same as it would be in case of a devise of the absolute fee: Mandlebaum v. McDonell, 29 M. 78.

308. Whether a condition imposed upon an estate in fee against alienation to certain specified persons, or to any but certain specified persons, could be sustained, quere: Ibid.

309. The rule against perpetuities was not infringed by the devise mentioned supra, § 224; Goodell v. Hibbard, 32 M. 47.

310. The rules against perpetuities do not depend on whether the interest devised is or is not vested: Toms v. Williams, 41 M. 552.

311. The statute (H. S. §§ 5553-5554) forbids accumulations of rents and profits "for a longer period than during the minority of the persons intended to be benefited thereby." Held, that this language is not inconsistent with a provision for accumulating until the youngest of several minors becomes of age: Ibid.

312. A will devised a mixed fund of realty and personalty to certain minors, but provided that a certain sum should be annually set aside from the income arising therefrom to free the realty devised from a lease which after testatrix's death had eighteen years yet to run, and would then have to be renewed for forty years unless the appraised value of improvements placed upon it by the lessee should be paid. The rest of the net income of the property was to be held in trust for the minors until the youngest should become of age. The will was held valid, and not in violation of the statutes against perpetuities: Ibid.

313. A lease provided for its own renewal in case the appraised value of buildings erected by the lessee should not be paid at its expiration. Held, that a provision in a devise covering this and other property, real and personal, by which a certain sum was to be annually set aside from the income of the whole to constitute a sinking fund to pay for the buildings, was not in violation of the statute against accumulations: Ibid.

314. Where a will creates vested interests subject to trusts that might otherwise suspend the power of alienation beyond two lives in being, the trusts would simply be void encumbrances and the estate would be left clear: Ibid.

315. The statute forbidding the accumulation of rents and profits is simply to prevent tying up real estate for purposes of accumulation during extended periods so that its continued rental might keep the property entire and undisposed of, and build up a considerable fund in connection with a landed estate: Ibid.

316. Accumulations under a will of the income of personal property for any number of lives in being and for twenty-one years longer are not forbidden; nor are provisions restraining the alienation of personalty for such period: Ibid.

317. A will provided annuities for the testator's children, all of whom were under twelve years old at the time of his death, and it set aside certain real estate to be held "for the purpose of aiding in carrying out the trust." Otherwise it gave the executors a general power of sale. It also gives a residue to the children's children, after the death of all the children and on the majority of the youngest grandchildren, continuing the annuity of any deceased child to the children of such child until the division. Held that, as the reservation of the specified land and of the accumulations therefrom are void for any period beyond the minority of the youngest child (H. S. §§ 5553-4), the land goes to the heirs by intestacy, subject only to the accumulations so far as needed to pay the children's annuities—the rest, like the land, going to the heirs at law and not to the grandchildren: Wilson v. Odell, 58 M. 533.

318. P., whose daughter, C., was unmarried, but whose son, F., had seven children living, left by will a vast estate, largely lands, in trust, directing that one-half of the net income should be paid to F. during his life, the other half to C. during her life; that upon either's death one-half of the principal of the estate should be paid to his or her children in equal portions, but if either died without issue surviving, his or her share of the principal to be paid to the other's children upon such other's death, the entire income in the meantime to be paid to the survivor; that if any grandchild died before its father, F., or its mother, C., leaving issue, such issue should have the share of such grandchild; and that upon the death of either C. or F., the share of a minor grandchild should remain a part of the trust estate until such grandchild's majority. Held, by two of the justices, that this latter provision unduly restrained the power of alienation and was void; but the other two justices considered that the remote possibility of the death of all the son's children before his death, and marriage of the daughter and her death, leaving minor issue, suspending the power of alienation for more than two lives in being, would not render the trusts invalid during the life-time of the testator's children; and all concurred in holding that this clause, if invalid, would not defeat the rest of the will: Palms v. Palms, 68 M. 355.

319. A codicil to a will directed that the royalties and other moneys derived from the leases of mineral lands should be considered as capital of the estate and should be invested as such by the trustees under the will, the income therefrom to be paid to the testator's two children, the accumulation therefrom not to continue longer than the minority of the testator's grandchildren "now living," after which the royalties and income should be paid to the testator's children. Whether this provision was valid or not, quere: Ibid.

320. In determining whether accumulations or restraints upon alienation directed by a will are valid, the magnitude of the estate cannot be considered: Ibid.

IX. AGREEMENTS TO MAKE WILLS.

321. Although a will may be revocable, an agreement for a sufficient consideration to provide by will for any given object does not differ from any other contract: Faxon v. Faxon, 28 M. 159.

322. An agreement whereby one undertakes to compensate another, by will or otherwise, for services to be rendered for him, out of his estate after his death, is binding on the estate of such person when deceased: Sword v. Keith, 81 M. 247. See CONTRACTS, §§ 193, 194.

323. A promise that money shall be paid after the promisor's death, and out of his estate, is not a testamentary disposition of property to be governed by the statute relative to the execution of wills. (See, as to the agreement, CONTRACTS, § 206): Reithmaier v. Beckwith, 85 M. 110.

324. An oral agreement to devise property to a specified person is voidable during the testator's life-time, and is not in itself valid if it covers real estate. And where the devise is not in accordance with the agreement, a payment of money in consideration of such promise is without consideration, and the money may be recovered back by the one who made the payment or by his personal representative: De Moss v. Robinson, 46 M. 62.

325. As to agreement to compensate by will for services, and subsequent destruction of will while testator incompetent, see Leonardson v. Hulin, 64 M. 1.

X. RIGHTS, ETC., OF DEVISEES AND LEGATEES.

As to the rights and liabilities of residuary legatee and executor, particularly where he has given bond to pay debts, etc., see ESTATES OF DECEDENTS, §§ 107, 108, 174, 186-188, 258-260, 264, 374-379, 429.

326. Where a devise is made to several persons, all standing in the same relation to the devisor, they are presumably equal holders: Eberts v. Fisher, 44 M. 551.

327. Unless an intention to the contrary appears, a will operates from the testator's death and estates vest at that time: Proctor v. Robinson, 35 M. 284; Sutphen v. Ellis, 35 M. 446; Eberts v. Eberts, 42 M. 404; Rood v. Hovey, 50 M. 395; Porter v. Porter, 50 M. 456; Union Mut. Aid Assoc. v. Montgomery, 70 M. 587.

328. A posthumous child takes under its parent's will and its interest vests at the testator's death: Catholic Mut. Ben. Assoc. v. Firnane, 50 M. 82; Chambers v. Shaw, 52 M. 18.

329. A child born after testator's death is entitled to share in a fund left for the benefit of the children of a designated person: Knorr v. Millard, 57 M. 265.

330. In the absence of any act of renunciation, acceptance of an unconditional devise or bequest is presumed: Allison v. Smith, 16 M. 405, 419.

331. Where executors have a bare power to sell lands in order to pass over the proceeds to devisees whose title is absolute and vested under the will, not only may all such devisees collectively, before the power of sale is executed, elect to take the land instead of the proceeds, according to their respective interests in the latter, but each of them may ordinarily so elect as to his own share. And this even though the will forbids an election: Mandlebaum v. McDonell, 29 M. 78.

332. Where there are no creditors legatees may make such distribution as they agree to among themselves, disregarding the will: Foot v. Foote, 61 M. 181.

333. Devisees and legatees whose devises and legacies are charged by the will for payment of debts can agree among themselves as to the proportion each shall bear and how it shall be ascertained: Dennis v. Sharer, 56 M. 224.

And see CONTRACTS, § 207; EVIDENCE, § 377.

AGENCY.

Ratification: Effect: Vendor's liability. Dickinson*, 67 M. 590.

Ratification: Evidence. As tending to prove ratification or adoption by co-vendor of vendee's payments on land-contract executed on parol authority, jury in action by vendee to recover back such payments may consider, in determining whether there is a joint liability, the fact that such vendor approved the contract in writing after payments had been made, and that he joined with co-vendor in suit for balance of purchase money: Ibid.

ASSUMPSIT.

Recovery of payments: Void land-contract. A vendee in a land-contract that is void and incapable of ratification may recover in assumpsit what he has paid less benefits received from the land while in his possession under the contract, and the whole controversy may be adjusted in this common-law proceeding: Wright v. Dickinson, 67 M. 590, 590.

BILLS AND NOTES.

Corporation note: Indorsement: Extraneous evidence. Where a note is signed "Peninsular Cigar Co. [a corporation], Geo. Moebs, Sec. and Treas.," and is payable to and indorsed by "Geo. Moebs, Sec. and Treas.," the note and indorsement are the corporation's, there is no individual liability on the indorsement, and the indorsement, being unambiguous, cannot be explained by parol: Falks v. Moebs, 127 U. S. 597.

CONSTITUTIONS.

Obligation of contracts: Alteration of charter: Police regulations. A plank-road company's charter though not alterable until after thirty years is subject even during that time to reasonable and proper police regulations that may be enacted to preserve and keep from injury the lives and health of the people: Carver v. Detroit & Saline P. R. Co., 69 M. 616.

CONTRACTS.

Performance: Commissions to dealer: Province of jury. In an action by a furniture dealer for commissions orally agreed to be paid to him by a customer above wholesale or dealers' rates to be procured for him by plaintiff from wholesale dealers (see CONTRACTS, vol. I, p. 332, § 522), testimony was given to the effect that plaintiff in the customer's presence requested the head salesman of a wholesale dealer to let the customer have the goods at the prices they would be sold to plaintiff, which were the same as wholesale or dealers' rates, that the salesman said he would do so, and that he did sell. Held, that the jury was justified in finding that the furniture was furnished at dealers' rates, and that it was for the jury to determine whether the testimony — which was disputed — was true or not, and also to find from all the testimony what the agreement between the parties was: Tompkins v. Hitchcock, 69 M. 123.

CONVEYANCES.

Attestation. Conveyance by two grantors held sufficiently witnessed as to both, where signatures of witnesses as to one grantor preceded, and as to the other followed, a memorandum of interlineation: Culbertson v. Witbeck Co., 127 U. S. 326.

Acknowledgment: Certificate: Identity. If officer taking acknowledgment is satisfied as to parties' identity, court cannot inquire into evidence basing his conclusion; and it seems that his certificate stating that he is "satisfied" that the parties appearing before him "are the grantors," etc., is sufficient: Ibid.

Identity of parties: Acknowledgment out of state: Authenticating certificate. At any rate, where the conveyance so certified is of Michigan land and is executed in another state, it is shown to be valid when there is attached thereto a certificate of the proper clerk certifying to such officer's official character and to the fact that the acknowledgment was made according to the laws of such other state: Ibid.

DIVORCE.

Third parties cannot be made defendants in a divorce suit unless they have conspired with the husband to transfer property subject to complainant's claim for alimony, to third persons, with intent to defraud her out of her interest in such property held by reason of her marital rights in the same: Peck v. Uhl, 66 M. 592. See Peck v. Peck, 66 M. 536.

DRAINS.

Location: Jurisdiction: Former drain. A township drain commissioner has no jurisdiction to locate a township drain upon the line of a drain laid by the county drain commissioner, unless such first drain has been legally vacated or abandoned: Zabel v. Harshman, 68 M. 273.

Establishment: Notice: Collateral attack. Where the record of the proceedings to establish a county drain shows that no notice was given to parties interested of the application to the judge of probate for the appointment of commissioners to ascertain the necessity for such drain and to appraise the damages, such proceedings cannot be sustained if assailed by any party interested before the drain is built and the assessments therefor raised and paid over; but they are not open to collateral attack after acquiescence for fifteen years: Ibid.

Establishment: Officers de facto: Collateral attack. Where county drain commissioners assume to act as such they are at least officers de facto, even though they were supervisors when they were appointed; and their action within the scope of the authority conferred upon county drain commissioners cannot be attacked collaterally: Ibid.

Establishment: Acquiescence. A drain that was located, established and constructed under color of statute by county drain commissioners, its cost being paid by the parties assessed without objection as to any illegality or irregularity, and that has been in use and acquiesced in as a public drain for fifteen years or more, must be regarded by the township drain commissioner as a public drain, duly and legally established: Ibid.

Construction: Conditions precedent. Before a drain is constructed a release of the right of way and of damages must be obtained, or a condemnation must be had and the compensation therefor ascertained: Ibid.

EQUITY.

Jurisdiction: Amount involved. The mere fact that a foreclosure decree is for $50 too much does not give chancery jurisdiction of a bill in the nature of a bill of review attacking such decree: Sanford v. Haines, 71 M. —.

Decree: Estoppel. A complainant cannot be estopped by wrong reasons given for a correct decree in his favor in a former suit brought by himself: Zabel v. Harshman, 68 M. 273.

Bill of review: Leave to file: Laches. A petition for leave to file a bill in the nature of a bill of review will not be granted unless the court sees reason to believe that its allegations can be sustained by proof. Such a petition denied where no such reason appeared, and for laches: Day v. Cole, 65 M. 154.

Bill of review: Laches. A bill of review should be filed within the time allowed for appealing, unless grounded on newly-discovered evidence, or where there is some satisfactory reason for the delay: Sanford v. Haines, 71 M. —.

Same: Security: Verification. A bill attacking a foreclosure decree and sale, and seeking leave to redeem, is in effect a bill in the nature of a bill of review; and where it is filed after long delay, and without security, and is neither verified nor accompanied by a sworn showing, should be dismissed: Ibid.

ERROR.

What reviewable: Objections not taken below. The objection that a record offered in evidence is not certified by the register of deeds cannot be raised on error unless made upon the trial below: Culbertson v. Witbeck Co., 127 U. S. 326.

EVIDENCE.

Relevancy and materiality: Pleading in former suit. Where a vendor in a contract to sell land which was executed by his co-vendor without sufficient authority has joined with the latter in a suit against their vendee to recover the unpaid purchase money, so much of the pleadings in such suit as are necessary to show the joinder are admissible to prove a ratification of the co-vendor's doings on the contract, and as tending to establish a joint liability: Wright v. Dickinson, 67 M. 590.

Materiality: Files of former suit: Where an injunction's issue and service are material in a subsequent action at law between the same parties there is no error in admitting in such action the files of the injunction suit where there is nothing in the balance of the files harmful to the objecting party: Ibid.

Materiality: Competency. Where the controversy was whether lumbering on certain lands ceased in 1873, a witness testified that subsequently he worked upon lands the government description of which he could not give, but which he had pointed out to another witness. Held, that the latter witness, after testifying that the lands were so pointed out to him, and that he knew the descriptions, could give the same: Ibid.

Materiality: Hearsay. Where one party to an action claims that he stopped cutting timber on certain lands because served with an injunction, which claim and the fact of service the other party denies, the testimony of witnesses that they had heard of such service, offered to fix the date when the cutting was suspended, but which is unnecessary for that purpose, is inadmissible: Ibid.

Relevancy: Competency. Where the validity of a tax and of a deed based thereon is involved, it is admissible to show the payment of unlawful additional compensation to certain judges out of the tax-levy where the records show the tax was raised for the purpose of such payment: Culbertson v. Witbeck Co., 127 U. S. 326.

Competency: Record of will: Foreign probate. A record from the registry of deeds of a county in this state containing a certified copy of a will executed and probated in another state is admissible in evidence where it recites that a copy of the will and of the probate thereof duly authenticated were presented to the probate court here; that due notice of hearing was given by publication, and that said copy was duly admitted to record upon full proof: Ibid.

NEGLIGENCE.

What constitutes: Degree of care. Where the danger is to human safety the care required is such as may reasonably be regarded as enough to prevent the probability of mischief: Carver v. Detroit & Saline P. R. Co., 69 M. 616.

Contributory negligence: Reasonable care: Circumstantial evidence: Province of court and jury. Direct or conclusive evidence is not necessary to show reasonable care on plaintiff's part to avoid the injury for which he seeks to recover. If the circumstances out of which the injury arose tend to show such care, the question is for the jury, and it must be a very extraordinary case that will justify the court in taking it from them: Ibid.

PRACTICE.

Admissions on trial: Construction. Counsel making on the trial of a case an admission that is so ambiguous that the court cannot determine its meaning is entitled to the benefit of the doubt, and has a right to put his own construction upon the language used; and the question is not to be submitted to the jury: Wright v. Dickinson, 67 M. 590.

TABLE OF CASES.

Following is an alphabetical arrangement of the cases contained in this digest. It includes the decisions that have appeared or will appear in the Michigan reports down to the latter part of volume 71, together with Michigan cases decided by the federal supreme court down to 130 U. S. The table shows the volume and page of the official report of each case, and for the cases from the as yet unpublished volumes — 70 and 71 Mich.— references are made to the Northwestern Reporter, blanks being left to be filled up hereafter with the regular paging.

Entries in the table of cases are made not only by names of the moving parties — plaintiffs, complainants, relators, petitioners, etc.— but also, inverting the usual titles, by names of the defendants or respondents. Sometimes three or four entries are given for the same case, and cross-references are supplied in many instances where opinions vary as to the proper title. If the officially reported title of a case differs from what was used in digesting it before the report was published, both titles are given in the table, changes in spelling being noted unless altogether unimportant. Parties' names are spelled as the report presents them, and, in general, the titles chosen by the reporters have been followed within the limitation necessarily imposed by a convenient alphabetical system.

That which has been considered to be the regular title of each case appears in the table in bold-faced type. Under this are stated the titles and sections of the digest wherein the case is mentioned, some of the titles being abbreviated in accordance with the list found on the preceding page. The absence of such titles and sections indicates that the case, though found in the reports, contains nothing from which a proposition of law is deducible, or that it merely follows a previous case without comment or discussion.

Finally, under each case from our own state reports are given all the references to that case made by the court or a member thereof in subsequent Michigan or federal (supreme court) cases, by the volume and page where such reference occurs. Cases cited only in briefs of counsel, or in reporters' notes, are excluded. If a case has been reversed, disapproved, modified or affirmed on error or appeal, the fact is stated accordingly, but otherwise the word "cited" is usually deemed sufficient, leaving the reader to ascertain for himself, as he should do in any event, whether the case in question has been followed, approved, quoted as authority, distinguished, or merely mentioned. For these citations the official reports to and including 131 U. S. and 70 Mich. (as far as page 400), also 75 and 76 Mich., have been examined.
